NOTE.—This is the first of a series of four articles by Mr. Parker on this interesting angle. The second will appear in an early issue.

THERE perhaps is no other accessory to the film industry which of recent months has received more frank and thorough discussion than the exhibitor's campaign book, more generally known as the "press book." Fact is, there are certain members of the exhibitor field who have singled out this instrument as an object for criticism, fair and otherwise, and in some instances the arraignment has been so severe and unjust as to make the attack ludicrous.

For instance: In a recent issue of a leading trade paper a prominent first-run exhibitor of the Middle West began a signed article with this statement: "I've yet to see the press book that was of any use to me."

Not for Supermen.

All of which is very well, and probably true, for there doubtless are certain few exhibitors whose own creative genius is so great that they not only do not require, but likewise do not desire, the assistance of any instrument or individual in the presentation of his program. But, admitting his superior capabilities in that direction, let us ask how it would be possible for him to intelligently plan his campaign? In order to properly present a photoplay the exhibitor must at least have a working knowledge of the production, and what other medium of communication, other than the plan book, exists between producer and exhibitor? Without the plan book he could not even publish in his program the cast of characters and synopsis of the story, to say nothing of capitalizing all the selling angles contained in every picture. We repeat, all very well for him, but what about the other fellow?

And this brings us down to the very purpose for which the modern campaign book, as viewed by most distributors, is prepared and circulated.

Book Real Help.

These books—the better ones—we believe are probably the most valuable single accessories to the motion picture industry. Not that the press book lays claim to any special greatness; not that it is the high and mighty work of genius; not that it is entirely indispensable to any particular individual, but the complete, up-to-the-minute plan book of today is a might help to the vast majority of exhibitors whose showmanship activities are serious and progressive.

There are plan books and plan books—some good and some bad. And there are exhibitors and exhibitors. Fourteen thousand, we believe, is the estimated total, and of this number it is agreed that less than 10 per cent. of them are in the large, first-run class. Assuming that all those 10 per cent. are so resourceful and self-reliant that "they've yet to see the press book that was of any use to them," let us ask what is to be done about the remaining 90 per cent., or approximately 12,600 exhibitors who are unable to maintain the necessary and desired thought to the exploitation of a production? They are the fellows who swear by the press book and they are the ones whom these books benefit most. Also, because they operate in a relatively small way, without publicity men who may at times be "professionally jealous"—they are the ones from whom the least is heard.

Books Represent Thought.

As for the plan books' value to a certain few, that is of little consequence. But as to their usefulness, there is no doubt. Accepted and used for what they are, the campaign books certainly will aid any exhibitor in obtaining the best of results with a production.

The Selznick book, we believe—and we can speak for only the one—is as complete as it is practical to make it. This book does not contain the "exalted" thoughts of any one individual, but represents the consolidated thoughts of a corps of experienced and capable publicity men scattered throughout every section of this country. Not only that, but this staff—and particularly the home office members—are men not only familiar with photoplay construction, publicity and exploitation work, but also with the exhibitorial end of motion pictures.

These men, whose sole business it is to write publicity material of an acceptable nature, and devise exploitation plans for the succeeding production, literally "live" with each production from the day of its inception and are enabled to give weeks and months of thought to the picture where the average exhibitor would at best be able to give it days or minutes of thought. We do not profess to know all that is best in this work, but we do strive to incorporate in our book enough good material to aid the busy exhibitor, who is pressed for time, in securing the maximum of results with Selznick Pictures.

Quick Watson, the Water Jug!

Get an old street sprinkling wagon and banner it with: "Climb aboard the water wagon. Stick on till you see Bryant Washburn in 'The Six Best Cellars' at the Family Theatre." Turn it loose on the main street.

To the exhibitor first using this stunt Mr. Doob will award a quart of 12-year-old stuff, to be delivered when prohibition has been rescinded.

If It Pays to Advertise, Just Look This Over.

How the Hearst newspapers throughout the country are helping to put over "The Cinema Murder" and other Cosmopolitan productions with advertising displays and special writeups by the staff of sob sisters and critics.

Can You Say Just What Your Patrons Like?

It Isn't Your Space, Says Stolte, But What You Do with That Space

HAS artistic sentiment a place in motion picture exploitation? Or, is promotion merely a matter of bulk space, with class and attractiveness forgotten in the rush to dominate the display advertising either on billboards or in newspapers?

One answer comes from Arthur C. Stolte, manager of the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Ia., a tributary of the A. H. Blank chain of houses. If there were an organization of exhibitors pledged to elevate the standard of exploitation and bring motion picture promotion into the classification of works of art, this body would certainly have a hearty devotee in Mr. Stolte.

And it is Mr. Stolte's contention that the maximum effort of exhibitors should be to reach the newspapers. In this contention, he is supported by A. H. Blank to such an extent that in Des Moines, a town of 125,000 people, the total newspaper expense for the Des Moines theatres will average between $4,000 and $5,000 per month.

Not Space—But Idea.

"The amount of space you buy is not the big factor in advertising," says Mr. Stolte. "It is the method by which you use that space. The exhibitor who is under the impression that by brute force and the use of what I call 'flood' space he can only put over his attraction is wasting money." ....

Mr. Stolte illustrated his theory on the higher class ad work by specimens of his advertising on a number of attractions.

"Take 'A Twilight Baby'," he suggested, "Henry Lehrman's first comedy for First National—the easiest way would have been to barn-storm the community with the circus come-one-come-all stuff. We didn't do it. We had a neat cartoon drawing made and used only such word matter the wit of which justified its publication. The comedy distinctive—nothing like it ever shown before' was the way we handled this comedy."

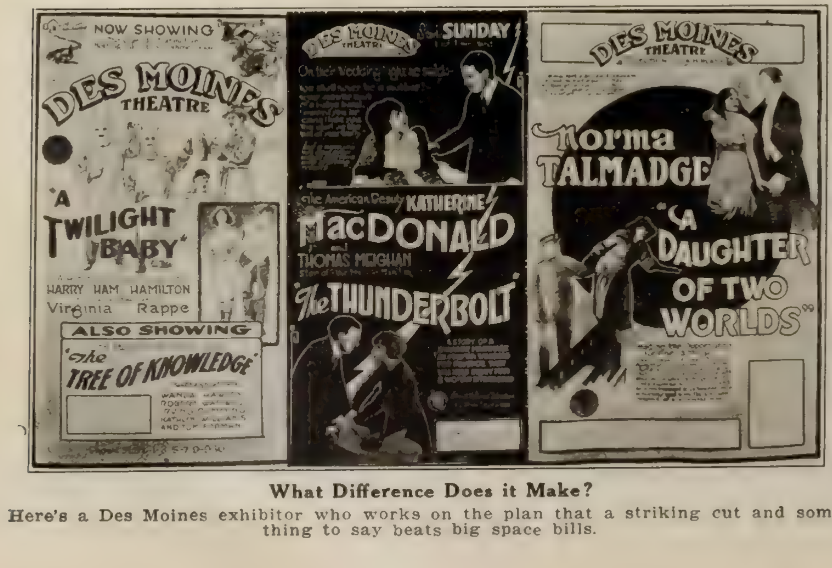
How to Handle Comedy.

As an illustration of the high class way in which a society drama may be exploited artistically, Mr. Stolte pointed out "The Thunderbolt," starring Katherine MacDonald and released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Standing out of a black background was pertinent word matter that excited curiosity and aroused interest. A flash of lighting ran through this ad which was only two columns by nine inches and yet seemed important because of its makeup.

"I have taken especial care in the preparation of ad copy for Norma and Constance Talmadge in their latest First National productions," said Mr. Stolte. "In my estimation, few pictures have lent themselves to artistic promotion like 'The Daughter of Two Worlds,' the Norma Talmadge feature. Naturally in exploiting this subject it was our effort to picture the girl in her two atmospheres. We used no type matter whatever, instructing our artist to hand letter all word matter."

Splendid effect in ad copy was obtained from "A Virtuous Vamp," starring Constance Talmadge. The hand lettered word matter was the quintessence of neatness and set within a heart suggestion was the word matter: "She vamped 'em, yes—but she didn't wanta do it."

Small photographs of the ad copy are made of the size estimated. A proof of this may in turn be retouched for highlights before engraving takes place. This careful attention to detail distinguishes the advertising matter of the Des Moines house and avoids the use of copy which looks all right in the original but which reduces poorly."



What Difference Does it Make?

Here's a Des Moines exhibitor who works on the plan that a striking cut and something to say beats big space bills.

Used Red Fire to Sell Out "The World Aflame"

RED fire was the chief promotion agent in the campaign of Hippodrome, Portland, Oregon, to put over "The World Aflame" and it worked exceptionally. Manager Ely trusts chiefly to his vaudeville bills to get his show over. His film feature is usually a poor second, but he saw the trade showing of the Pathe-Keenan subject and decided that it would pay to advertise this above the song and dance artists.

He used his litho boards for paper for the film and not only made cut-outs for his entrance, but he also placed these at half a dozen prominent street intersections.

But the red fire was the winning card. He obtained from the authorities permission to burn red fire on his roof, and the first night everyone who was out rushed downtown looking for the conflagration. When they found that it was the world and not the Hippodrome which was not aflame, a large proportion of them went in to see about it. After that the value of the surprise was gone, but the advertising was none the less strong and it played to standing room.

He made much use of the indorsement of many leading citizens, playing up most strongly the approval of the editor of the Labor Press, the labor organ, but the red fire really turned the trick and did a good job, too.

Women Stars Make Appeal This Manager Discovers

THAT women stars appeal more strongly than men to the bulk of theatregoers is the discovery made by Manager Hanson, of the Adams Theatre, Creston, Ia. Mr. Hanson, in an effort to discover his audiences, preferences, made a test recently. He displayed in the lobby eighty-eight portraits of players and offered a prize of five dollars and a season pass to the first person to name them correctly and tell some of their productions.

He argued that the contestants would recognize their favorites and from the lists he would be able to judge who had made the best impression. The first complete list was turned in just one week after the offer was made, but other complete lists came in so slowly that Mr. Hanson offered a free admission for any list turned in, however incomplete. This brought out hundreds of lists of varying amplitude.

Tabulating the returns Mr. Hanson made this discovery that few of the men were recognized. Almost everyone seemed able to identify Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Katherine MacDonald, Norma and Constance Talmadge and a host of others, but a majority of the lists seemed to stop with Charlie Chaplin and Charles Ray in identifying the other sex. This is rather surprising, as the bulk of the lists were turned in by women to whom the good looking heroes presumably make the stronger appeal, but the lists tell their own story

If You Dislike Dogs, Shun This Stunt

Here's One Clever Idea which Went Straight to the Dogs, But It Won

SOMETIMES an idea which goes wrong works better than one which goes through without a hitch. There's Ben Pflaum, for instance. Had he had the slightest idea, he wouldn't have done it, but he did and it was a lot better than he thought it was, and he started in by admitting that it was a whale of an idea.

Pflaum is the chauffeur of the Majestic, Johnson City, Tenn. Recently he booked in Charley Chaplin in "A Dog's Life." Then the Great Idea came to him. First he smiled and then the smile broadened into a chuckle and so to a big laugh. Johnson City may be getting around to "A Dog's Life" a little late and still may be a couple of years away from "Shoulder Arms," but he figured that he was going to show the big time fellows that even a small time man could put over a big stunt. The only trouble was that he did not realize at the time how big it was going to be.

What He Advertised.

His first move was to hustle over to the newspaper and put in a display advertisement which read:

WANTED
50 to 100 Dogs
We will pay cash for every dog you bring to the Majestic Theatre
Saturday Morning at 10:30 O'clock

Boys, bring your dogs, receive pay for them and then see them turned loose.

That was all he said in two fours, but it was plenty to get the entire boy population of Johnson City talking. That "see them turned loose" suggested the possibility of selling the dog and then reclaiming him, a sort of eating your cake and having it, too, which naturally appealed to boy nature. But dark doubts arose. What had gotten into Ben Pflaum that he would be willing to buy dogs and turn them loose? Somehow that did not sound plausible.

Dark Conjecture.

Then the infant mind began to look for reasons as to why Pflam should be willing to pay for a whole eight inches of space just to advertise his benevolent intentions. Someone suggested that he had been appointed dog-catcher and sought to take a quick census of unregistered pups. No kid was willing to risk his pet in the pound even if he did get paid for it, and yet—.

Along about ten o'clock the kids began to gather at a safe distance from the theatre. Each boy chaperoned from one to three dogs. Some of them were plain dog and some of infinite variety; a regular hash of pedigrees, but not a dog but was the apple of his young owner's eye, and they were taking no chances.

A last a small boy turned his dog over to a friend and approached the waiting Pflaum. Just what was the big idea? Was it some sort of a skin or did the kids really get the dogs back?

As the simpiest answer Pflaum took the lad into the theatre. There were a couple of hundred dog blankets each lettered with the house, date and attraction. All Ben wanted was to tie the blankets on the dogs and turn them loose. He offered a dime a dog.

The Ice Is Broken.

Ten cents for the loan of a dog seemed to be too good to be true. The ambassador scooted around the corner and presently all of the dogs in town were headed toward the Majestic. Every dog in town was on his way, but one was later than the others. That's what made the trouble.

Pflaum was right on the job with a pocket full of dimes and in no time at all the dogs were blanketed and ready for the grand rush, for it was explained that the dogs were all to be turned loose at the same moment. They were all to be shooed out of the lobby in a pack to pick their several ways, and each boy was at liberty to chase after and reclaim his own property.

Enter the Villain.

Then came the last dog. He was a very large dog and he was piloted by a very small boy. He was about the size of a furniture van and he looked like a cross between a mastiff and a polar bear. And it was evident that his breakfast had not agreed with him—or perhaps he had not breakfasted at all. In any event he fixed his somewhat bleary eyes upon a bulldog in the crowd and he spoke the unforgivable word in canine conversation.

The bulldog made the retort discourteuos and the big fellow waded in. His small master was not even ballast, let alone anchor, and speedily let go of the leash, wailing that his pet would be killed.

The Man Behind the Hose.

It is probable that he would have been, had Pflaum the slightest influence in the matter, but just then Ben was trying to jump on top of the box office, and he did. He does not know even yet how he did it, but there was entirely too much dog in the lobby and the box office was the handiest place. He had no wings, but somehow he got up there and sat on top and helped the boys yell.

Below him was a see of dog. Across the street was an army of small boys. The boys were yelling, the dogs were snarling and Ben was saying a few things about his bright idea. No one heard him, but he did not need an audience. He was talking for his own amusement. Every now and then a pair of scrappers would upset a lobby frame or take a bite out of a hired three sheet instead of another dog, but the big idea seemed to be to bite the handiest dog.

About the time Ben decided to rebuild the box office with a flat roof the janitor appeared on the scene with a hose and eventually he washed the howling, biting mass out of the lobby and down the street, not getting the boss any wetter than he could help. There was not a single blanket left larger than a half dollar, and no one but Pflaum and the boys and the printer ever saw them, but it was a good advertisement for all of that and it got the whole town talking.

That part is all right, but they laughed so blamed hard that Pflaum has to look at the box office report to keep smiling. That does the trick, for it worked although not according to schedule.

Swain Doubled Up His Double Decker Pages

DOUBLE Deck tied-up pages are so common as no longer to excite great comment. Now it is the ten page special supplement or nothing, but H. L. Swain, of the Saenger houses in Shreeveport, La., has found a new idea in doubling up his double deckers. He used the misspelled word "Everywoman" hook-up, recently described as used in Atlanta, but he gave it twice; once when the contest was announced and again when the winners were given. Another new angle was the make-up. There were eight spaces and each pair of spaces had inset a stock title cut, forming a strip of titles across the centre of the pages. The double decker also served to get window displays for the prizes and other windows for the display of cut-outs and one department store went this last one better and faked a series of characters with their wax display figures. This last stunt is worth making a special note of. Put it in your ideas book, if you have one. If you have no such volume, use this wrinkle as a starter.

What's That Chinaman in For?

He's there because he belongs, but the queer company in which he finds himself will make interest in the play.

Postcards and Prohibition Alike Mean Coin

Woman Exhibitor's Model Kitchen Caught Business of Women Fans

APPEALING to women with a display dear to the heart of most women was the business-getting stunt Miss Oweka Woodruff used to get business for the Southern Theatre, Bucyrus, Ohio, during the run of Marguerite Clark in "Come Out of the Kitchen."

Miss Woodruff knew that if she could get the women in the men would have to come, and she knew that every normal woman has dreams of a model kitchen whether she employs a servant or not. Model kitchen display were not new, but she knew the idea did not have to be original to pull. She arranged five window displays, but she centered her energy upon a display in a hardware store in which an entire window was given over to the housekeeping aids every woman longs for whether or not she works in her own kitchen.

It was the sort of a kitchen no woman not hopelessly blind could pass by. She simply had to stop, and whoever was with her had to stop too. Mrs. Woodruff got it started early and the hardware man had no cause to complain of lack of interest. He had put in every housekeeping convenience he could think of. Many of the objects he had had in the window before, and they had attracted some attention, but this time there was the picture of the star to serve as an attractor and the general display was better aimed at the woman by a woman. There was just that little touch of home which had been lacking in the man-built displays.

When showing time came a somewhat similar display was built on one side of the lobby; merely a gas stove, a kitchen cabinet and a few utensils, but it hooked the house up with the hardware display in the minds of the patrons and a basket of cookies—real cookies—on a table made a conquest of the kiddies. They were not interested in kitchen problems, but they were convinced that any play with such nice looking cookies must be a whopper of a picture, so they were sold on the by-product. Kitchen cabinets conveyed no suggestion to the child mind, but cookies were another matter.

With the women and children sold, Dad did not so much matter. He had to come because the vote was against him.

And a Drug Store.

There was a drug store window available, but Miss Woodruff did not fill the window with dyspepsia remedies. She built an enormous cook book, illustrated with a 22 by 28 colored picture of Miss Clark, and worked the display around that. A Paramount trademark ran where the publisher's imprint would naturally be looked for, and got over that selling point without apparent emphasis, though the trademark was not to be overlooked.

Three other windows were borrowed for this engagement, but the hardware store showing was the big clean-up, and the big point of this window was the feminine appeal of the arrangement. It looked like a kitchen and not like some mere man's assembling of cooking materials.

And it sold tickets and it sold cabinets and a couple of gas stoves and the next time Miss Woodruff wants to borrow the same windows, she will be welcomed. That's the big point. She can play a repeat because the first stunt worked.

Postcards Permanent House Advertisements

TESTING the value of postcard publicity, the Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, recently distributed two thousand postcard portraits of Katherine MacDonald, whose "The Thunderbolt" was underlined. After each performance the house and the street to the intersecting thoroughfares were examined and of the 10,000 cards less than fifty had been thrown away, from which it would appear that the postcard advertisement, if attractive, comes within one-half of the one per cent. of the hundred per cent. efficiency we hear so much about and so seldom see.

Special Pay Day Shows Kill Prohibition Sting

EVEN before wartime prohibition went into effect it was predicted that the picture theatres would profit by the dry spell and the results have more than justified this belief, but it has remained for Michigan to directly capitalize prohibition for the theatre.

C. C. Turning, of the Pastime, Walkersville, Mich., began it during the peach picking season last year. Walkersville's 350 population is increased many times during the brief fruit season and Mr. Turning made a special drive for business on pay days with a banner reading "An evening of more fun that you ever had on pay day. No headache and a full envelope the day after."

The first of these specials offered Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," and he played to 938 people in a town of 350. He followed this with other comedy offerings, varied with the Talmadge sisters, some of the Anita Stewart productions and more recently Katherine MacDonald. "Shoulder Arms" played to 1,023 admissions.

The success of the scheme has led to its adoption in the vicinity of the lumber camps and wherever labor is employed in numbers, and the idea is slowly spreading to other States. It is only a question of time when the pay-night shows will be regular features everywhere. In most instances the employers of labor offer every facility to the theatres to advertise these shows, for they realize that it brings the men in with clear heads and full strength. If you have any large labor undertakings in your town, try a pay night drive and see what you can do. Much advertising and a comedy bill are the only requirements.

Patrons Grow Weary of Same Old Scenery

Uses Morning Matinees to Promote His Attractions Through the Children

EMPLOYING the morning matinees to sell his attractions to parents through the children is a new idea used by Jack Myers, of the Grand, Williamsport, Pa. He argues that while the morning performances may give a little extra work, they bring in a large return.

The first experiment was tried lately for "A Day's Pleasure," the latest Chaplin comedy. Mr. Myers had this for Thursday to Saturday, and he took plenty of space to tell about the matinees when the kiddies could come in for five cents, the performance consisting of the Chaplin farce and four reels of comedy in addition.

Two performances were given, starting at 9:15 and 10:45 Saturday morning. This was the last day of the run, but Mr. Myers figured that the matinees would commence to work for him from the start. They did. The idea of a six reel comedy show for only five cents hit every kiddie in town. It hit not only the kiddies, but by Thursday night there was not a parent or a close relative or friend who did not also know that Chaplin in a funny new story was to be seen. At the regular performances the comedy was to be shown in connection with a five reel feature, but it was figured that an all comedy bill would appeal more strongly to the children.

How It Worked.

There were not lacking those who predicted that Mr. Myers' experiment would fail. No mother, they argued, was going to be pleased with a management which required her to get the youngsters ready for a nine o'clock show. They even declared that there would not be enough children in to pay the light bills. They lost. By nine o'clock the street in front of the theatre was packed with kiddies and after they filled the house there were enough left outside to start a collection for the second show, which was a life saver, for there was another huge house for the second showing and a juvenile riot would probably have followed an announcement that all of the children could not be cared for.

From a purely financial angle the shows were highly successful. In addition Mr. Myers had them talking for three days about the attraction. No parent could escape. Instead of one paid press agent he had hundreds of paying publicity promoters and the afternoon and night houses were all he could desire. It worked so well that he is going to use the idea whenever he has an attraction which will appeal to the youngsters.

The Campaign.

Mr. Myers believes that his space should be gauged by the value of the attraction. Instead of trusting to a feature to get itself over and using his advertising appropriation to get over the doubtful films, Mr. Myers takes the largest spaces for his biggest attractions. He argues that this pays in the confidence such a system creates. He does not believe that it pays to take large spaces in order to sting a patron. He feels that it pays better to devote himself to getting them in for the big shows. Then if they come to see the sick sisters they do not blame the house.

His opening gun for Chaplin was a five twelves. One good feature was the cast, which is reproduced for the benefit of those who have yet to play the production:

A Happy Wife Despite Her Kids and Their Father	Edna Purviance
(1) Fat Woman witha Gang-Plank Back,	By Herself
(1) Flivver with a Shimmy Motor by Pleasure Bent	By Itself
(1) Barrel of Tar That Sticks Around.	By Itself
(2) Traffic Cops Who Ran Down Clues and Heels	By Themselves
(1) Tender Young Couple of Forty Who Get Tough	By Themselves
(1) Negro Slide Trombone Player with No Sense of Humor	By Himself
(1) Boat that Puts the Curse in Excursion,	By Itself

The second day a three tens was sufficient and a still smaller space sufficed for Saturday. Saturday afternoon there was no need for an advertisement at all, for by then the children were all over town singing the praises of the story.

Almost any form of children's matinee is beneficial, but if you work it right you can make it bring you more than a full page of display.

Just to Make Excitement

RECENTLY an amateur advertising writing contest cleaned up strong for Mr. Addison. Here's another idea along the same lines. Cover your spare boards with white paper and offer a prize to the girl who does the neatest job on a three sheet, copy and execution to have equal weight. Have plenty of colored inks on hand, put a floor cloth down in the lobby and let the girls go to work some morning. Post the winning sheets in some store window. Give notice a week in advance and supply the girls with the facts from which to write their copy in advance. If your local newspaper uses a web press you can get your paper cheap by using the ends of rolls, and a single easel can be used for all the sheets. Keep the entrants in the theatre so that they may not see each other's copy, whoop it up in the papers to get a crowd on Saturday morning.

Changes Setting Each Week

CHANGING the stage picture each week as a means of making business is an exploitation stunt not possible to the average manager, but it works powerfully for the Madison and Adams theatres, Detroit, two of the Kunsky string. John H. Kunsky operates eleven theatres in Detroit, with more under consideration, and is enabled to maintain a construction staff with a paint bridge, a carpenter shop, sign letterer and all of the other requirements. He even maintains his own trucking department. Each week the Adams and Madison display a new stage setting, and these are then sent to the less important houses, for while the setting is not long visible, Mr. Kunsky knows what B. F. Keith discovered years ago, that a regular patron gets to loathe the sight of the same old scenes week after week. New settings are possible only to chain managers and dollar houses, but something can be done to give a new aspect to your old set. Try and jazz it up a little, even if all you can do is to move it around a little or add a couple of potted plants.

Of Course It Doesn't Make the Picture Any Better.

But a weekly change of scenic display certainly does help the Kunsky houses sell more tickets to Detroit patrons.

Masked Man a Hit Even When He Was Absent

Masked Man Failed, But Stunt Went Over Strong

ALTHOUGH a masked mystery man disappointed, Horwitz Brothers got over the same idea with a slide for "The Mystery of the Yellow Room." As planned the picture was to have been stopped at the end of the next to the last reel, the screen flied and a purple floor light used while a man wearing a yellow mask was to have come forward to say:

"The action of the picture has been stopped purposely. The management of this theatre, knowing that each of you is endeavoring to pick the guilty one, wishes to give you a minute or two in which to concentrate on this problem.

"Decide definitely on the criminal and then we will continue the picture—and show you that you guessed wrong. It is a hard proposition to baffle an entire audience, and to do it logically, but we think this photoplay does that.

"The audience shall be the judges. Now, before running the final reel that reveals the mystery of the Yellow Room, we request that the people witnessing it do not speak about it after they leave the theatre.

"This for the reason that we want their friends to enjoy the same puzzling doubt, the same suspense you are now experiencing. If you talk of this last reel you will spoil this enjoyment for your friends. We, therefore, earnestly request that you DO NOT TALK ABOUT THIS PICTURE AFTER LEAVING THIS THEATRE."

Through an error in booking, the masked man did not appear, but the text was put upon slides and it worked about as well, though it lacked the spectacular effect of the human speaker. And having been told not to, it was only human nature for everyone to go out and talk about the play, which was precisely what the Horwitz brothers were counting upon.

Here's the Answer

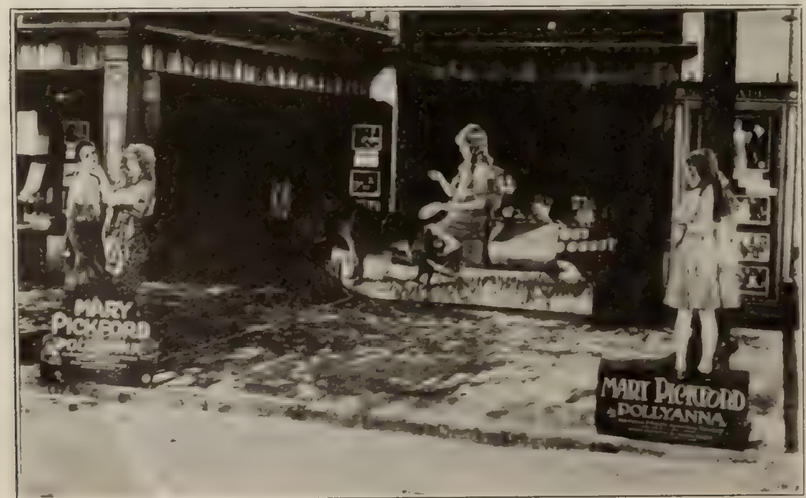
In a recent issue of this magazine was described the extensive exploitation campaign put behind "Huckleberry Finn" by the Cincinnati exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the premiere showing at the Sherman Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio. Some exhibitors, scoffing at this new-fangled exploitation, have asked: "Well, what's the result at the box-office?" Manager C. A. Smith of the Sherman Theatre reports that he played to 4,000 paid admissions in 3 days, or one-fourth of his 16,000 population. One out of four men, women and children in the town isn't bad!

Old Fashioned Readers Suit Colorado Patrons

GETTING back to the days of Lydia Pinkham and Scotch Oats Essence, the Liberty theatre, Colorado Springs, is using readers with the inconspicuous "Advt." tagged on, arguing that if they take a three tens for the sake of a two inch reader, it will be cheaper to pay for the two inch reader direct. Medicine advertisers long ago found out that a lot of people would shy away from the display advertisement who would read avidly every line of close print. The Liberty merely goes back to the old style reader advertisement, takes less space and believes that it get greater good. It does not start off in the good old style with a headline "Almost Killed Her Grandmother" and winding up with the statement that the old lady's life was saved with Jones Jinger Injection, but it makes the headline work too, a recent headline starting off "Mabel Normand stampedes the 400 with a .45," and going on to tell all about "Pinto" and what a lively play it is. Long before people get down to the betraying "Advt." they are sold on the story, believing it to be the newspaper recommendation, and they sometimes do not even notice the tag. Try it sometime even if reading notices do cost more by the line than inch space.

"Pollyanna" Posters Can Supply Good Cut-Outs

BOTH the three and 24-sheets for "Pollyanna" make excellent cut-outs as these displays from the Schade Theatre. Sandusky, prove. The 24-sheet, in particular, to exceptional advantage and can be planted in vacant lots along the traveled thoroughfares to better effect than usual. Mr. Schade makes free use of this idea for all pictures which offer the proper material and he does not confine their use to his lobby. He takes them up and down the street. For "Pollyanna" it would seem possible to reproduce this cart in actuality and use it as a perambulator with a led or driven dog.



All Aboard for the Schade!

"Pollyanna" posters make capital cutouts, and that home made express wagon will draw business right up to the box office.

Permanent Advertising Novelties Boom Semon

VITAGRAPH has started a campaign for popularizing Larry Semon by aiding the managers to play him up locally. Perhaps the most useful of a trio of novelties is a cut-out nearly ten inches high, printed in three colors and sold so cheaply that the town can be flooded with them. They show the comedian in his first release, but are not lettered with any particular title and can be used repeatedly. An easel back with a locking devise make them handy for window work and they are cheap enough to be used for souvenirs. Lapel buttons and a surprise lapel novelty complete the series. The press sheet also illustrates 24 cuts or varying sizes up to a one column and in a diversity of costuming. There are also offered a number of coarse screen and line cuts in larger than single column sizes. It is a very helpful collection of material. The use thereof should be beneficial.

To Dodge Overlong Titles

SOMETIMES it happens that the exigencies of a story require a lengthy leader, perhaps filling several frames. These are tiresome and often prove a distinct detriment to a story. In "The Vengance of Durand" such a leader occurs and N. W. Redmond, of the Lynch theatres, Atlanta, overcame the handicap by having a person costumed as the devil speak the leader while the film was broken. The costume was the same as that worn by "Durand" in the play, and Mr. Redmond made advertising capital of the fact that "The Devil Himself Speaks." In "Everywoman" the character of "Nobody" covered the jump in much the same fashion. The idea is worth remembering.

Match your show with your advertising. It does not pay to waste money getting extra crowds for a poor attraction. They will go away sore and won't be coaxed in when you have a good one. Save your splashes for your smashes.

Clears Up a Knotty Point

JOHN AUERBACH in the following letter clears up a point which has puzzled many, the editor included.

We have understood and have for years said that the further the light beam was from the center of the shutter shaft the less time it would take the blade edge to cut through it, but the degree end of things was not so clear.

Frankly, we got a bit balled up when we tackled that part of it.

Makes It Very Clear.

Mr. Auerbach's letter makes it very clear when he says that if we decrease width in inches we must decrease width in degrees.

Beyond this his letter requires no comment from us. He says:

Jarden's Theories Sound.

Thank you for sending me Mr. Jarden's interesting letter dated January 3, with diagrams enclosed. Mr. Jarden seems to be possessed of sound theories, with a faculty of expressing them clearly and logically. You must pardon me for agreeing with him, for in doing that I must disagree with you when you say that "an error is made if we assume that increasing the distance from shutter shaft to lens will allow us to decrease the number of degrees which must be added to a basic 60 degrees, if the beam is more than a pinpoint.

The theory of the relation of the circle to its diameter is a somewhat complicated one to grasp at first, but after a little study, the thing is really quite simple. It is this relation which is at the bottom of all shutter blade problems of this nature.

Putting It in a Different Light.

Let me see if I cannot put the thing before you in a little different light.

Take a long shaft and mount on it a number of shutters of different circumference (or diameter).

Revolve the shaft. For every revolution of the shaft each shutter revolves once. They are traveling at the same speed, in that 360 degrees on each shutter, passes a given point for each revolution, but in order to do this, the rate of speed in inches at the periphery of each shutter, is different. The larger the shutter, the higher the periphery speed. But the number of degrees of circumference, passing a given points per second, is the same for each shutter.. This is the thing, I think, that confuses so many.

Returning to Old Problem.

Now to return to the old problem. We have an intermittent of 5 to 1, and a light beam of 1¼ inches in diameter.

How many degrees in width must the main shutter blade be to exactly cover the beam completely during movement of intermittent?

We must have a blade of 60 degrees to start with in order to cover a pinpoint during movement of intermittent.

The larger the shutter, the greater will be the width of this 60 degrees blade in inches at the periphery ,although the number of degrees remains the same, for at this point the shutter is traveling faster than a shutter of less size, and the problem now is to cover a pinpoint for a certain length of time, that is, a certain number of degrees out of every 360. That, I think, is clear.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two to three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

When, however, we come to the second part of the problem, we have an entirely different proposition. We now have a certain distance in inches (light beam 1¼ inches in diameter) to cover over with an additional width of blade.

It Is Evident.

It is evident then that the faster the periphery of the shutter is traveling in inches, the more rapidly will this distance be covered, for we are now considering speed in inches, not speed in degrees.

Now we have already proved that the same number of degrees in each shutter passes a given point in the same time.

Consequently, if we are able to cut down time, we cut down degrees, hence the larger the shutter, or, in other words, the greater the distance from shutter shaft to lens, the less number of degrees required to cover over the light beam.

I repeat, for the sake of emphasis, that in the first part of the problem, we are confronted with the necessity of keeping a certain point covered for a certain length of time, while in the second part of the problem, we have to find out the length of time it takes for a point of the shutter circumference to get from one place to another.

I further agree with Mr. Jarden when he says "in the issue of December 13, 1919, Mr. Griffith says, if we are to cut the ray entirely before the film starts, and leave it entirely cut until the film stops, the width of the shutter blade must be the intermittent angle, plus the diameter of two light beams."

I cannot agree with this, etc., etc. I have been intending to write you about this, but felt sure Mr. Griffith made a slip, which he himself would want to correct.

What he evidently meant to say was "the intermittent angle plus the diameter of one light beam, or two halves of a light beam."

Suggests Heating Discussion

An Eastern projectionist, who prefers to remain incog, says:

I am a constant reader of our department and fully realize how much you have done to improve projection in general and the health of all the men engaged in projection by insisting on better projection room conditions, including ventilation.

I would like to suggest the possible value of a discussion ,of practical heating of the projection room. It surely would be beneficial, from the educational viewpoint, to the exhibiting end of the industry.

Seems Ridiculous.

It certainly does seem ridiculous to see dressing rooms amply supplied with hot and cold water, convenient toilet facilities and steam heat for those who have only to remain perhaps an hour, and at most not to exceed three, and then to find most or all these things conspicuous by their absence in the projection room where men must remain constantly for six, seven or eight hours.

Name for me the other skilled profession or even that trade which must labor under such conditions.

New theatres should be compelled to make conditions healthy, and at the same time decently comfortable for projectionists.

Wants Eastman to Donate Libraries.

When I read of Mr. Eastman, of Eastman Kodak Company, donating large sums for educational purposes the thought occurred: Why might not we get him to donate a library of works relative to photography and projection to all projectionist organizations in the United States and Canada.

That is a matter which would have to be taken up with Mr. Eastman personally. The principle objection might be that such organizations have no facilities for the care of such a library.

In most instances I am afraid the books would be permanently scattered among members who forgot they had them within, say, three weeks.

As to the other matter, why while your remarks as concerns the relative care for the actor and the projectionist is very well put indeed, and timely as well, I am afraid the great problem as applies to heating the projection room is really how NOT to heat it.

There may be projection rooms which are uncomfortably cold, but frankly I have never yet had one complained of in that respect. How about it, gentlemen of the light rays?

Foolish Lighting

It is remarkable how much damage is done through stupidity in motion picture theatre lighting. Not a million miles from New York is a new and really splendid motion picture theatre.

When the theatre opened its lighting was little less than a crime against common sense. In the projection room the walls and ceilings were dead white, and the projectionists had to plead to get them painted dark.

"It will look like a vault," said the management, which seemed unable to grasp the idea that it was contending for a "pretty" projection room at the expense of the projectionists eyes and the picture on the screen. They finally did consent to black on the walls, but did it under protest.

Observation Ports Too Small.

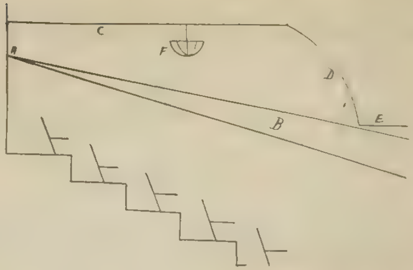
When the house opened the observation ports were nothing short of idiotic as to location. That has been remedied, but they are, under the circumstances, still too small. They should be made twice as wide as they are, and covered with plate glass set at an angle. Twenty-four inches square would be none too much.

The Crowning Insult.

But the crowning insult to ordinary intelligence is found by examination of attached diagram, in which A is the projection port, B the light ray, C the near gallery ceiling, D a curve connecting the upper with the lower, main auditorium ceiling, E the lower or main auditorium ceiling and F one of the lighting fixtures. Strung along the ceiling C are several (four, I think it is) indirect lighting fixtures which, at the time of my last visit (January 14), gave off so much light that I could sit under them and read ordinary newspaper print—in fact, I did so in the presence of the house electrician. These fixtures plaster curve D with light and that curve is painted a light color. Not only is it very difficult for the projectionist to look past that blare of light at a screen nearly a hundred feet beyond, but the light on D makes it hard on the eyes of those who patronize the upper gallery.

Gallery Lighting Necessary.

The lighting of this gallery is necessary, but there certainly is no valid reason for so much light that a newspaper can be read with comparative ease by a man wearing spectacles, and certainly common sense would demand that the curve D be painted a dark color at once. That such a color would interfere with the color scheme of the auditorium is of absolutely no importance, because it can only be seen by those few who sit at the very top of the gallery, and they will bless the act which relieved their eyes from the strain of looking past the blare of light on curve D at the picture beyond.



But even if the interference with the color scheme were really an important item it would still be well worth while because it would make the rear seats much more satisfactory. As it is, the "color scheme" of curve D is doing its best to take a club to the picture on the screen, and no amount of lowering of the illumination in fixtures F, except by extinguishing them entirely, will remove the objection. A very dark color, say a dark chocolate brown, on curve D is the answer. There is no other.

Mister Shoot-'Em-Through

I am one of the millions who watch what the projectionist puts on the screen.

In the majority of cases what we see locally is fine, except that an old Edison projector in one of our theatres tries to drown out the musician's efforts with its rattle and bang. I suppose its poor old joints ache with age.

I average three 'movies" each week, and am pretty well up on the lingo.

Have been a subscriber to the "World" for three years and read your department regularly and with much interest. Also I have the Handbook (Bible of Projection) and some actual projection experience.

What I viewed tonight led to my present agitation of the typewriter. Noticed George Walsh advertised in "The Beast" and decided to go. Am unable to determine exactly what it was I saw.

Might have been what was claimed, or it may have been a race. When I entered Walsh was dashing—no, tearing through the scene. His actions were beastly. They were inhuman. The Simplexes were surely hitting the high spots.

Not Projectionist's Fault.

It was no fault of the projectionist, as I took the trouble to learn.

He had a program to run and a certain set number of minutes in which to run it. He gave the best results he could in light and change-over and—let it go at that. There really was nothing else to do. (I do not agree. Personally I would have told the manager (?????) to go plumb to the devil. I would NOT outrage the producer and the exchange, prostitute my own professional pride and the art of the artists, whose shadow forms were at my mercy, to say nothing of aiding in perpetrating a swindle on the audience. I would have quit right then and there before I would have done any of these things.—Ed.)

The Modest Program.

The man was required to run the following three times each evening (Run is good.—Ed.): Walsh feature, Ford weekly, one-reel comedy, Mutt and Jeff cartoon, Pathe News and twenty advertising slides.

I have seen what I called some considerable speed in the Chicago loop district, but this got my goat. If I want speed I get out my own Nancy Hanks and "step on 'er," but I, in company with the rest of the box office pasteboard buyers do NOT want the programs we pay to see turned into a ridiculous cross between a shimmy dance and a foot race!

Here is one of the slides I saw: Coming next week—"Ten reels! Clara K. Young in Eyes of Youth and two-reel Harold Lloyd comedy. Two shows each evening, 7 and 9."

Quite evidently another "treat" (?) for our eyes!

A Crime.

If there is a ten minute intermission poor Clara K. will certainly move some. Allowing five minutes for the slides and ten for intermission it would be twelve reels in 105 minutes, or just a fraction under nine minutes to the reel, which, if the reels all be 1,000 feet will be 111 feet to the minute.

Such speed is nothing short of an outrage! It is a crime against the motion picture industry and all connected therewith; also it is a downright swindle on the audience.

Has Had No Help at All.

For years this department and its editor have waged unrelenting WAR on the speed demon. IN ALL THAT TIME HE HAS NOT HAD ONE PARTICLE OF ENCOURAGEMENT OR AID FROM ANY ONE EXCEPT PROJECTIONISTS. Why in Heaven's name is this? Why are we left to fight this battle alone? A bit of active help and encouragement from exchanges and producers would have worked and still will work wonders. We look for assistance in the checking of so obvious a wrong from producers. Why is it not forthcoming?

Grerson Reaches Home

Mr. R. Grerson, Engineering Department, Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Limited, London, who recently visited America (both the United States and Canada) in search of ideas which might be adapted to British practice, writes that he has arrived in England safely, full of new ideas.

He also is kind enough to express friendship for the editor of this department and approval of his work. While here he ordered twelve copies of the handbook, with intent to place one in each of the larger theatres owned by his company.

It is our hope to return friend Grerson's call in the not distant future.

Compliments Projectionist Blivens

D. J. Brown, Putnam, Connecticut, says:

I have the question booklets and the lens charts and have sent for the handbook, which has not yet arrived. By the way, what do you think of brother Joe Blivens' (New London, Conn.) work? I'll say he is a PROJECTIONIST and that his mind is on his work and not on the daily paper. My best wishes for a big future for both yourself and the department.

I am a bit hazy on names, but if Blivens is the man I have in mind (Majestic, I think the theatre is) he is all you say and then some. Wish we had more men like him. He is, or was in the last theatre out on Bank street.

He Shoots a Few

J. R. Thompson, Sharline, Ohio, relieves his mind of the following:

I will shoot a few at the department as

EQUITY

Equity Policy

EQUITY'S Policy of BIG WINNING PICTURES has earned the magnificent support of the largest and finest theatres throughout the entire country as well as the smaller houses. Exhibitors everywhere are today seeking that type of BIG WINNER that plays for one, two or three weeks in larger theatres and from two days to a week in the smaller houses. "EYES OF YOUTH" is that type of BIG PICTURE. It's amazing record of profits earned for exhibitors has made it one of the "most sought for" pictures among the big three acknowledged winners of the season. Equity is also prepared to take on pictures made by other producers for marketing, if such productions measure up to the standard set. Correspondence invited.

"Eyes of Youth"

ONLY one deduction can be made from the mass of telegrams and letters that reach the Equity offices every day on the amazing success of "EYES OF YOUTH" all over the country, and that is that "EYES OF YOUTH" is the character of BIG picture that the trade wants. Playing a week where three days was the former record, playing one, two and three weeks and then repeating where big productions formerly held out for a single week, is the wonderful record that "Eyes of Youth" is now accomplishing. It is the "sought for" picture of the season. Have you been fortunate enough to have secured your playing engagement as yet?

"Silk Husbands & Calico Wives"

IN our ad last week we dared to call a "a spade, a spade." We dared to come out and say that "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" is not as big a picture as "Eyes of Youth," yet compared to the average good picture, "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" stands "aces." We hand you a powerful box-office star in House Peters. We give you a captivating human interest story, and we give you exploitation and advertising helps that practically guarantees you success before you start. Write and we will tell you where you can book it. Special proposition to Independent exchanges on "SILK HUSBANDS AND CALICO WIVES." Write us.

Have a distance of projection of thirty-seven feet. Working distance of objective 115/16 inches.

Have one 6 and one 6.5 condenser lens. We cannot buy new lenses, so would like to know if that is as good as we can make it.

With regard to running film sixty feet per minute, why I think that is too slow. It gives a jerky motion to figures walking across the picture or sitting down or getting up from a chair. If the projectionist who has his mind on his work knows after the first show the exact place to change.

With regard to light in the projection room, personally I do not think a dark room is the right thing.

Too many things may happen which call for plenty of light and call for it quickly. Here is a remedy for glare from the light: Use it and you have the light right where you want it; also you will have light for framing the picture in the aperture.

Hang this so that it is on the left side of the upper magazine and the bottom of the can even with the bottom of the front of the magazine. It works fine—throws the light where it is needed and keeps it out of the projectionists' eyes.

By hanging it from a drop cord one may attach a small hook to the can, so that it may be swung over and fastened beside the lamphouse for re-setting carbons. If this is not worth printing you have a nice basket beside your desk.

It is nothing startling, friend Thompston, but nevertheless it might be very handy for some one.

One can never tell what idea will be just THE thing some one wants, so we welcome all of them which are not basically wrong.

As to the dark room it is easy to so arrange that all kinds of light may be turned on practically instantly. But our own experience is that four fifths of the need for light is purely imaginary—that most things can be done exactly as well with a bit of practice, in semi-darkness.

Favor Automatic Illumination.

We favor an arrangement which will automatically illuminate the lamp house interior (see page 302 of the handbook) when its door is opened; also an automatic framing light and maybe one which will light automatically when lower magazine door is opened, but open light in the room—NO.

As to your lenses I cannot tell unless I know the amperage. Lens systems are based on number of amperes used, insofar as has to do with focal length of condenser and distance from film to center of condenser.

I, too, favor a faster projection than sixty, but not for the reasons you name. My reasons are that camera speed now averages nearer seventy than sixty and that with modern brilliancy of light there is too great flicker tendency at sixty feet.

Lens Chart Information

I have the lens charts. There is one thing that I don't quite understand.

In the Moving Picture World it says "both A C and D C is covered from 25 to 60 amperes and I only find A C down to 40.

Does this mean that all other amperages marked D C apply equally to A C? I am using 50 amperes A C.

In Chart No. 2, taking my five inch E F objective for an example, is 11.6 inches the correct distance from aperture to revolving shutter, where distance from center of condenser to aperture is 17 inches?

Should Use Plano Convex.

You are using 50 amperes AC, and should use a plano convex combination. You will observe that two 6.5 lenses are right for either forty or sixty amperes AC and that no fifty ampere rating is given.

This means that two 6.5 lenses are right for anything between 40 and 50 AC and that you should locate your condenser a distance from the aperture which is proportionate to the sixty and forty distance, in other words, in your case, half way between, since fifty is half way between 40 and 60. The forty distance of 21 inches and the sixty 18.5.

The difference is 2.5 inches, half of which is 1.25 inches, hence we would locate your condenser 18.5 plus 1.25 equals 19.75 inches from aperture. Do you understand now.

As to the Other Matter.

As to the other matter, exactly the same thing applies. Your right distance would be that for a 19.75 condenser distance, which would be so close to 20 inch column that the twenty inch figure would be correct. BUT, as I recently told you in the department, always SUBTRACT one inch from all shutter location figures in chart No. 2.

Your right distance would not be 11.25, but 10.25; also the figures in chart two are not necessarily exact, though close enough for all practical purposes.

Remember this: using chart two is of no use unless you follow it up be reducing the shutter master blade to its lowest possible dimensions.

Von Schalk Again

Some time since you will remember a man named Von Schalk wrote from Boston, giving an address which proved ficticious. He writes again, this time without address (postmark on envelope is "Malden"), and on the ground that the sinner should be forgiven, we print his letter:

With regard to brother Van Allen's request for suggestions for improvement in his projection (December 20 issue) I would suggest the following: Two projectors of a more up-to-date model would help some, also have arc lens a 6.5 meniscus and the front one a 7.5 plano convex.

I presume this will not be approved by yourself or brother Griffiths, but try it out and see. Give me a good roasting if it does not deliver the goods. Front lens to aperture should be sixteen to eighteen inches. I would also suggest that if he uses rheostats, he rebuild them so that each two grids be in parallel, makin ga multiple series resistance.

Would Like Allen to Try It.

I have done this in a number of plants using motor generator converters and the like with great success. I suppose some "projectionists" who stick to lots of resistance and small amperage because it makes the arc easier to handle would not approve of this.

The above is better than cutting out when all grids are in series. Would like brother Van Allen to try it. It will help.

Astonishing Lack of Knowledge.

The writer shows an astonishing lack of knowledge of very fundamental matters, or else he fails to express his true meaning. What he proposes is exactly the lens plano convex line-up for Van Allen's amperage, except that Von Schalk proposes the use of a meniscus instead of a plano for the arc lens, which would make very little difference in the total result, so far as I can see. The full M Bi-C 6.5-8.5 set would be better, owing to focal length of objective. Von Schalk does not seem to understand that we are no longer "guessing" at these things, but know whereof we speak.

As to monkeying with the resistance in the way Von Schalk suggests, would not that be a bit tough in the rheostat, if hitched direct to the line, or if you mean the ballast resistance used in connection with the Wotten Rexolux, which Van Allen has, don't you think that the makers of that machine know better what is needed for successful and CONTINUED successful operation of the machine they designed and built than you do?

The starting or field resistance you would not, of course, presume to monkey with in that way.

My Own Advice.

My own advice to Van Allen would be to let his ballast resistance severely alone, that is unless he is looking for trouble. Whether a parallel connection of the Rexolux ballast grids would burn them up or not I could not undertake to say without the specifications of the machine before me, but it certainly would act to greatly overload both motor and generator.

Society Motion Picture Engineers

The papers committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is busier than a stand of bees in springtime. They do tell us the Montreal meeting is going to overtop anything and everything yet done, and that's traveling quite some, lem'me tell you.

Many newspapers are now using criticisms of photoplays the day after they are first seen at your theatre. Reviews written by Moving Picture World reviewers may be cut out or copied and handed to your local newspaper. They are written by qualified reviewers and deal with salient points in both story and production.

DIOGENES looking for an honest man, "super" actors looking for super parts at super salaries, thirsty citizens looking for tickets to Havana and an expectant public looking for definite action on the peace treaty have nothing on the anxiety of the writer who is looking for the reason why supposedly sane and rational exhibitors turn over the planning of a projection room to an architect who knows absolutely nothing about projection or its practical requirements.

Why does not the owner of a projected theatre make it a requirement of his agreement with the architect that the architect shall consult a competent projection engineer as to the location and general arrangement of his projection room? Wouldn't that be merely common sense? Doesn't the income of the future theatre depend largely upon the excellence of the presentation upon the screen of good pictures?

One has but to enter almost any of the great Broadway picture theatres to see the damage done by well-meaning but ill-advised architects working without the co-operation of a competent projection engineer. Speaking of one of the most modern of them all, the man who made the projection installation said to me: "Richardson, I almost cried when I saw that projection room."

Somebody should tell these architects that four-fifths of the time a little care and study on their part would result in the right location for a projection room. But that is not all. More often than not, not only is the location bad but the planning of the ports is worse and the interior arrangement makes high-class screen results impossible.

Balcony Location Not Easy.

"Your article in the issue of January 10 is timely, at least so far as I am concerned, for I am promoting a local company to erect a $200,000 theatre, though no mention of this is desired publicly as yet. The last theatre I built in 1910, and I located the projection room so high that it was necessary to tilt the screen. I have always maintained that the projection room should be located in the front of the balcony, and will be glad to know what suggestions you have in mind along that line."

The location of the projection room in the balcony is not a matter which can be finally solved by any other than a competent architect. There are problems which must be met, but I am quite sure that can be met if there is the determination so to do.

"Hiding" the Light Ray.

As I see the matter, it would be necessary to locate the room within the balcony structure itself, and in such a way that the light ray would not come within sight of the audience during its first ten feet of high concentration. Taking a typical case of a seventy-foot distance of projection and an eighteen-foot picture, this would mean that at the point the ray became visible it would be about 22 by 30 inches in area, hence it would require two openings of that size. The plan explains my idea, but if you show it to an architect he will very likely elevate his nose at a dangerous angle and declare it impossible. But don't mind the indignation. Make him show you wherein the idea is not fundamentally right and entirely possible in practice.

I do not mean the diagram to do more than show the crude idea. It is for the architect to work it out into form. It would mean the raising of the balcony vertically, as a whole, except for its under ceiling, four feet. Well, that is no killing matter is it, if by so doing we can get the projection room where we want it, and get it there without sacrificing anything at all in seating capacity or beauty? The only inconvenience would be the necessity for a bridge over the ray, as indicated in the front view, but what is that as against a level projection?

Big Vent Necessary.

Let me warn you against one thing. If this plan is worked out, be sure and provide ample vent flue area, so that in case of fire all smoke and gas will be carried away. Five hundred square inches should be enough, but the vent flue should be thoroughly insulated from all inflammable material.

I believe I have given you a practical, workable idea. The rest is up to the architect. Raising the balcony seating by four feet is decidedly better than making forever impossible the best possible result on the screen, upon which the whole investment depends.

Oh yes, one other objection is the flat ceiling below. Well, it need not be entirely flat except for the first ten feet, though it is better so, but save in exceptional cases I don't know that a flat balcony ceiling would be very seriously objectionable, especially if the back part can be sloped, as per dotted line.

"The Copperhead" Praised by Confederate Veterans

THAT the Paramount Artcraft Super-Special, "The Copperhead," is destined to achieve as big a box-office success in the Southern States as it has already demonstrated itself capable of in the North, is the conclusion of the Famous Players-Lasky executives following a recent showing of the picture before as critical a Southern audience as could be found below the Mason and Dixon Line.

The showing was held at the State Confederate Home at Austin, Texas, where a large number of veterans of the Confederacy reside. Here, naturally, was afforded a test for the Civil War play quite as severe as it possibly could be subjected to anywhere in the South.

Vigorous applause greeted many of the scenes of the picture and after the showing was over a score or more of the veterans crowded forward to offer their personal congratulations to the Famous Players-Lasky representative, who obtained written indorsements from Superintendent J. C. Loggins, of the Home; from Superintendent Thomas, of the Confederate Women's Home, a large delegation from which was also present; from Dr. W. D. Yett, Mayor of the city, and from Justice William E. Hawkins, of the Texas Supreme Court.

Arrow's Teaser Campaign on "Tex" Results in Sale of Several Rights

THE Arrow Film Corporation reports that returns on the teaser campaign inaugurated as an introduction to the series of twelve five-reel detective stories under the title of "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries" are coming in most satisfactorily. Seven state rights buyers have viewed these pictures during the past week, and in every case desired to book them.

Frank Zambreno, of the Unity Photoplays Company, Chicago, has bought the rights for Illinois and Indiana, while Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Exchange, Philadelphia, has secured Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia. The states of North and South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee have also been sold, as well as three other territories.

It is stated that the buyers are pleased over the prospects of being able to secure a series of features at one time. As one buyer said: "It does away with a lot of overhead to be able to buy a series of twelve features at one time and be able to book these same twelve features to exhibitors at one time. Think of the expense we save in salesmen's time and traveling expenses, when on one trip a salesman can book the entire twelve pictures."

Arrow is highly pleased also with the confidence in that organization shown by the buyers in taking the entire series as only three of the features have been completed. A big advertising and exploitation campaign, which includes many pages of advertising in this paper, as well as special exploitation stunts, has been planned. A press book has been completed which consists of twenty-four pages, with the cover in two colors. This book is said to contain nothing that the average exhibitor cannot use. Four pages have been devoted to exploitation stunts for live, wide-awake exhibitors.

One special stunt has been planned by the Arrow publicity department. Prominent local detective bureau heads, as well as several nationally known private detectives, have been invited to attend a special screen of these, "Tex" pictures and asked to express their views which will be utilized for the benefit of theatre owners.

Arrow announced it is planned to spend a larger amount of money in exploiting these films than has ever before been spent on a series of independent production.

Charles H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Co., is in New York, on business which concerns new production plans of the company. Expansion on an elaborate scale is planned. Mr. Christie arrived by way of Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Washington, and on the return trip will make stops at the large inland cities of the north and middle west. Upon Mr. Christie's arrival in New York, Pat Dowling, publicity director of the company, who had preceded him, resumed his tour of the Christie exchanges.

First Doro-Pioneer Film Titled "Midnight Frolics"

IN "Midnight Frolics," which is to be the name of the picture in which Marie Doro is to star under the Pioneer banner, M H. Hoffman believes his concern has one of the most remarkable dramatic productions that has been offered to the public recently.

The story deals with the midnight frolics and near-indiscretions of a young girl who finds herself the victim of prenatal impulses. The back ground of the story is laid in the white light districts of the great cities of the new and old world.

Godfrey Tearle heads a large supporting company. "Midnight Frolics" is nearly finished, and will shortly be ready for exploitation through the Pioneer chain of co-operative exchanges and on the state right market.

Marion Kohn Names Titles for His Initial Releases

THE first issues of the three series of short subjects being produced for Marion H. Kohn of San Francisco, by the National Film Corporation, will be ready about April 1. The first Grace Cunard offering, which was directed by herself is "The Gasoline Buckaroo," a two reel comedy. Cole Herbert is leading man for this former Universal star, and in this picture he performs some sensational motorcycle stunts.

The title of the first Polly Moran pictures will be "The Ragged Road to Romance" and "Dollars and Scents," written by L. V. Jefferson. They are slapstick single-reelers, and Ward Hayes is directing. Both Miss Moran and Mr. Hayes were formerly with Sennett Keystone comedies.

"Smiling Bill" Jones Featured.

One reel polite comedies will be the type in which "Smiling Bill" Jones will be featured. This series will be marketed by Mr. Kohn on a new basis. The first two, which were written by L. V. Jefferson, are "The Blow That Killed Father" and "A Doggone Shame."

It is announced that plans are being formulated whereby the National Film Corporation's publicity department will render extensive assistance to Mr. Kohn in his project to make these stars the "big three" of short subjects.

Kremer's "Carmen" Revue to Open at Kingston, N. Y.

VICTOR KREMER'S special stage presentation in connection with the Chaplin "Burlesque on Carmen" will be given its premiere at the Kingston Opera House, Kingston, N. Y., March first, for one week. Rehearsals have been going forward for several weeks under the direction of Frank Saunders, stage producer. As a background for the act, a special setting suggestive of the opera Carmen, will be used. The company consists of three principals, a tenor, baritone and comedian, and six dancing girls. The show will open with a rendition of the favorite melodies from "Carmen," followed by a travesty on the big scenes from the opera itself. The stage presentation will run for twenty minutes, followed by a screening of "A Burlesque on Carmen."

Following the engagement at Kingston, the Victor Kremer attraction will play two more theatres up state, and will then be brought to New York City.

"Trailed by Three" Did You Say? Well, Here They Are.

Mystery Is Keynote of First Jans Feature with Olive Tell as Star

THE first print of "Love Without Question" was shown to the executives of Jans Pictures, Inc., and the members of the B. A. Rolfe producing organization recently. Olive Tell, the star, and the other members of the cast as well as several prominent independent exchange men being present.

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, says: "I am immensely pleased with this production, we have one of the greatest mystery dramas yet produced, and am willing to wager that no one can solve this mystery before the last reel, if he has not previously read the book.

"Five of the principal characters come under suspicion for having murdered Silas Blackburn, and with each succeeding foot the mystery grows deeper. This is not a picture where, after having seen the first 500 feet, you know what the balance of the film will be like.

"I would like to suggest to exhibitors that they do not tell the story in full, but leave the mystery to be solved by seeing the picture, also suggest that they caution their patrons not to spoil the enjoyment for the other patrons by telling them how the mystery ends.

"Already, we have had numerous inquiries from various territorial buyers and one concern desires to buy the entire United States rights west of the Mississippi. From present prospects, entire rights to the Olive Tell series of these super productions will be closed even before the second picture is completed.

"A complete exploitation campaign is being laid out by one of the best exploitation men in the business. The story is being syndicated through the Thompson Feature Service in a number of the largest newspapers, which will daily carry a chapter of the novel, "The Abandoned Room," from which the picture has been taken.

"I think that a great deal of credit is due to Mr. B. A. Rolfe and his studio organization for the wonderful picture they have produced."

"Invisible Ray" Embodies Sir Oliver Lodge's Theory

THE plot of the serial "The Invisible Ray" being produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation is unusual and is said to be exceedingly daring. The story revolves around the discovery of a new force known as "The Invisible Ray," the secret formula is lost, and a band of crooked scientists seek to employ its wonderful powers for criminal purposes.

The wonderful powers of this ray are visualized, and it is shown as being capable of destroying all matter, and of being able to transmute the baser metals into gold. The Frohman Amusement Corporation calls attention to recent statements of Sir Oliver Lodge, the famous English scientist and authority on psychic matters regarding the earth holding a great store of pent-up energy, many times greater than the greatest force now known, and states that in "The Invisible Ray," Guy McConnell, the author, has embodied this theory.

The story contains elements of love and mystery and is said to lend itself to unusually sensational stunts, and mystifying action. The serial will be completed in about three weeks.

Many Offers Received for Sennett's New Five-Reeler

E. M. ASHER, personal representative for Mack Sennett, now in New York to arrange for the distribution of "Down on the Farm," Mack Sennett's latest five reel comedy, announces he has not completed arrangements for the distribution of this production.

He has been confined to his bed for several days with an attack of tonsilitis, and was forced to delay many negotiations under way, but says that many offers have been received from distributing companies and state right buyers.

Mr. Sennett is now busy at the studio turning out special comedy productions to comply with his new arrangement with the Associated Producers, Inc., the newly formed directors organization, but may visit New York soon, says Asher.

Mr. Asher is at present making his office headquarters at the Astor Hotel. "Down on the Farm," is a rural comedy featuring Louise Fazenda, supported by an all star cast and many famous animal actors. It is five reels, the fourth of Mach Sennett's special productions.

Coit Albertson in "Face to Face."

Coit Albertson, well-known leading man of the legitimate stage and many prominent screen productions, is seen in support of Marguerite Marsh in the Grossman Pictures, Inc., production, "Face to Face," which has just been completed. Other productions in which Mr. Albertson has appeared recently are "The Carter Case," the Oliver Films serial; "$1,000,000 Reward," the Grossman Pictures serial production and "Wits vs. Wits," another Grossman production in which he supports Miss Marsh.

Burston Back in New York Working on Fourth Serial

LOUIS BURSTON, after an absence for several months, during which he has been on the Pacific Coast producing serials, has returned to his New York office, and is now arranging to take charge of the exploitation campaign for his fourth serial which is now nearing completion. Neither the title or nature of the story has been revealed, but it is stated that it is distinctly unusual in theme.

Mr. Burston expressed himself as being pleased with the reception accorded his third serial "The Hawk's Trail," which has been sold for the following territories: North and South Carolina, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana California, Arizona, Nevada, Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Canada, also foreign rights.

Cohns to Feature Neely Edwards in Future Hall Room Boys Comedies

IN Neely Edwards, "the boy with the winning smile," Jack and Harry Cohn believe they have one of the most unique personalities on the screen today. He has already made a hit in the Hall Room Boys comedies produced and released by the Cohns, and will be featured in subsequent releases.

"The Boy With the Winning Smile."
Neely Edwards, featured in Hallroom Boys comedies produced by Jack and Harry Cohn.

Mr. Edwards has severed his connection with the vaudeville team of Flanagan and Edwards, and in the coming subjects will be supported by a company of the best comedians it is possible to obtain, say the producers. Hugh Fay, experienced in both vaudeville and film work is already under contract to support Mr. Edwards.

The Cohns announce that wherever the Hall Room Boys series has been shown, the winning smile and personality of Neely Edwards has been commented upon, and they have received numerous letters from all parts of the country praising his work.

Harry Cohn will probably remain at the Cohn studio in Hollywood for several months supervising production, in carrying out the announced plan of the company to produce a high class of wholesome and refined comedy, with distinction of story, cast and settings.

Press Book for "Kentucky Colonel."

"How to Put It Over" is the title of an exploitation manual being prepared by the National Film Corporation of America for "The Kentucky Colonel," which will be ready about March first.

This press book, according to Mr. Joe Brandt, the National's eastern representative, will be a distinct departure. Besides short press stories it will contain hints on presenting the picture, a music cue sheet, many synopses of "The Kentucky Colonel" for advertising use and many different types of sample theatre display ads and "teasers."

Price Gets Darkfeather Releases.

C. B. Price Co., Inc., has secured the state rights to more than fifteen of Princess Mona Darkfeather's short subjects of 1,000 feet each. All of these possess the thrill of historic warfare and red-blooded action. Their popularity is attested by the large demand for them, both here and abroad.

Art-O-Graf Film Company Celebrates Anniversary

THE Art-O-Graf Company, located in Colorado, has just celebrated its first anniversary, and at the annual meeting in the Denver offices the stockholders expressed satisfaction over the results attained. The features, based on books, have been produced. The first was "Miss Arizona," followed by "Wolves of the Street" and "The Desert Scorpion." The last two will be released within a short time by Arrow Film Corporation.

Edmund F. Cobb, who starred in all three productions, has renewed his contract and will appear in five features during the comink year. Mr. Cobb has been in the picture business since 1911, and played leads with Lubin, Universal, Essanay and in several of Warner's features.

National Film's "The Kentucky Colonel" Ready for Its Premier New York View

THE first of the National Film Corporation series of All-American features, Opie Read's, "The Kentucky Colonel," is ready for its premier New York showing. This production took five months to film at an outlay of over $150,000. It was directed by William A. Seiter from the screen version by L. V. Jefferson. "The Kentucky Colonel," all-artist cast, includes Joseph J. Dowling, who played the part of the healer in George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man"; Francis MacDonald, who shared high honors with Henry Walthall in "The Confession"; Elinor Field, star of "Hearts and Masks"; Lloyd Bacon, Fred Kohler, Cora Drew, Jill Woodward, Frederic Vroom, Ed. Brady, Gordon Griffith and Thelma Salter.

According to I. Bernstein, National's production manager, who is credited with being in a great measure responsible for the success of this feature, "The Kentucky Colonel" leaves nothing to be desired in its treatment of the characters of the novel.

Although the portrayal of the various roles, which are known to three generation of readers, is said to be uniformly excellent, particular stress is laid upon the exterior scenes, for which three mansions were built complete and a whole village remodeled to suit the action of the story, which is laid in Emeryville, Ky.

Besides having a multitude of plots, all bearing upon the theme of the story itself, there is plenty of comedy action in the seven reels of "The Kentucky Colonel" as well as thrills galore, according to advices from the west coast, where the picture has already been exhibited at a private showing.

"Why Let Poor Cutting Ruin a Good Production?" Says Arthur B. Reeve

THE vice-president of Supreme Pictures, Inc., Arthur B. Reeve, producing the serial "The Mystery Mind" starring J. Robert Pauline, has propounded the question as to why certain producers after making costly productions, with high salaried star, director, etc., seem not to realize that a production costing thousands of dollars can easily be ruined by turning it over to an inexperienced cutter and titler to finish off.

"That is the greatest mystery of the cinema," continued Mr. Reeve, "time, money and the labor of many, ruined by one man, who often does not read the story in continuity form, but finds that a certain number of feet must be taken out and does so, irrespective of the effect upon the story or how it may confuse the audience.

"This explains why people are continually saying: 'How did he get there?' 'Why did she do that,' etc. The picture business is a business of detail and all of this careful work should not be turned over to an indifferent workman to butcher. Pictures must be made by a process of elimination for five hundred feet are taken to get one hundred feet to use, but that hundred must be judiciously selected, and it is the idea of Supreme Pictures, Inc., to have the author work along with an expert cutter in preparing the production, and the cutter should be as familiar with the story as the author and director in order not to ruin the logical continuity."

THE "Fame and Fortune" competition photoplay, "A Dream of Fair Women," is the second picture to be released through State rights distribution by General Manager M. W. Garson, of the Foundation Film Corporation. The production is appropriately titled because of its source of inspiration.

"A Dream of Fair Women" has resulted from the effort put forth by Eugene V. Brewster topavethe w ayf o introduction of new talent to the screen. To this end competitions were conducted through a combination of "fan" magazines that awakened aspirants to screen fame from all over the country.

As a result many admittedly beautiful aspirants were given opportunity to display their talents before the camera. Producers seem to have been awakened to the advantages of producing pictures adapted from great stories rather than stories adapted to the abilities of a particular star.

Thousands of girls forwarded their pictures to the judges for consideration. Cecil B. DeMille, Maurice Tourneur, Howard Chandler Christy, James Montgomery Flagg, Olga Petrova, Mary Pickford and others equally well-known found difficulty in arriving at the finals.

After much consideration twenty-five entrants were invited to come to New York at the expense of the fan magazines. All of them were given an opportunity to "make a list."

Wilfred North the Director.

Out of this number four were selected by the judges to play the leading roles in "A Dream of Fair Women." The scenario was a portrayal of Tennyson's poem of the same name. Wilfrid North was engaged to direct the picture.

In the story the four "prize beauties" portray such roles as "Idleness," "Indulgence," "Selfishness," "Unhappiness" and "Idle Love." They are supported by a competent cast.

Mr. Garson, in speaking of this release, said: "'A Dream of Fair Women' is as unique as it is beautiful. It will prove a great box office attraction because of the great amount of publicity it has received throughout the country, and the interest of the 'fan' to see the winners in the movies.

"That it lends itself to unique and valuable exploitation of innumerable varieties seems obvious. Its unusual story, its photography and its 'prize beauty' cast should insure its success as far as the showman is concerned. Add to this the publicity it will receive in magazines that conducted the competition will make it especially appealing to the public.

Free Publicity an Asset.

"In addition to the publicity made available through those magazines we are preparing a varied advertising campaign to be directed toward both the exhibitor and his public.

"This will include teaser campaigns, directed toward the fans, illustrated post cards calling attention to the release of the picture and many other angles now in the making. State rights buyers can be assured of active cooperation from our office.

"Our advertising will not stop, as is the usual custom, as soon as we have disposed of territory. It will be continued throughout the time the picture is being exploited.

"This plan proved exceedingly popular with State rights buyers handling "The Blindness of Youth." We intend to continue doing the same thing on all our future releases."

Jose Collins Added to List of Pioneer Stars

JOSE COLLINS has been added to the list of stars to be presented in pictures by the Pioneer during the spring season. She will be supported by Godfrey Tearle in a drama of high society in the capitals of two continents.

Miss Collins' picture together with Emily Stevens in "The Place of Honeymoons," Marie Doro in "Midnight Frolics," and Mary Anderson will be given a nation-wide publicity campaign to reach both exhibitor and public.

Mary Anderson's picture, "Bubbles," is now receiving its finishing touches and will be the first of the trio. It will be followed by the Marie Doro and later by the Jose Collins picture.

Emily Stevens and Montague Love picture, "The Place of Honeymoons," will shortly be ready and will be exploited not only through the medium of the trade press but through several of the big periodicals.

Pioneer looks forward to the biggest season in its history.

"Screen Snap Shots" Show Sidelights on Film Folk

WHAT color is Enid Bennett's hair? Her eyes? "Screen Snap Shots," the intimate and refreshing chronicle of unconventional and interesting happenings in studioland, a new series to be distributed by Jack Cohn, will answer these questions in a novel and interesting manner. The date of the first release will be announced soon by Jack Cohn.

Mona Darkfeather.

"Screen Snap Shots" will also show how a well-known tragedienne puts in the time between scenes. When Louis Lewyn, producer of the series, visited the set where Nazimova was at work, he found her tripping the light fantastic, and her best friends declared she "often danced to light music between heavy scenes." And that was just the way Lewyn caught her for "Screen Snap Shots."

Other stars who will be introduced in unconventional and entirely human poses are Alice Lake, Bert Lytell, J. Warren Kerrington, Viola Dana, Charles Ray, Mildred Harris Chaplin; Howard Hickman and Bessie Barriscale.

One of the early releases will contain a section in which famous screen stars demonstrate, to those of the public who need such instruction, just how kisses of various types or transacted. Another section will show how the Griffith settings for "Intolerance" are being torn down to salvage the lumber.

Grossman Moves Company to Studio in New York

HARRY GROSSMAN, President of Grossman Pictures, Inc., has given up the studio at Ithaca and secured one in New York City where he will continue the production of a series of eight feature pictures. The company began production in Ithaca last August where it made the serial "$1,000,000 Reward," featuring Lillian Walker, and two features, "Wits vs. Wits" and "Face to Face," starring Marguerite Marsh. The serial was disposed of by states rights and the first feature, "Wits vs. Wits," was sold to Hallmark Pictures.

"Face to Face," the second feature, has just been completed and will soon be given a trade showing.

Mr. Grossman has announced it as his intention to make the best pictures possible. He recently returned from an extended trip, during which arrangements were completed for the distribution of the serial "$1,000,000 Reward" in the previously unsold territory. It is reported that the production is a distinct success and that the bookings have been unusually heavy.

Several Sales of Rights Reported on "Confession"

JOE BRANDT just received a telegram from Geo. H. Davis that Zick Abrams of San Francisco bought the rights for Illinois and Indiana for "The Confession," also rights for Cuba and Mexico. Selene and Doyehert bought the rights for Colorado, Utah and New Mexico. He has also sold "The Confession" for North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama to Savini Films, Inc. Mr. Savini has made arrangements for a premier in Atlanta and reports bookings from some of the biggest theatres in these states. George H. Davis announces he has closed with Gus Metzger, of the Equity Pictures Corporation of Portland, Oregon, for "The Confession" for Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho and Alaska. First National Exchange of New York secured the rights on this picture for Greater New York, Long Island and Westchester County.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Tears Aid Precipitation in Los Angeles—Nat Naps on Slat—Eddy Polo

By Giebler

FILMLAND is full of wetness. The long-looked for rains have started at last. We are terribly behind in our precipitation this year. According to schedule we are due to get fifteen inches of rain each season. So far we have had less than five, and the season is almost gone. If old J. Pluvius delivers all the water our contract calls for, things are going to be pretty moist for the next five or six weeks.

Stars, would-be stars, movie magnates and others contemplating a trip to the coast are warned to bring their raincoats, goloshes, umbrellas and other wet weather things along. They had also better bring a cot with side curtains that can be set up in a hotel lobby along with them, if they do not want to sleep in the park. The Alexandria, Van Nuys, Lankershim, Angeles, Rosslyn, Stowell—all of our big taverns are playing to capacity and booked solid for weeks ahead, and the little dumps are putting on airs and putting up the prices.

Los Angeles Bows to Frisco.

Nat Bregstein, Moving Picture World special representative, who landed in town Sunday, spent his first night on the right-hand slat of a single bed. The tourist season, as well as politics, makes strange bedfellows.

We are worried, nervous and obfuscated (yes, there is such an animal; look it up if you don't believe it) about our population. Some of our citizens have been doing a little bragging now and then about L. A. having more pep than San Francisco, and we confidently expected that when the census was taken it would show that we had the fogridden town to the north skinned to the tune of about two hundred thousand souls.

But, alas, the advance dope so far makes things just the other way about. Frisco, it seems, has it on us! Of course they haven't counted us all. Why, way along before they started taking the census, a chap out here with a dome for data who was figuring on the advance population possibilities, discovered that there were as many actors as real estate dealers in town, and since every adult citizen of either sex in our fair city is a real estater, that easily gives us more than a million people.

Refining the Industry.

The wave of culture that struck the industry a few months ago has reached this department. I stood by in unconcern when the cameramen became cinematographers. I did not get excited when the property boys went through the metamorphosis that changed them into technical directors. I saw the stenographers become secretaries without any feeling of hysteria. I was calm when the press agents ignored Noah Webster's definition of the word "publicist" and adopted it as their moniker. But Culture has caught me at last.

Bryant Washburn made a speech before the Ad Men's Club not long ago wherein he said that the word "movie" was never uttered in the precincts of a modern studio. That settles it!

How's Senor Pescuezo de Caucho?

I am going to get a nice "tony" name for myself. I've got part of it already. I know how to spell it, and hope to be able to pronounce it in a few days. It is Caoutchouc. That's the elite name for Rubber, and now if some kind reader will kick in with a high-brow name for "neck," I'll be right in the swim with the other refined ones.

Sometimes I have to seek far afield for fodder for this department, and sometimes interesting things drop right into the office. One of them dropped in this week. It was Charlot.

Who is Charlot? That shows you have not been to a bull fight lately. Charlot is a slapstick bull killer, and in Portugal, Spain, and all of the Spanish speaking countries where the gentle art of bull fighting is regarded as a pastime, he is a great hit.

A Bear with the Bulls.

Charlot goes into the bull ring in a comedy make-up and puts as many bulls out of business as the regular toreadors, and he doesn't kid the bulls to death, either; he slays them with the sword, the snickersnee, or whatever it is that bull fighters use; and as he has to create comedy situations with the bulls, he naturally takes about twice as many chances as the regular performers. That's the reason the bull fight audiences are strong for him.

Charlot is small, polite, deprecating, and the last man in the world that you would take to be a dare-devil. But he's all of that, and he's got photographs, press notices and letters by the dozen to prove it. Charlot, or Senor Enrique Molina, to give him his regular name, has been touring South America, and Central America, and making personal appearances in the theatres where films made from his exploits are shown.

Four Letters for Four Figures.

I went out to Universal City one day this week and called on Eddy Polo. Did you get the "Eddy?" That's the way he spells it now, and by so doing he marks himself as a most modest hombre.

Eddy has just signed up a new four-year contract with a four figure salary with Universal. Most any other actor would have added a few letters to his name after that. No one would have blamed the former Eddie for blossoming out into Edouard, or at least Edward, under the circumstances. But instead of that he takes the axe to his cognomen and chops it down. I suppose if Carl Laemmle gives him another raise he'll call himself Ed and spell it will a small e.

In addition to being modest and unassuming, Eddy is as friendy as a basket of chips, a very entertaining person to talk to, and on top of that he plays the saxophone. How well, I don't know—for just after I had got through talking as though I didn't regard playing the saxophone as more than a harmless eccentricity, and he was in the notion of tearing off a few tunes, Thelma Percy, who is his leading lady in "The Vanishing Dagger" serial, came along and said the rushes were ready to be looked at, and we all went down to the projection room and gave them the once over.

Attending the "Rushes."

Did you ever look at "rushes?" It is great sport, especially if it is serial stuff that is being run.

You go into a little room, about big enough to whip a cat in; the screen is about as big as a foursome poker table, and the operator is so near that he can stick his head out of his coop and be part of the audience and help make funny cracks about the stuff on the screen.

The hero and heroine and the head villain and two or three of the assistant "dirty devils" sit there in the greatest peace and amity, and watch themselves commit murder, mayhem, manslaughter and assault and battery, and every kind of physical violence that a scenario writer with a hectic imagination can contrive upon one another.

Proficiently Perforating Eddy.

The first stuff we looked at showed Eddy coming down an alley; he reached an automobile at the curb; a tough guy hopped out of a doorway and shot him. The next scene showed Eddy coming down an alley; he reached an automobile at the curb; a tough guy hopped out of a doorway and shot him. The next scene showed Eddy coming down an alley; he reached an automobile at the curb; a tough guy hopped out of a doorway and shot him. The next scene showed Eddy—well, the same thing for a dozen times.

Thelma Percy sat through it all in unemotional silence. She saw herself kidnapped about half a dozen times and didn't seem to get a thrill out of it. I wonder if the players get any fun out of going to the movies; I guess it's like a writer reading his own stuff.

We looked at a lot of rushes. There must have been parts of two or three episodes of "The Vanishing Dagger," and it was all good. The serial is going to be a whizz when it is finished.

Eddy fought a bunch of roughnecks on a stairway, whipped 'em all, then got dumped through a trap door into a cellar full of water, and he was wading around trying to get out and go to the rescue of Thelma Percy, who had been tied up in a rug and taken away in an airplane by a lot of dirty devils, when I left.

It all looked pretty good to me, but Eddy said the next to the last was the best, and he would use it. Some of the stuff did not suit Eddy at all, and he said it would have to be made over, and one of these scenes showed him being thrown down a stairway. I wonder if the people who get their thrills in serials know how hard the players work for their benefit?

A Justifiable Sigh of Relief.

They showed one scene where Eddy took the part of a kite-tail for a seaplane and got dragged and bumped all over the bosom of the Pacific Ocean dangling at the end of a long rope.

It was great stuff, and I heard Eddy heave a sigh of relief.

"I swallowed about two barrels of salt water in that scene," he said.

No wonder he was relieved to see that the thrill and the punch of the stuff was all there and the scene needed no retaking.

Equity General Manager Reviews Accomplishments of Six Months

JOSEPH SCHNITZER, general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, in a resume of the activities of the first six months of that concern's existence, gives an accounting that is both unusual to read and remarkable for its clarity.

Equity Pictures, which was launched for the specific purpose of producing and distributing the creations in which Clara Kimball Young appeared, succeeded within five weeks of its incorporation in disposing of its first year's output to the foremost independent exchanges throughout the United States and most foreign countries. The first issue, Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth," proved to be all that was announced in advance, and since its release has proven one of the most potent box-office attractions yet distributed and continues to inspire records in hundreds of cities.

The second issue will be "The Forbidden Woman," in which Miss Young will be seen in an even more elaborate enterprise than any previous film in which she has appeared and which has been chosen by the directors of the huge Capitol Theatre, New York, as the first feature under the new policy in which films are to be the chief attraction at that house.

Its Franchise Holders.

As to its policy, Equity points to its franchise holders.

Samuel Zierler, of Commonwealth, controls New York State. Mr. Zierler was formerly in charge of Universal's New York branch and gave his position up to establish the new exchange.

The First National Exhibitors Circuit, Pittsburgh, under the management of Joseph Skirboll, controls Western Pennsylvania; Benjamin Amsterdam, of Equity Productions Company, Philadelphia, controls Eastern Pennsylvania, and Herman Jans controls the rights in New Jersey.

Edward Golden, Boston, handles New England, while the Criterion Film Exchange, Atlanta, and the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans, controls the South, save Virginia, which is under control of Truart Pictures, a new concern formed to handle Equity products.

Equity Pictures of Michigan, another exchange concern inspired by Equity and in charge of William Haynes and Herbert Weil, distributes throughout Michigan, with H. B. Hadfield, of the Wisconsin Film Company, which handled "The Birth of a Nation," handling Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and Brockell and Elliott, under the firm name of Greater Stars Productions, Inc., in control in Illinois and Indiana.

Holders of Foreign Rights.

Paul Gusdanovic handles the Ohio distribution and Col. Fred Levy and Lee Goldberg distribute throughout Kentucky and Tennessee.

T. E. Larson recently incorporated Peacock Productions, Inc., and launched "Eyes of Youth" in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas and Missouri. Equity Pictures of California controls that state as well as Arizona and Nevada.

Gut Metzger, one of the pioneers of the Northwest, controls Oregon and Washington, with Lichtenstein Brothers in charge in the mountain states. Jules and J. Jay Allen handle Canada, and Film Booking Offices of London has secured the British rights.

The foremost paper in South America, La Prensa, has entered the film renting business and has purchased the entire Equity product for Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay. The South African Film Trust procured "Eyes of Youth" for both South Africa and British India, and Universal, through its foreign branch, bought Cuba and the West Indies.

Plans for the Future.

All in all, there has been no greater sales achievement than that consummated by Equity, and the very fact that it has disposed of the entire country for its entire manufacture, and most of the world, speaks highly of the confidence the big buyers have in Clara Kimball Young's vitality as a star.

The special features constructed for Equity by Harry Garson have shown House Peters in "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" and Conway Tearle in "Michael and His Lost Angel," both of which, in all likelihood, will go through the regular Equity distribution channels.

Miss Young is working on "The Soul of Rafael" and then in another big stage success, after which the second series of four films will be named and exploited.

The personnel of Equity consists of well-known film figures in charge of each department. Harry Reichenbach is in charge of all branches of exploitation and advertising, with Nat Rothstein advertising manager. Harry Garson is production manager and Herbert K. Somborn, president of Equity, is located at the studio in a "suggestatorial" capacity.

Four Clara Kimball Young's and several specials will constitute the entire output the first year, with another very prominent and successful star to start early during the coming summer in a four series.

Making "Inferior Sex" Prints.

The negative of "The Inferior Sex," Mildred Harris Chaplin's first Mayer-made First National Attraction, is now in Chicago, where prints are being made at Rothackers for the release date, March 2.

In the past it has been Mr. Mayer's policy to send a sample print of his productions to New York, where it was subject to such changes in titling and assembling as his eastern organization might suggest. With his present facilities in his new Los Angeles studios this procedure is no longer necessary, as everything up to the final assembling of the picture can be done there.

Lasky Off to the Coast.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, left February 14 for California for his mid-winter visit to the Lasky studio.

Death of Merle Smith, Kleine Chief, Brings Tributes from Coast to Coast

THE death of Merle E. Smith, general manager for George Kleine, for all his interests, at the Republican Club, New York, Thursday morning, February 5, created widespread sorrow and regret in film circles throughout the country. The grief over his demise was made all the more poignant to those who knew him by the fact that he had just passed his thirtieth year and because the success which he had achieved in so short a time gave rich promise of a still more brilliant future.

George Kleine and his office force have been in deep mourning ever since the sad news was flashed from New York, and the great sorrow over his loss is a golden tribute to the lovable qualities of the man. On the day of the funeral, Monday, February 9, the office was closed all day.

Mr. Kleine told the writer that during the progress of Mr. Smith's illness, numerous letters and wires were received from interested friends all the way from New York to San Francisco, and that after his death many letters of regret, with touching tributes to his high character as a man, had been received at his office. It is Mr. Kleine's intention, at a later date, to give out a personal appreciation of Mr. Smith, both as a friend and an official.

The deceased had the consolation of his wife's presence throughout his illness at the Republican Club. Mr. Kleine's secretary, Mrs. Swanson, accompanied Mrs. Smith to New York and remained with her throughout the ten trying days of the brave fight against pneumonia.

Five of the most eminent physicians in New York were engaged to care for the patient. They made a great fight for the patient, but lost.

Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Swanson and Ted Hardcastle, George Kleine's eastern manager in New York, and Mrs. Hardcastle accompanied the remains to Chicago. The funeral took place Monday, February 9, at St. Gertrude's Church (the Smith family's church), Glenwood avenue, this city, and high mass and burial were afterward held at Calvary Cemetery. Mr. Kleine and the entire office force attended the obsequies. A large gathering of Mr. Smith's friends in the trade also was present.

"A Man in Every Sense."

Ralph T. Kettering, general representative of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises, has known Mr. Smith since boyhood. They played together and each has watched the other's progress in life's battle since.

"There is one honest man less in the world" said Mr. Kettering. "It is not that he succeeded in business and climbed high on the ladder to success; but as the devoted family man, rushing from the railroad station to his little home, in the north section of Chicago, that he will be remembered by those who knew him best. His first duty was to his wife and kiddies. He has three little girls, the eldest six, the youngest two years old. He loved them dearly. His home life was an idyl, his husbandry a thing for admiration. Merle was a man in every sense of the word."

Merle E. Smith.

As a boy Mr. Smith began his theatrical career in 1906 by distributing candy in the Bush Temple Theatre, Chicago. In 1907 he was advanced to a position in the box office, and the following year became treasurer. In 1909 he became treasurer of the Garrick Theatre and was transferred the same year to the Princess, in the same capacity. There he met Mort Singer and was soon appointed manager of 'The Golden Girl," a Singer production. In the summer of 1910 he married and in the autumn he became manager of the original company of "The Rosary."

Entered Film Work in 1913.

In 1913 he was attracted to moving pictures by George Kleine's "Quo Vadis?" and applied for the position of manager. Mr. Kleine, with his customary insight and foresight, engaged him and Mr. Smith soon had charge of the management of the "Quo Vadis?" campaign throughout the entire country.

The writer cannot recall Mr. Smith in "Quo Vadis?" days, probably for the reason that his work necessitated his being out of the city most of the time; but he distinctly recalls him in the campaign on "Gloria's Romance." His work on this serial, which impressed me at the time as being a most difficult subject to handle successfully, unquestionably proved him to be a salesman of remarkable type, with reserve forces that few men possess.

In the position of district representative for George Kleine, in his system of exchanges, Mr. Smith developed a fine aptitude for the handling of men in subordinate positions and in securing the best results from each exchange. It was only a step to his securing the general management, and this was taken, under Mr. Kleine's careful direction, when the proper time came.

Always Fair and Considerate.

Mr. Smith possessed in a marked degree the fine art of submerging his official self when he came in contact with men under him. He worked with them on their own plane, learned their difficulties or mistakes and righted things by kind advice and instructions; but the official self was always asserted when the occasion called for it. In this connection, Mr. Kleine says that no man has ever held malice against Mr. Smith for any of his official acts, for the good reason that he was always fair and considerate.

The friendship of such a man is a thing to be highly prized and I am glad to be one of the many who can justly claim that privilege. While his friends deeply mourn his untimely death and their irreparable loss, they pray that his devoted wife and little ones may be comforted.

Story of Bill Stowell's Death in Belgian Congo

PLINY HORNE, the cameraman with Universal's Smithsonian African expedition, in which the late William Stowell and Dr. Armstrong were the prominent members, arrived in Chicago, Thursday afternoon, February 12, on his way from South Africa to Universal City, Los Angeles. He left that city June 23, last year, for the Belgian Congo country.

Mr. Horne gave an interesting story of the train accident in which Mr. Stowell and Dr. Armstrong lost their lives. The accident was most unexpected. It happened in the evening as the train conveying the party was making the jump from Sakania to Elizabethville, a distance over 100 miles.

The passenger car on which the party traveled was attached to the rear of a freight train, the caboose being immediately behind it and a water tank car in the rear. On coming to a hilltop the water tank car was detached and the train proceeded to the bottom of the hill, where it stopped.

Meanwhile a number of Kaffir laborers attempted to move the tank car to a siding by pushing it; but it got away from them somehow and ran down the hill with ever increasing speed, striking the caboose car with terrific force and causing it to telescope the passenger car for over one-third of its length.

Dr. Armstrong's skull was fractured and he died half an hour afterward. Poor Bill Stowell's back was broken and he suffered for thirty-six hours without medical aid. Luckily the grass hut of a Greek woodcutter was near the scene of the wreck and he was carried there. By good chance the woodcutter had a first-aid kit, and by this means the sufferings of the dying man were somewhat alleviated. Both Dr. Armstrong and he were conscious until the end came. Their remains were taken to Elizabethville, where they were buried.

President Laemmle, of Universal, will bring both bodies back to the United States. By a peculiar law, in force in the Belgian Congo, the removal of bodies from the country is forbidden until six months have elapsed from the time of burial. As the accident occurred late in November, and as it took Mr. Horne and Ed M. Thierry—a newspaper correspondent representing the N. E. A. on the expedition—two months to make the trip from Elizabethville to New York, the remains will not arrive in America for several months to come.

Mr. Stowell's body, most probably, will be brought on to Chicago for burial and maybe to Los Angeles, while Dr. Armstrong's remains will be taken direct to Hollywood.

Mrs. Rogers, of Chicago, aunt of Mr. Stowell and his only living relative, is the beneficiary of his estate which, it is understood, mainly consists of an insurance policy, taken out by Universal in his favor before he started on his adventurous trip.

Mr. Horne bears a deeply indented, vertical scar, about two inches in length, on his right temple as a reminder of the fatal accident. He was looking out of a window of the passenger car when the wild tank car strunk it. He cannot recall anything about the wreck, as he was unconscious for three days afterward. I learned from a prominent Universal official that Mr. Horne is a splendid cameraman, fearless, and possessing nerves of steel, and that he was chosen specially for the expedition because of these qualities.

He certainly impressed me as being a man of unusual type, he was so unaffectedly pleased to keep himself in the background while giving the particulars of this story.

Brownell Visits Universal City.

John C. Brownell, Universal's scenario editor, stopped over in the city for a few hours last week, on his trip from New York to Universal City, where he will make a stay of two weeks.

He will confer with Tarkington Baker, general manager of Universal City; Percy Heath, scenario editor of the west coast studios, and with the stars and directors on the policy to be adopted in forthcoming productions.

It will be the future policy of Universal to have the eastern representative of the scenario department visit the coast studios twice a year to confer with the scenario forces there, as it is believed that closer personal contact will bring better results.

Old Sturgeon Bay Being Remodeled.

Barney Hahn, owner of the Sturgeon Bay Opera House, Sturgeon Bay, Wis., will immediately remodel the present building into a modern theatre and picture house that will be a credit to the city. He built the present opera house many years ago and has owned it ever since.

Mr. Hahn states that this larger theatre has been made possible by the great increase of patronage, due to the many new industries which have been established in the city and to the building of over 300 miles of fine macadam roads in Door county, in which Sturgeon Bay is located. Over 1,500 automobiles are now owned in the county, thus enabling amusement seekers to attend shows at the Sturgeon Bay Opera House from all parts of the surrounding country.

Creswell Fills Place of J. W. Allen.

Fred F. Creswell, who only recently was appointed special representative for general sales promotion of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with headquarters in New York, has been appointed special representative of that organization in the fifth district, with headquarters in Chicago, the position left vacant by the unexpected death of John W. Allen.

Mr. Creswell's district covers Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas and the river cities of Iowa. He will have supervision of the three exchanges in this territory, namely, Chicago, Minneapolis and Indianapolis, the latter being new and just about to be opened.

Mr. Creswell's career with the organization has been marked by rapid advancement. He started as salesman in Atlanta, Ga., about four years ago, and soon became branch manager at New Orleans. But he was a Chicago boy and yearned for his home city. This led to his resignation as branch manager at New Orleans to accept the position of salesman for the organization in Indiana territory. That was about two years ago.

His ability as a salesman there was promptly recognized as he was made manager of the Chicago office of Famous Players-Lasky about a year after he left the Crescent city.

Banks Winters Off to Charlotte, N. C.

Banks Winters, for some time past in charge of publicity and exploitation in Universal's Chicago office, has recovered from a severe attack of grip and has been appointed publicity manager for Universal in the Southern district, with headquarters at Charlotte, N. C. He left for that point Sunday evening, February 15.

The best wishes of a host of friends here accompany him to his new field, where the climate will be just the thing after his sickness.

Maeterlinck Has Busy Day in Chicago.

Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet, who has been engaged by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation to write one film story a year that will net him $100,000 each, according to reports, was in the city all day Friday, February 13, making his headquarters in his private car, on a railway siding.

He was entertained and made much of by prominent people during his stay and was kept so busy that he forgot all about giving a short address at Orchestra Hall, which had been included in his rushing day's work.

Managing Director Karzas Boosts Picture, Not Star

AT least one Chicago manager is rejoicing over the fact that star-worshipping on the part of moviegoers is on the wane. Andrew Karzas, managing director of the Woodlawn, one of the most attractive picture houses on the South Side, says that this improvement in public taste is the reward which progressive theatrical firms have earned by keeping every program up to a high standard.

"Until two years ago," Mr. Karzas said, "it didn't make much difference how excellent a picture we were showing, if it didn't happen to feature a popular actress or actor—why, business was bad. Our patrons would call us up before venturing out, and ask us which star was scheduled for that particular evening. If it was a well-known favorite, all right. If not, our patrons lost interest.

"But now, it's different. We no longer have such telephone inquiries. Those we do have, consist of questions as to what the title of the photoplay is—merely a precautionary measure for not seeing the same feature twice.

"Because they have learned that we give the same detailed attention toward making each weekly program a success, they have come to regard us as reliable. Our musical programs alone assure them of enjoying high-class entertainment. And our supplementary screen attractions, such as comedies travelogues and news budgets have established a certain standard.

"I have been interested in observing this change in the attitude of movie fans toward the stars. I have found that the largest crowds do not necessarily go with the largest film personalities. Very often our business is the best when the featured performer is someone who is comparatively new to the cinema world.

"In selecting feature productions I personally pay small attention to the reputation of the star. There are so many other points to consider—more important ones, such as the nature of the story, the photography, the settings, and the acting as a whole. I think a

Special Production from New Angle Is Requirement of Child Audience

THE question of the motion picture in its application to the child mind has been receiving a great deal of attention from thoughtful citizens. It is only natural that a medium so well adapted to the conveying of influences, good or evil, should be not only sought after by those who have the best interests of the youth of our country in mind, but watched with an untiring vigilance, lest the message carried by the screen be evil rather than good.

While there is a problem ahead of the producer which these good people do not see, there is also a certain amount either of indifference or stupidity connected with the producer's handling of the question. He tries to make the shoe fit both purposes, which is only possible in a few instances. What the producer may term the "meddler" is slow to recognize the fact that the art of the motion picture has advanced to that stage where it has entered the race with the spoken drama, and that its commercial possibility lies in catering to the adult rather than the child audience. The filming of the drama often leads the producer to seek his material from among life's deepest problems, which are not always of the calibre suited for presentation to the child mind.

Make Pictures for Children.

This difficulty can only be overcome by directing a certain amount of attention to the production of films for children exclusively. As the situation stands at present, with the children's matinee idea being pursued with avidity, and special boards of review busy on the problem of culling out from among pictures, in the making of which the child mind has not been considered, there should be sufficient incentive for specializing in productions of the kind suited to the children. This would, of course, involve a producing staff whose chief study would be the psychology of the child mind. The same craftsmanship at work from a different angle is necessary to overcome the defect of the ordinary motion picture applied to the adolescent period.

Hetty Gray Baker.
Film editor for Fox; another example of women who have succeeded in the industry.

A serious effort is being made by the National Motion Picture League of 381 Fourth avenue, New York City, to stimulate an interest in the production of films for the children. They have continually at work a board of reviewers who keep watch over the film productions and list those which come nearest to meeting with the requirements of the children's matinee. They also make an effort to get in touch with the possible consumer of such films by the circulatino of literature pertaining to the subject.

Stories for Children's Pictures.

An appeal from the Kindergarten and First Grade Magazine a short time ago resulted in the receipt by Adele F. Woodward, president of the National Motion Picture League, of a list of stories recommended by kindergartners from various parts of the country for production in motion pictures. They are as follows: "Peter Pan," "Three Billy Goats Gruff," "Three Bears," "Elves and the Shoemaker," "The Little Red Hen," "The Gingerbread Boy," "Epaminondas," "Red Ridinghood," "Legend of the Christ Child," "Christmas Tide," by Elizabeth Harrison; "Twas the Night Before Christmas," "How Patty Gave Thanks," by E. Poulson; "The Search for a Good Child," from Mother Stories by Maud Lindsay. Industrials recommended are "A Modern Bakery," "The Modern Shoemaker," "The Modern Dairy," and "The Making of Cloth."

This list gives a clue to what is required; but if we will brush the cobwebs from our brains we will discover many stories as good, if not better than any suggested in the kindergartner's list. Especially for the child who has passed the infant stage the writing of stories of modern life, which may contain most of the elements of the 'grown-up' films, without their objectionable features, should be encouraged. A boy loves a stirring story of adventure, which can be written in such a manner as to inspire heroism rather than a desire to be destructive; while a girl will be wonderfully interested in a drama built around clean characters of everyday life.

Romance Has Its Appeal.

And both the boy and the girl will be ready to "eat up" an attractive romance, in which they may imagine themselves the chief actors, applying the beauty of sentiment which the story should contain, to an imaginary world of their own. Even melodrama, with all its exaggerations, can with care be applied to the child mind without harmful effects; and comedy without vulgarity is as healthful for the children as for the rest of us.

Let us hope that the producer will give a serious thought to this angle of the game, and strive to forget the market as it stood ten years ago. Since that time each tomorrow has found us farther than today along the road to bigger things. We have arrived at a period of specialties and classifications to which the industry cannot afford to close its eyes much longer.

Pathe Shows Wrestling Among Timely Subjects

ONE of the interesting subjects of the Pathe Review No. 40, released February 29, is a demonstration by George Bothner, lightweight wrestling champion, of the leg trip, the head throw, and other feats well known to wrestling enthusiasts. It appears under the title of "Keeping Your Feet Down." Following this is a Novograph analysis of the skill of the wrestler.

"In the Lake of the Four Cantons," a scenic study in Pathecolor, showing the storied territory in which William Tell helped Switzerland win her independence. The shores of the lake today are dotted with numerous hamlets and the famed chapel of William Tell stands out like a beautiful cameo. For sheer beauty there are few spots in all the world to rival Lucerne and all the exquisite tints are brought out with wonderful clearness, by means of the Pathe handcoloring process.

"Making Recipes for Strength" is presented as taken from the U. S. Bureau of Standards in Washington, D. C. Educational Films Plans for New Exchange System Progressing Rapidly

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president of the Educational Corporation of America, announces that the plans for the organization of the new system of Educational exchanges are going forward rapidly and that the end of the week is to see a good start made toward the establishment of the chain of twenty offices that will be in operation by midsummer.

Joseph Lee, whom Mr. Hammons has selected to open the new offices, has left for New Orleans, and is to make a three-weeks' tour of the exchange cities of the south and west before returning to New York. Mr. Lee is the department head directly responsible for the operation of the new offices and he is picking his men carefully, with the idea of securing the best type of exchange manager and salesmen. Future Educational subjects, now in preparation, are to have something new in the line of exploitation, and an organization is being built up to handle this novel development.

Ginsberg in Kansas City.

Harry Ginsberg, also of the Educational staff, and assistant to Mr. Hammons, is in Kansas City and St. Louis, visiting the offices in those cities, and making arrangements that will lead to the completion of the new general plan. Both Mr. Lee and Mr. Ginsberg will be engaged in the inauguration of new offices and reorganization in cities where Educational has been represented, for several months to come.

Mr. Hammons leaves Monday, February 23, for Chicago and the west, also on business connected with the distributing policy, and expects to be out of town for a week or more. The new system of exchanges, under this direction, is to be the first nation-wide chain of offices to be devoted exclusively to short subjects, and is the result of carefully laid plans which Mr. Hammons has had in preparation for months.

Animated Drawings Show Mysteries of Human Eye

AT the head of the list appears "How You See," a series of technical drawings that show the remarkable process of the eye that make sight possible. An interesting comparison is drawn between the formation of the eye and the construction of a camera. The lens, the iris, the dark box, the screen or retina and the method of obtaining focus are shown in a way that makes an intricate process clear to any layman.

Ice harvesting, under the timely title of "A Cold Proposition," is the second subject in this Pictograph. The Goldwyn-Bray cameraman visited a lake in the Northwest during the ice harvesting season and secured pictures of each step in the interesting process, from the time the ice is marked off into blocks until it is cut, drawn from the lake to elevators on the bank and finally stored away in the ice house to be kept for use the following summer.

Wallace Carlson, the cartoonist creator of "Dud's Hair Cut," reveals the sense of humor that has made his films such a strong drawing card, along with a thorough knowledge of boy nature. Much of the action transpires when Dud goes to a barber shop, and, inspired by a picture in "The Cop's Gazette," instructs the barber to give him a "pugilist's haircut." Even Dud's faithful dog, Spot, fails to recognize him when he emerges from the shop with a closely shaven head.

Prizma Shows "Aids to Cupid."

"Aids to Cupid" is the comely title of Prizma's latest release for February 16. This is a picture taken in Southern France, where for centuries famous perfumes and confections of candied rose petals have been made. Here millions of pounds of orange blossoms and roses are produced each year to be used in the production of these two subtle aids of Cupid.

Prizma brings all its charm of color to you of a land of beauty, leaving behind only the fragrance.

The creation of new perfumes is an art in itself and the making of these delicious confections is the development of a craft centuries old.

IMMEDIATELY following the start of E. Alexander Powell on his expedition into the Far East to secure pictures for the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, comes the announcement of another photographic tour under the same auspices, this time with the unexplored country between Bolivia and Brazil as its objective. Philip Tannura is in charge of the party that left for South America last week to be gone several months. Under the recent Goldwyn-Bray alliance, which means a large increase in the product of the Bray studios, cameramen are being despatched to all parts of the world for the purpose of getting scenic and travel studies of countries never before pictured on the screen.

Mr. Tannura is going far out of the beaten track on his visit to South America. In the Matto Grosso territory of Brazil and in the Paraguay Basin views will be taken of the many beautiful lakes, whereas pictures of a human interest value will be found in studies of the native Indians, the Portuguese, Italian and the Spanish settlers in this region. Some interesting subjects should develop out of pictures of the animal life of Brazil, where there are no less than fifty different species of monkeys.

Birds of Brilliant Plumage.

The birds of Brazil, noted for their brilliant plumage, also offer an inviting subject for the cameraman. They vary in size from the tiny humming bird to the rhea, or American ostrich. There are many varieties of falcons, owls and vultures, and, of course, parrots, all of which will be sought by Mr. Tannura on his travels.

From Manaos the excursion will go up the Madeira Falls to the village of St. Antonia, where navigation is cut off by the falls of the same name. At this point, the Madeira Mamore railway will be taken, going to the end of the lines in Guajara-Mirim. Here a steamer will be boarded to make the trip to the city of Matto Grosso.

In the Amazon lowlands, to be visited on this expedition, there are white herons, bitterns, blue herons, scarlet ibises and spoon bills, whereas in the highlands, among other rare birds that will be hunted by the cameraman will be the ceriema and the jacamin. During the trip up the Amazon there also will be opportunities to get interesting shots of alligators and the fresh-water turtle.

When it is considered that Matto Grosso, with an area of approximately 532,000 square miles and a population in the neighborhood of 150,000, is the largest and most sparsely populated of Brazil's twenty-one states, the opportunities for securing pictures in an unexplored country will be recognized.

Latest Ford-Goldwyn Has Silverware in Making

THE latest Ford Educational Weekly ready for immediate distribution through the Goldwyn company is "Silverware." The picture reveals the molding of the most delicate silver plated ware, and follows the skilled workers through all the processes of manufacture.

The first process consists of placing a flat plate in a machine which cuts and shapes it into a tray or plate. Another machine cuts the plate into beautiful lacy patterns which are then shaped into the fluted sides of a cake basket.

In shaping a coffee pot, the process seems almost like a return to the ancient potter at his wheel. A perfectly flat, round plate is placed on a wheel which is set whirling. With great care, the workman shapes the plate, until inch by inch, a spreading base and curving sides are visible. After a little while, a coffee pot appears in place of the flat plate. The handles and spouts are made separately and soldered on by hand.

With the shaping completed, the pot is dipped into liquid silver and the proper amount of plating put on. Then it goes to the emery machine where it is polished to mirror-like smoothness.

But for the fact that the laboratory handling the printing of the Sewell-Ford Torchy prints could not turn out the extra prints in time there would have been three of the major theatres on Broadway playing Torchy's comedy this week. Owing to the lack of prints, the only theatre that was able to get its booking was the Strand. The comedy which stars Johnny Hines in the title role went over great. Every few moments there was a laugh or a giggle from the audience.

"Solitude."

One of the most attractive series of snow scenes that has been presented in film appears under the title of "Solitude." This picture, shown at the Rialto Theatre, is a Robert Bruce scenic, released by the Educational Films Corporation of America. In the film there is visible only one man, who wanders over the mountains in search of solitude. After miles of snow-covered country have been traversed, he finally arrives at the heart of the thing that he is looking for, on the side of a mountain where there is nothing but fir trees to break the silence.

This picture abounds with beautiful silhouettes of snow-laden evergreens, One scene which stands out as a distinct novelty contains only long shadows of the trees and the man falling across the snow. The picture has been carefully assembled, and the scenes and their subtitles are in perfect unison, points which are of the greatest importance to the making of an artistic picture.

That "A Trip to the Moon" and "Hello Mars" shown in a recent Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph made from animated drawings in cooperation with some of the foremost scientific authorities, were received with more interest than anything of the kind that has been shown on the screen. These subjects presented at an opportune time, when the possibility of signaling to planets is under discussion, are sure to attract unusual attention wherever shown.

First Tarkington-Goldwyn Comedy Is "Edgar and the Teacher's Pet'

CAPTURING the spirit of boyhood for the film series of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" stories is said to have been achieved with great success by Director E. Mason Hopper at the Culver City studios of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The first film has been taken, cut and edited and given the title "Edgar and the Teacher's Pet." In this episode is also the famous moment when Edgar imagines what he would do if he was President of the United States. Johnny Jones is regarded as an ideal interpreter of Edgar.

In the comedies are the following characters who will be interpreted by the same actors throughout he first twelve reels. They are as follows: Johnny Jones as Edgar Pomeroy, Arthur H. Litke as Edgar's family doctor, Ellison Manners as Edgar's school teacher, John Cossar as Mr. Pomeroy, Virginia Madison as Mrs. Pomeroy, Kenneth Earl as Charles Pomeroy, Marie Dunn as Betty Pomeroy, Fred Moore as the Rev. Shelby, Buddy Messenger as Freddy Littlefield, Lucille Ricksen as Alice Littlefield, Nick Cogley as Mr. Littlefield, Cordelia Callahan as Mrs. Littlefield and Lucretia Harris as Iris.

Lucille Ricksen Plays the Sweetheart.

Lucille Ricksen as Alice Littlefield plays the girl with whom Edgar is madly in love, or as madly in love as a boy of 11 years can be. She has a prominent part in the second release, which is called "Edgar and Shakespeare's Hamlet." In these episodes the boys of the small town hold a dress rehearsal and stage a show that is almost funnier than anything in real life. In order to get costumes for their roles as actors, the boys ransack their parents' closets and they learn that sometimes it is easier to borrow than to return.

Hamlet's father's ghost is played by a colored boy who is said to get almost as many laughs as Iris, the colored cook. Next to his boy characters, Booth Tarkington is fond of picturing the Afro-American mind, and he makes full use of his knowledge in these two-reel comedies which he has written directly for the screen.

These News Reels Show Many Interesting Events

THE plight of the Princess Anne, stranded outside New York harbor, is pictured in International News No. 6 just released. Birds-eye glimpses of the Statue of Liberty and snow-bound New York are also shown. A novel means of snow removal proves only partly successful in New York, where flame throwers, loaned the police department by the army, are employed in Central Park.

France welcoming the Shah of Persia, troops guarding Cuban piers, Daffy News, the loading of liners in the United States and Japan, scenes of storm-wrecked Atlantic City, the American fleet at Cuba, destroying war bombs, and border troops in a preparedness review are also in this reel.

The storm-wrecked Atlantic coast is depicted in No. 6 of Hearst News. New York is shown "digging out," as is the rescue of those aboard the Princess Anne. France honoring the heroes of Zeebrugge, the Atlantic and Pacific fleets in action, scenes of the City of Babel, Pershing reviewing the border guard, "shots" of Representatives Quinn (Mass.) and Rucker (Miss.) smoking corncob pipes, the Countess of Sandwich and her daughter, and Tad's Indoor Sports round out this reel.

Some of the American ships which the United States contemplates selling to Great Britain are pictured in the Universal Current Events No. 6. There are also scenes of the racing in Cuba, Uncle Sam's tanks in an endurance test, Dame Fashion's studio on a New York beach, Armenian kiddies receiving American food, a train crash at Lemokin, Pa.; the Westminister Kennel Club show in New York, outdoor sports at Quebec, and Americans visiting the citadel of Salidan, Aleppo, Syria. "In the Public Eye" contains intimate shots of Thomas A. Edison, Ignace Jan Paderewski and Walter D. Hines.

Demaree's Plans for Franklin.

O. I. Demaree heads a new company which is planning to erect in Franklin what is promised to be "one of the finest small photoplay theatres in Indiana." Options on two sites have been secured and it is expected that the project will be put across this year. Mr. Demaree has been unusually successful as manager of the Franklin Opera House.

As planned, the new theatre will cost about $35,000. It will have a stage large enough for the presentation of stage plans and will be thoroughly modern in all its appointments. A pipe organ will probably be installed after the theatre is put into operation.

Realart to Release Service Tales Made by Director Charles Miller

CHARLES MILLER productions have been acquired by Realart. Mr. Miller is to make a series of out-of-door pictures based on the works of Robert W. Service. The news of the deal, concluded with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation by President Morris Kohn, of Realart, was announced last week. Mr. Miller is already at work near the Canadian border in New York state on his first Mayflower production, further anouncement of which will be soon forthcoming.

In concluding negotiations with Mayflower for the release of these out-of-door photoplays, President Kohn declared that Director Miller will bring to the screen a product, every detail of which, even the Robert W. Service poems themselves, will be of his own choosing.

"The new contracts entered into by Charles Miller with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, mark the approach to an ideal in the motion picture industry," said Mr. Kohn. "The creation of a picture play is the business of an artist, and with complete freedom to follow his own inspirations, unhampered by any consideration whatsoever, Mr. Miller is achieving a dream that has been the aim of a lifetime. He brings to Realart the experience of many years as a director of motion pictures, as an actor and stage manager and as a student of film technique in all its branches.

Made Many Successes.

"We all know Mr. Miller can make pictures which have big box office value. 'The Flame of the Yukon' not only proved this, but established him as the foremost interpreter of dreams of the great out-of-doors. Exhibitors will recall 'The Ghost of Yesterday,' 'By Right of Purchase' and 'The Sawdust Ring' as among other succesful Miller productions, and there are only a few titles which come to mind at the moment."

Charles Miller was 38 years old when the motion picture first appeared to him as a field to which a man of ideas and ideals could turn profitably. To learn to make photoplays Mr. Miller abandoned a salary as actor at $350 per week and as a $3-a-day super began to study at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Santa Monica, Cal.

Cameragraph Club Dinner and Party Is Big Success

THE big winter event of the Cameragraph Club, the theatre party to see "Aphrodite" and dinner after at Reisenwebers, New York, which took place Saturday night February 14, proved a great success and was well attended by members of the club. The members of the Cameragraph Club, many of them veterans of the industrial film world and charter members of the International Order of Associated Film Fans, were of the opinion that "Aphrodite" as a thriller was not in it compared with many of the good film plays that are shown nightly on the screen.

Among the members of the Cameragraph Club who were present were Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company; Alfred D. Bell, treasurer, and W. C. Smith, general manager; Theodore F. Uhlemann, president of the Cameragraph Club; Raymond Dengel, vice-president, and Bennet Goldsmith, secretary and treasurer; Louis Merkin, James Stillman, P. A. McGuire, Charles Linderer, Thomas Uhlemann, Max Bauer, William Ellwood, Ferdinand Elsbeck, Charles Wickerscheimer, Gabriel Rigger, Joseph Koch and Joseph Abrams. The wives of many of the members were present and they were also of the opinion that the Cameragraph Club ought to see a film play next time it was looking for thrillers.

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Into Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

TO "the most important announcement ever made in the history of the moving picture industry" (up to that time) Moving Picture World dated February 26, 1910, gave just eleven lines under the heading "$2,500,000 Company Incorporated." Articles of incorporation of the General Film Company were noted as filed in the office of the Hudson County Clerk in Jersey City.

"To manufacture and deal in moving picture apparatus" was the stated purpose of the corporation. Harry M. Gough, of Glen Ridge, N. J.; Guernsey R. Jewett, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Willoughby J. Kingsbury and Emil O. Mann, of Manhattan; William G. Hovey, Woodmere, L. I., and Harry J. Mullineaux, of Bethlehem, Pa., were listed as the incorporators.

The fellow who writes "Ten Years Ago" nine years from now will be recording the fact that General Film surrendered in bankruptcy after having led a life that numbered the crucial years of the Infant Industry. That a $2,500,000 corporation could be formed without "Wall Street" was, of itself, an event. But "The Street" hadn't heard of the movies ten years ago!

Mounting the Ladder of Fame.

Now the brokers and bankers and messengers and everybody down there are "fans." And stock in picture corporations is listed along with steel and copper! The Infant is growing like an elephant's stepchild.

While General Film was forming and fomenting the Burton Theatre, at Thirty-ninth and Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, was sold to a young man who continued its previous policy of giving a dollar show for 5 cents, kids; 10 cents, grown-ups. The young man was stepping on to the bottom rung of the ladder of film-fame.

Just like we used to "fist" a ball-bat to decide "first choose" the young man went after the ladder, hand over hand. You'll find him now with United Artists —biggest "4" of all the "Fours"—as general sales manager. Shake hands with Ralph O. Proctor!

St. Louis Republic Pioneering.

Fifteen "movie" houses were represented in a full-page reproduction of a full-page exploitation of the "exhibition" game in the St. Louis Republic. It is reasonable to believe that the first advertising page in a daily paper fully devoted to the exploitation of picture theatres was there represented. Just to start a possible argument and to provoke research we'll say it was!

Not a Rivoli, Rialto or Capitol was mentioned. Those listed were the Grand Central, White House, Savoy, Broadway, Alice, Dewey, Astor, Family, Hippodrome, Victor, Nightingale, Casino, Novelty and Gem. There was also an advert of the St. Louis Calcium Light Company—and Buster Brown Shoes! The "merchandising hook-up" was under way ten years ago!

The Infancy of an Infant.

Down the middle of the page ran a column of text headed: "The Moving Picture Theatre Now a Permanent Factor in Public Amusement" from which we quote a phrase: "In the earlier days, when the moving picture was in its infancy, it was natural that those who saw its possibilities in a commercial sense should waste as little time as possible . . ."

All of which led into a fine "boost" for theatres that had electrical musical instruments, carpets on the floors and a fine atmosphere of "uplift." While the movies are seriously considered by some papers, ten years has not served to open the eyes of some publishers to the fact that in a family of five four are interested in films while baseball "thrills" only one.

Walter E. Greene was running a film exchange in Boston; William H. Swanson was similarly occupied in St. Louis and Eugene Cline was "the whole thing" in Chicago. We mention Eugene thus because he carried a full page, back cover, stating he was all that—and more.

Something About "Projectionists."

William Havill was pictured in dress suit as chief of Chicago's Board of Moving Picture Operators' Examiners. He was then in his third year, having been president of the very first board, established October 5, 1908. The writer knew Bill Havill—but never saw him with his "soup and fish" on board. It was doubtless Havill's sartorial example that has since raised machine operators in picture houses to the higher estate of "projectionists."

Chicago Notes: George Kleine unreeled a batch of "educative" films to an admiring Moving Picture World man, and others. "If Andrew Carnegie would only put some of his millions to build picture palaces to show educational films," said the World man, "he would do better work than the building of so many public libraries."

Mr. Carnegie is gone to greater rewards, but the opportunity is still open to Wall Street.

Early Rumbles of "Rambles."

Candy stores were going out of business because the kiddies were spending all their pennies, nickles and dimes in the movies theatres, said an editorial. The Confectioners' Review was reported as being in a condition of editorial panic because so many small stores had been "K. O.'d" by the screen.

"Some scientists have gone to the trouble to prove," said an editorial note, "that celluloid film if placed in a corked bottle and the bottle be subjected to heat, that enough gasses will be generated to explode the bottle. Ignorant writers in the daily papers have siezed upon this to point out the danger in theatres where celluloid films are being shown, but reasoning from the result of the experiment it would require a million or more feet to explode a building and even then it would have to be as tightly closed as the bottle."

"Letters from Readers" disclosed a kick because the name of the authors did not appear in the proper place for credit in advertising and in throwing pictures on the screen. It was declared that a famous name saw the light but only when they were famous enough to carry an advantage to the manufacturer.

The search for news of the Growing Infant may produce better results in the issue of March 5, 1910, which we will tackle with undaunted spirits next week. Better stick along!

Arrow Has Two New Press Books.

Handsome press books have been prepared by Arrow Film Corporation on "The Desert Scorpion" and "Wolves of the Street." A striking portrait of Edmund F. Cobb, who stars in both pictures, is shown on each cover, and in addition on the book for "The Desert Scorpion" are scenes from that production.

There are many hints and suggestions which will be of benefit to exhibitors in exploiting these pictures in an unusual manner, and in addition there are reproductions of a full line of accessories, including, cuts, slides, posters, and cuts.

Special Pictures Gets Belgian's Color Process

THE Handschiegl color process, first used in the De Mille feature, "Joan the Woman," has been acquired exclusively for the Special Pictures Corporation, according to Louis W. Thompson, president and general manager of this new organization, and will be used in connection with a series of Art Color Scenics, to be featured as a part of the comedy-art release.

Handschiegl, a Belgian, after several years of experimenting has succeeded in bringing this process for coloring films to a point which now insures its success commercially, it is said. Although it was at first believed that it would prove to be the most revolutionary device brought for the motion picture, its success was limited by the fact that film could not be colored through this method in sufficient quantity to make the process of commercial value. Now, however, Handschiegl has overcome this drawback, and Mr. Thompson believes that the way is now open for practical color photography for the picture theatre.

Production with the new company is progressing rapidly, according to Ward Lescelle, director general. The first release is practically ready and arrangements are now under way for the adding of other companies as rapidly as accommodations can be obtained. At present, production headquarters for the company is at the Balboa studio in Long Beach, Cal.

George Fitzmaurice-Ouida Bergere Join in New Deal with Famous Players-Lasky

GEORGE FITZMAURICE, whose special Famous Players-Lasky feature production, "On With the Dance," has established him as a most skillful director, has just signed a new contract with Jesse L. Lasky. By the terms of the new agreement Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is assured of all Fitzmaurice productions for several years to come.

At the same time that Mr. Lasky signed this contract with Mr. Fitzmaurice, he signed another with Ouida Bergere (who in private life is Mrs. Fitzmaurice). She has written the scenarios for all of the subjects which have brought Mr. Fitzmaurice so prominently before the photoplay public.

The probability is that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release five or six Fitzmaurice productions each year. It is the intention of the management to provide such funds and cooperation of every nature that these productions shall be rated as second to none.

Listing Fitzmaurice Productions.

It was several months ago that it was announced that owing to the success scored by the Elsie Ferguson features, "The Avalanche," "A Society Exile," "The Witness for the Defense" and "Counterfeit," all of Mr. Fitzmaurice's future pictures would be known as George Fitzmaurice Productions. The first picture so produced was "On With the Dance," featuring Mae Murray and David Powell, just released and already shown in several cities.

He is at present working on "The Man Who Killed," an adaptation of the play by Pierre Frondaie and novel by Claude Farrere, "L'Homme Qui Assassina." The play was translated into English by Gilbert Canon and Francis Keyser and was reproduced at His Majesty's Theatre, London. Both of these screen adaptations were made by Miss Bergere.

Born in Paris of Irish parents, Mr. Fitzmaurice obtained his early education in that city and embarked on a business career which took him all over Europe and to India. Coming to this country, he was attracted to the field of motion pictures.

He joined the scenario department of Pathe, where he wrote adaptations and original stories. Eventually he became a director, and from the outset was successful.

When Dan Cupid Came In.

It was while Mr. Fitzmaurice was with Pathe that he met his future wife. Ouida Bergere had deserted the stage for a screen career, and it was while acting in a picture that she turned over to the director a story which earned for her a place in the scenario department of Pathe.

She and Mr. Fitzmaurice worked together on "Via Wireless" and it was then that their romance started. Later Miss Bergere opened an agency and became associated with the American Play Company.

Again turning to scenario work, she went to the coast with Mr. Fitzmaurice and there made adaptations for all the photoplays in which Fannie Ward appeared under his direction. In addition to her many notable adaptations, she has written a number of original stories for the screen.

Title Named for Second Hank Mann Two Reeler

THE second release of the Hank Mann series, "The Paper Hanger," will be released this week. As evidence of the popularity of the Hank Mann Comedies, Arrow reports that nearly every territory in the United States has been sold on series of two-reelers.

The Arrow Film Corporation has gotten out a series of cards on these comedies showing the Hank Mann beauties, and these are being sent for distribution to all theatres that are showing the comedies.

Various theatres are devising different schemes in using these cards. Some are handing them out in complete sets to all patrons, others are dealing them out one at each showing of the pictures, while others are having them thrown from airplanes.

Corinne Griffith on Police Beat Meets a Courteous Taxicab Driver

By Edward Weitzel

THE ceiling of the room was at least twenty feet above our heads and the window in the north wall filled the entire space. It was the workshop of a painter. Not the abode of a struggling young artist, but the studio of a man who has made his name and can afford to occupy a suite in the Hotel Des Artistes and have his living rooms and workshop combined. The most noticeable decoration of the room was southern moss, made into wreaths or festooned over the doorways.

"I haven't had my Christmas decorations taken down yet," explained Corinne Griffith. "I'm from the South, you know, and I had the moss sent from home."

"Is this your first winter in New York? How are you enjoying our snow?" I asked politely.

Miss Griffith's reply was not enthusiastic but tactful:

"Oh! quite as much as the rest of the New Yorkers!" said she.

"Thank you for them kind words; I'll pass 'em on to Mayor Hylan. He needs a few—also a few more snow shovelers and an additional man or two with picks to dig down and bring the famous New York City pavements once more to the surface. You must find your trips by automobile between your apartment and the Vitgraph studio in Brooklyn rough, but invigorating—a sort of midwinter 'bumping the bumps.' But how did you come to select this apartment? Are you going to set up an atelier and turn out some masterpieces of your own?"

"Oh, dear no! I've sublet it from an artist. This is a community hotel and professional folk of every description live here. The original settlers own their apartments and have a voice in the running of things."

Winning the Beauty Prize

"This is where they had the ball the other night and awarded a prize to the most beautiful woman present?"

"A golden apple—yes."

"Yes—in New Orleans."

"It's a wonder some one doesn't write a scenario about this place, have that ball for one of the big scenes, and cast you for the prize-winning lady. It would be like playing an old part over again."

Miss Griffith thought for a moment.

"It sounds promising," she said. "I'll suggest it to our scenario editor; only I think I'd rather play one of the girls who doesn't get the prize."

"May I ask why?"

"Because so many fail where one wins and it takes so much character to accept defeat bravely and keep on trying to do the best on can. Do you remember the lines of Joaquin Miller's poem, 'But to him who tries and who fails and dies, I give great honor and glory and tears.' My own struggle was not a hard one, but since reaching New York I realize that thousands of clever girls come here every week hoping to start a career and never get a foothold on the first rung of the ladder. Lots of them have so much grit and come up smiling after every knockdown of fate. I should like to play a girl of that type. I met one the other day—she'd been trying to get an opening in moving pictures and had been going the rounds of the agencies for weeks without receiving any encouragement, and her money was running very low. A streak of luck brought her a letter of introduction to the casting director of one of the companies and yesterday she came in to tell me she had been given a small part in a picture and would start working next week."

"I hope she didn't forget to thank you for that letter."

The Vitagraph star shook her head:

"No—I didn't give her the letter—I only asked a friend of mine to get it for her."

"Your influence was the key which unlocked the door; and, anyway, she's no longer among the failures."

"I hope not, but the test is yet to come. I shall never forget that dreadful first day at the studio while I was waiting to take part in my scene. Everybody was kind to me, but I kept thinking—suppose I fail!"

"And now you're a star in your own right, and have to be bored by an interviewer when you'd much rather be reading an interesting book. By the way, you've been learning something about the writing game yourself lately, I believe."

"You mean as the heroine of 'Dead-

WHEN the casting director of the American Film Company was given the scenario for Samuel Merwin's novel, "The Honey Bee," several notables both inside and outside the world of film were brought together. First, the star, Madame Marguerita Sylva, the Belgian diva of world wide operatic fame; Thomas Holding, an English actor, a dark six-footer of athletic build, who has carried the leading roles in many plays on the "legitimate" stage, and Nigel Barrie, recently discharged from the Royal Flying Corps of the British Army, and Albert Ray, the New Yorker, who made his advent on the stage at the age of seven years.

Madame Sylva is one of the most versatile artistes on the international stage, and, although of Belgian birth, is an American doubly, if not trebly. She won her first and greatest professional triumphs in this country, beginning at the age of fourteen, when she arrived in this country with the late Sir Herbert Tree.

Within a few years she had won such distinction and success that she became the star of the Marguerita Sylva Comic Opera Company. Returning to Europe she began her operatic career, and, under Hammerstein's direction, created something of a sensation in "Carmen."

Holding Began Career in London.

Thomas Holding began his career in London in Charles Frohman's productions and then appeared in New York as Billie Burke's leading man in "Love Watches." Following two years for Klaw & Erlanger in "Ben Hur," Mr. Holding returned to London for a vacation, where Hugh Ford of Famous Players asked him to go into pictures. His first appearance on the screen was as leading man for Pauline Frederick in "The Eternal City," filmed in Rome.

Nigel Barrie, who also may be considered by some spectators of "The Honey Bee" as the leading man, as he seems the favored suitor through three acts, is in real life the scion of an aristocratic English family, born in Calcutta, India, and educated in England and Heidelberg, Germany, and trained for service in the English Army.

His first appearance in theatrical work was with Frank Benson in Shakesperian plays, and later, in "Half an Hour," he was Grace George's leading man. Musical comedy leads and vaudeville claimed Mr. Barrie until the screen lured him for Jane Grey's support in "When My Ship Comes In."

Ray a Pioneer.

Albert Ray, who puts over an excellent comedy role, is one of the pioneers in motion picture acting. He began his stage career at the age of seven in "Buster Brown." During the summer months between road engagement Mr. Ray worked in several of the Biograph pictures, having had his first experience with the old American Mutoscope Company. Later he became a director of comedies in New York, but returned to the silent drama, and made a hit as "Peck's Bad Boy."

George Hernandez, Dell Boone, Kid McCoy, Harvey Clark, Ethel Ullman, Charlotte Merriam, Ruth Maurice, and Harry Tenbrook complete the cast. Rupert Julian was both the writer of the scenario and the director.

"Harvest Moon" Finished; Now Being Cut and Titled

THE final scenes of the Deitrich-Beck production, "The Harvest Moon," starring Doris Kenyon, for Hodkinson release, were completed at the Leah Baird Studios in Cliffside, N. J., last week. J. Searle Dawley, who directed the production and Theodore C. Deitrich are now cutting, editing and titling the picture.

"The Harvest Moon" is a picturization of Augustus Thomas' play of the same name, which ran for an entire season at the Garrick Theatre in New York, was played for three seasons in practically every city in the country by road companies and has been presented by many leading stock companies.

The story has a big theme dealing with the power of suggestion for good or evil and is replete with tense and dramatic situations and amazingly beautiful and artistic surroundings. Some wonderful lighting effects are used to demonstrate the psychology of light upon suggestion.

A strong cast supports Miss Kenyon in the production. Among the principals are Wilfred Lytell, George A. Lessey, Earl Schenck, Peter Lang, Marie Shotwell, Stuart Robson, Grace Barton, Marcia Harris, Mrs. E. M. Holland, Fred Radcliffe, E. H. Leffler, Ellen Olson, famous Swedish emotional actress who is making her first picture in this country, Daniel Pennell and Fred Kallgren.

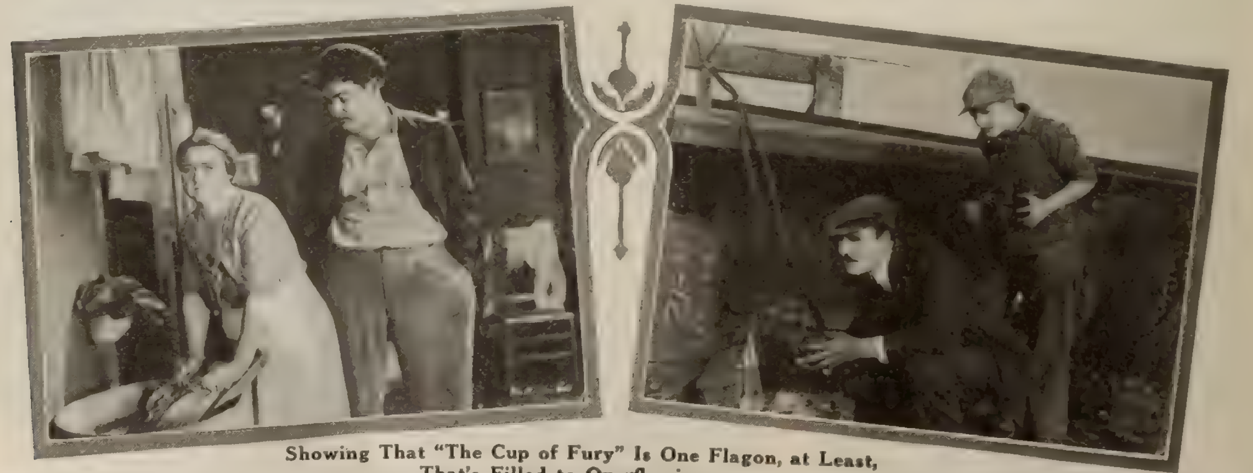
"His Temporary Wife" to Be Seen This Week

"HIS TEMPORARY WIFE," Joseph Levering's vivid picturization of Robert Ames Bennet's leap year romance, will be the subject of simultaneous trade showings at all Hodkinson exchanges the week of February 21, many of the big first run exhibitors throughout the country having evinced keen interest in the maiden effort of a producer with the ability and foresight to corral such screen celebrities as Ruby De Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong and W. T. Carleton.

Few productions this year have been made with so lavish a hand, it is said. Interior settings reveal the technical perfection reached by Mr. Levering, one of the screen's pioneer directors, in "His Temporary Wife." Similar attestation that nothing was left undone to make the production a scenic as well as a dramatic triumph is found in the creations worn by the leading feminine members of the all-star aggregation.

Pathe Lists Fifth Blackton Picture.

J. Stuart Blackton, who has given Pathe four big pictures since affiliating with the distributing organization, follows a new line of effort for his fifth release. In "The Blood Barrier," which has just been completed, he has given Pathe a production marked by rapid and forceful action from start to finish. The melodrama is the work of the late Cyrus Townsend Brady, and was written in his most effective fashion.



Showing That "The Cup of Fury" Is One Flagon, at Least, That's Filled to Overflowing.

Booze Gurgles Up Only to the Border

Dean Law in Texas Prohibits Even Juleps in Kentucky. Kunnel Films 'n Moonshine in Tennessee

By PHIL FOX

NOT content with the Federal canonization of the camel, Texas legislators have passed a law which "pumps his hump," so to speak. This parched palate measure, the very acme of dryness, is known as the Dean law and is the product of long and scientific delving into the laws of superaridity.

Booze Wave Stops at Border.

The United States may be dry, but Texas, as wet as a red hot stove, flaunts its Lone Star escutcheon to a moistureless world as an example of oven-baked sterility.

A wave of wetness, a maelstrom of Mexican moistness, tons of tequila, flagons of foaming "cerveza" beat and gurgle ineffectively against the adamant beverage boundary of the Rio Grande. The optimistic population of the border country announces that the center of population is moving swiftly southward despite the fact that rebel horses still swim the silvery international stream. And Galveston, as an embarkation point for Cuba, has put on a new assumption of waterfront bustle and enterprise.

Much "International" Business.

But the fact remains that the international bridges to Mexico merely linger as monuments to times gone by and as roadways by which the red-nosed and bibulous may, if proper business credentials are presented to the customs officers, stride confidently forward for a one day's souse. Twenty-four hour leave the court the canteens is all that is granted nowadays to the thousands who have ingeniously devised excuses for pressing border business of international scope.

So dry is Texas that its drought affects every human being, every living creature, every entity tangible or intangible within its border lines.

Dust from Catfish's Goatee.

The solitary scorpion in the Big Bend country curls up and dies of thirst amid its native sand hills. The very cactus withers.

Catfish, dust flying from their whiskers, tediously pole themselves along dry water courses leading toward the Gulf of Mexico and the three-mile limit. Human thirst is intolerable.

Naturally the moving picture business, which provides the main recreation stimulus to hundreds of thousands of amusement hungry Texans has not escaped the blight of the redoubtable Dean law. The legislative measures, so dry that the text of the league of nations is comparatively a limpid brook, restricts all alcoholic demonstrations upon the picture screen.

No Moonshine, No Juleps.

Glasses in Texas may no longer clink in actuality, even in the sub-basement, nor can they touch as animated shadows in the realm of moviedom. The noiseless toasts of the moving pictures, even though they be quaffed in nothing stronger than cold tea, are banned here. The Dean law forbids them.

No longer may Texas picture fans legally grip the arms of their chairs as Burglar Bill hoists three stiff drinks of rock and rye before gouging the eye of his childhood sweetheart. The drinking of the hard stuff here, even on the film, is verboten.

No longer can the gray-haired colonel stroke his goatee and smile quietly in the hiding shadows of the playhouse as on the screen is reflected a good old log cabin, brush-camouflaged still-house, from which smoke is rising and around which a feud is waging. Any pictures showing the distillation of intoxicating liquors are barred in Texas under the Dean law.

They Might Create a Thirst.

Movie drinks, whether frapped on the screen in plays of high society, drained from the bottle in Bowery romances or gulped amid a hail of pistol shots in a portrayal of the Wild West of 1917 are barred by the Texas law.

Such demonstrations and picturizations create a bad example, the legislators think. Or maybe they create a thirst, which lacking realization, may turn to something desperate. Anyhow, all drinking scenes are exiled from Texas movies. The writer of this article expects arrest for even thinking about the subject.

Growing Demand for Short Subjects.

A renewed demand for two reel subjects, similar to the Baby Marie Osborne series distributed by Pathe, has been noted by the short subjects department of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Within the last few months, exhibitors who, heretofore shunned the short subjects, have been giving them an especially big play.

Bookings on the Baby Marie Osborne pictures, which included "Baby Marie's Round-Up," "Daddy Number Two," and "Little Miss Gingersnap" have mounted skyward, indicating the exhibitors' attitude towards the short subjects.

Here Are the "Empty Arms."

Gail Kane and Thurston Hall put over this title version of "Arms and the Man," produced by Lester Park and Edward Whiteside and released on state rights basis.

Republic Buys "The Great Shadow," a Picture on Present Social Unrest

FURTHER indication that serial productions are becoming as widely popular and as much in demand in America as in foreign countries is evidenced in the news that is current this week to the effect that Republic Distributing Corporation is considering the release to exhibitors of some of the best serial features obtainable.

This announcement follows closely on the heels of the recent announcement from the offices of Selznick Pictures that Lewis J. Selznick has made all arrangements to produce serials and that Albert Payson Terhune has been engaged to write the first one.

When seen in regard to the serials for Republic, Mr. Beach, president of the distributing corporation, said: "Yes, Republic in its rapid progress is laying plans to include serial productions. We have received many communications from representative exhibitors throughout the country who, pleased with our productions, ask if they can expect any serials. The serial as it is produced today is a big improvement over those made recently as two years ago. I believe there is still room for improvement, and Republic will endeavor to supply exhibitors with serials that surpass any made thus far."

Popularity of Short Reels Increasing.

Mr. Busch further declared that short subjects, as released by Republic, are making steady strides forward in the favor of both exhibitor and public. The Charlie Chaplin reissues, twelve in number, are reported as booking so steadily that all prints are working regularly. Prizma is said to be pursuing its colorful way at a pace that had awakened attention throughout the industry. The Judge Brown series is announced as very popular, and Kinograms holds its own with the best news reels being circulated.

Republic Distributing, through Mr. Busch, has announced its willingness to negotiate with persons having extraordinary serials. Independent producers are already conferring with Republic on this, it is reported.

"Flame of Hellgate" is Michelena's Next Robertson-Cole Production

"THE FLAME OF HELLGATE," a thrilling melodramatic picturization of the great outdoors starring Beatriz Michelena, is the current Robertson-Cole release. This picture, which gives the former operatic singer a chance to display her real dramatic ability, was written by Earle Snell and directed by George E. Middleton.

"The Heart of Juanita," the last Michelena release for Robertson-Cole, was a picture that made good with exhibitors, and it is declared that the current production excels by far her work in the emotional role of the "girl of the dance hall."

Michelena is seen as the head of a band of outlaws. How she rides and the manner in which she copes with the daring exploits of the great outdoors is portrayed in vivid form. Robertson-Cole officials believe that the name of the picture and the star linked with Middleton's name as a director will put the production over in a really big time style.

The story, told in a series of melodramatic incidents, concerns the fight between an unscrupulous cattle king and a hardy old mountaineer of the west, which fight is carried on by the daughter of the mountaineer after her father has been murdered by the cattle king who dominates the valley.

Miss Michelena is supported by one of the finest casts of depictors of frontier types obtainable. The plotting, domineering cattle king is made real by Albert Morrison. Clarence Arper is the bigoted and cowardly reactionary sheriff. D. Mitsoras, the half-breed gunman, and William Pike, the regenerated man who plays opposite Michelena. Other parts are played by Cliff Thompson, Katherine Angus and Jeff Williams

Many Fete Maeterlinck on Trip to Study Photoplay Technique in West

WELCOMED by reception committees comprising city officials and leading citizens, the guest of honor at banquets and the subject of front-page stories in newspapers, Maurice Maeterlinck is being given a royal ovation on his journey from New York to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City where he will study the technique of photoplay construction preparatory to writing one original story a year for production by Goldwyn.

The Maeterlinck party, which includes Mme. Maeterlinck, Henry Russell and Mrs. Russell and others closely associated with the Belgian poet and philosopher, is travelling in the private car Mayflower customarily reserved exclusively for the use of President Wilson.

The last report was dated Kansas City where the Maeterlinck program covered the entire day, starting with the greetings of the reception committee headed by the mayor of Kansas City. Three hundred Camp Fire Girls escorted the visitors to the Hotel Muehlebach. M. Maeterlinck was entertained at luncheon at the Woman's City Club and then went to the Men's City Club, where he was received by Governor Gardner, Irving Cobb, Dr. Burris Jenkins and other celebrities.

In Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and other cities visited, the welcome was no less cordial.

Leonard Company Leaves for Coast.

Benny Leonard and the members of his supporting cast including Stuart Holmes, Ruth Dwyer, Marie Shotwell, Mme. Marstini; supervisor Wally Van, director J. Gordon Cooper, assistant cameraman, Glenn Kunkel left Tuesday, February 17, for Los Angeles stopping en route at Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles where the remaining twelve episodes of the champion's serial "The Evil Eye," written by Roy L. McCardell, will be completed.

"Luck of Irish" Has Big Pre-Release Demand

THAT the policy of "box-office tested pictures" has gained considerable popularity among exhibitors is attested by the brisk pre-release demand for "The Luck of The Irish," an Allan Dwan production presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Following a successful pre-release eastern showing of the feature at the Capitol Theatre, New York, exhibitors in the East opened negotiations for early bookings, although the general release date was several weeks off.

The box-office test at the world's largest theatre was described in the following letter sent by Edmund Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, to Morris Kohn, president of Realart Pictures Corporation, on February 16, following the week of showing: "It is quite a pleasure to inform you that 'The Luck of The Irish' proved quite as pleasing to our patrons when shown on the Capitol screen as was the case with the management when we viewed the picture to book it. The general impression was that it was a good, clean, wholesome picture, with splendid entertaining qualities, and this general satisfaction was reflected in the box office."

"The Luck of the Irish" had its pre-release try-out at Grauman's million dollar theatre in Los Angeles. The premiere was unattended by any large-scale publicity or advertising, but the Mayflower special demonstrated a remarkable box-office strength, as Sid Grauman's enthusiastic comments and the resulting bookings in that district showed.

Lichtman on Exchange Tour.

Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has left New York on a tour of the company's exchanges in the Southern and Middle Western territories. He will take up with the various branch managers the details of the plans formulated at the recent convention of the sales organization held in Chicago.

The offices which Mr. Lichtman will visit are Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Kansas City and probably St. Louis, Omaha, Minneapolis and Chicago.

New Director for Aubrey Comedies.

Jess Robbins, pioneer director of comedies, and associated with Charlie Chaplin during the Essanay days of that comedian, has been obtained by Vitagraph to direct Jimmy Aubrey in Big V laugh-getters. Leo White, who played the part of the Frenchman in many Chaplins, has also joined the Aubrey company.

Moreno Completes Serial.

Antonio Moreno has completed the fifteenth and final episode of his current Vitagraph serial, "The Invisible Hand" at Los Angeles Harbor, San Pedro, Cal., where daring scenes aboard a liner were taken. Director William Bowman, who has been ill for two weeks, was back at work and took charge of the climax of the serial. Mr. Moreno did his own directing during Mr. Bowman's absence. Mr. Moreno will take a rest of two or three weeks before he does any more picture work.

Fox Adds Four Writers to His Western Staff

TO meet the ever growing demand for its productions, Fox Film Corporation has expanded its staff of writers at the Hollywood, Cal., studios by the addition of four prominent men. Three of them, by a peculiar coincidence, bear an identical Christian name—Stephen Fox, Stephen Reynolds and Stephen Chalmers. The fourth is Arthur Jackson.

Stephen Fox is a journalist and fiction writer with an enviable reputation in the profession. His talent runs towards fundamental questions in human relations. Some of his writings have been published under the name of Jules G. Furthman. The society drama in which delightful Vivian Rich makes her debut as a star, "Would You Forgive?" is from his pen.

Stephen Chalmers is a well known newspaper man. His short stories and poems have won a wide circle of admirers. As long as fifteen years ago he was already a respected journalist, working on the New York Times. Since then he has published many works, among them a "Life of Dr. Trudeau," which he based upon personal investigation.

The first work of Arthur Jackson under the Fox standard, "Leave It To Me," will soon be ready for release. It is an absorbing romance of a rich young man and makes an excellent vehicle for William Russell, under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. Mr. Jackson's writing has secured for him a solid standing in the profession. He possesses a scintilating sense of humor that makes him and his work welcome everywhere.

It became known this week that "Prince of Pines," which is being produced by Selznick Enterprises with an all-star cast, under the direction of Burton George, will in all likelihood be presented on the speaking stage in the near future.

Willard Mack, it is said, is making plans to produce it as a spoken drama and play the stellar role himself. Mr. Mack wrote the story for the screen, and R. Cecil Smith made the adaptation and wrote the continuity for it.

Butterfield to Build in Lansing.

W. S. Butterfield, owner of many theatrical enterprises in Michigan, has just completed arrangements for the erection of a half million dollar playhouse at Lansing. The theatre will play vaudeville and pictures. Ground will be broken March 1. The seating capacity will be in excess of 2,000.

"The Third Woman," a Robertson-Cole Release, Is Story of Racial Difference

CLAIMING equality with the other important announcements which have been made recently by Robertson-Cole comes the word that this company will release "The Third Woman," a superior picture with an all star cast. In obtaining this picture for distribution Robertson-Cole executives believe that they have put their name to one of the greatest stories of the plains which has been put on the screen.

"The Third Woman" is a story that is bound to please. Its big sets taken at large expense together with the society theme and the exciting moments of the fashion drama compel recognition of the elaborate feature. Clothes a year ahead of the times linked with the modes of men and women of the day will no doubt break records for every exhibitor who books this production.

The production is an intense study of the question of racial difference along an angle which has not been touched before. J. Grubb Alexander wrote the continuity from the story by Raymond L. Schrock, and the picture was directed by Charles Swickard. While the greater part of the action is laid in Arizona the opening is in the East, where scenes are laid in a number of homes of the wealthier class.

Possibly the greatest artistic triumph of the picture are the great series of scenes which have for their background a picturesque Pueblo village in which the everyday life of the tribe is logically connected with the action of the story effectively. The white vivid light of the sun beating down on this little city of baked mudbricks was taken splendid advantage of for the photography is superb in its clearness. In every direction stretches the boundless sands above which the Indian city rises, tier on tier, as it has been built by generations of patient brick-makers.

Heightening the dramatic effect is a glimpse of the quaint Pueblo custom of the betrothal, which has a direct bearing on the story, and there follows also an excellent series of night pictures, showing the out-door fire celebration of the betrothal.

HELEN FERGUSON, a girl of eighteen who has played leading parts in motion pictures for several years, has been engaged by Metro to play Dora in "Burning Daylight," the first of four Jack London stories to be picturized for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., with Mitchell Lewis as the star.

Miss Ferguson was stenog in "The Lost Battalion." She comes to Metro from Fox, where she appeared in "Shod with Fire" with William Russell. She was once before with Metro in New York, where she played the role of Amy Gordon in "Why Germany Must Pay" opposite Creighton Hale. She was leading woman to Mitchell Lewis in "Life's Greatest Problem," a picture produced by Blackton last year.

Miss Ferguson did her first screen work with Henry Walthall in "Temper" for Essanay. She was with Essanay for three years. She has had leading parts with Bryant Washburn, Taylor Holmes and Harry Morey.

Edward ("Ted") Sloman, who will direct "Burning Daylight," has gone to Huntington Lake, Cal., to look over possible locations for scenes of the production. Like most of the late novelist's works "Burning Daylight" is a story of Alaska, and many snow scenes are necessary.

Filming of these will start in about three weeks, as several interior settings are to be used at the Metro studios in Hollywood before the company goes northward. The first setting for the production, the New York office of "Burning Daylight," which part Mitchell Lewis will enact, is now being constructed. The company expects to start work next week.

Jackson Rose has been engaged as cameraman for the production. He has had a varied experience.

Metro Acquires California Park for Elaborate Outdoor Settings

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has taken a lease for a term of years on Rose Hill Park, a tract of sixty-three acres at the northern limits of Los Angeles. The park will be used for motion picture settings too extensive for the five-acre open lot that adjoins the main studio plant in Hollywood.

The sixty-three acres cover wooded, hilly land, with a beautiful level space of six acres across the center. The hills are covered with pepper, eucalyptus and pine trees. In places there is a luxuriant undergrowth. Wide opportunity for development of exterior scenic effects is afforded in a variety of natural settings in the tract and its lease is another example of Metro's policy of expansion on a large scale.

The first setting to be constructed will be an East Indian town which figures prominently in "The Hope," a screen version of the celebrated Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, now in preparation with an all-star cast including Jack Mulhall, Frank Elliott, Ruth Stonehouse and Marguerite de la Motte. This elaborate setting is to be destroyed by an earthquake in the course of the picture.

Here will also be constructed scenes for the coming productions of the other Drury Lane melodramas obtained by Metro, including "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriages of Mayfair."

Metro officials have had their eyes on the park for a long time.

Addressing Nation's Exhibitors, Goldwyn Guarantees Co-operation

"Goldwyn will give the public, via the exhibitors, the best that motion picture production affords. That we mean what we say is no better evidenced than by the list of the pictures that Goldwyn has announced as part of its future program. The stage successes and big sensations have been combed and scanned with the utmost care and no obstacle has stood in the way of securing these great themes for screen presentation.

"Within the past few weeks we have purchased the motion picture rights to such features as 'The Great Lover,' Clyde Fitch's 'Truth,' 'A Tailor-Made Man,' 'The Slim Princess,' 'Stop Thief,' 'Officer 666,' 'Milestones,' Hall Caine's 'The Christian' and numerous other novels and plays of equal repute. With reference to work on these, I can only say that the Goldwyn company will give each picture the minutest care in every detail of direction and casting.

"No Exhibitor's Competitor."

"The Goldwyn Company stands for the integrity of the producer as well as the integrity of the exhibitor. Goldwyn is a producing organization. As such it is willing to help every exhibitor who shows the Goldwyn product. We want to help and improve the theatre of the progressive exhibitor. We want to help him get more business through better entertainment. And at the same time, we are going to be sure that there is a home for Goldwyn pictures, where such homes do not exist today. We are and shall be no exhibitor's competitor.

"The day of bulk production is passed. Each Goldwyn picture is a unit and will be presented to the exhibitor as such. It will be exploited and advertised as a unit.

"We shall continue to produce in California and increase the scale of our production there. California is just as great a place for motion picture making as it ever was. Indeed, we have acquired twenty acres adjoining our Golden City studios as an evidence of our belief in this.

Develop Facilities Everywhere.

"But the East is vital to our needs no less than the West. While it provides that variety of scenery which is essential to variegated types of production, it also, we feel, is not good to have too many production units working in one place. The separation of our production centers by the width of the entire United States is a psychological asset to a viewpoint that will not become warped, so we shall develop production facilities in the East.

"I feel proud to have allied to the production sources of my organization the brain and inspired pen of Maurice Maeterlinck, and to establish as a policy of Goldwyn the desire to secure the greatest creative brains from the world's literati. We have already on exclusive contract Rex Beach, Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gertrude Atherton, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King and Leroy Scott. To these we have added, besides Maeterlinck, Ben Ames Williams, who wrote 'Jubilo,' and Arthur B. Reeve, author of Craig Kennedy.

"We stand sponsor for and support anything that will develop our industry and nothing can do this so effectively as great pictures. Whether these pictures be made by individual producers is no less of a tribute and a source of pride to us all, and I shall continue to take as keen a pleasure in the transcendental work of an independent producer as if this work were done by Goldwyn."

ANOTHER step in the steady advance of Fox Film Corporation toward perfection in product and service for the exhibitor is marked by the announcement that each of the seven companies now engaged in making Fox pictures at the western studios has had assigned to it a regular editor and cutter who will devote his or her entire time to the assembling of films.

Some time ago—in fact, when the William Russell company went to the West Coast with Emmett J. Flynn as director—William Fox sent with the company C. R. Wallace in the position of film editor. Mr. Wallace has remained with the Russell-Flynn combination ever since, and the result, as seen in "The Lincoln Highwayman" and more recently in "Shod With Fire," has proved Mr. Fox's contention that the use of separate editors for each picture affords the best results so far as continuity of story is concerned, as well as in the amount of time consumed in this important department of the industry.

Therefore it was natural that Sol. M. Wurtzel, superintendent of the West Coast studios, should at once appoint a film editor and cutter for each of the six other companies engaged at Hollywood.

The following appointments thus far have been made, affecting four of the remaining six companies:

Four Appointments Announced.

Miss Della Conley, a young woman of wide and varied film experience, has been assigned to the Denison Clift company, now engaged upon the final scenes of "The Iron Heart," in which Madlaine Traverse is the star.

For Edward J. LeSaint, who is directing Gladys Brockwell in the first of the Barbar Le Marr Deely stories, "The Mother of His Children," Earl Turner has been appointed editor.

To Tom Mix, now on location making exteriors for his newest picture, "Desert Love," under direction of Jacques Jaccard, Mr. Wurtzel has assigned Lloyd L. Nosler, whose special bent is western melodrama and whose knowledge of film technique has been gained by years of experience in this field.

Miss Shirley Mason's new starring vehicle, a comedy-drama entitled "Molly and I," which is under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell, will be edited by Carl Himm. Mr. Himm has been attached to the Mason company permanently by Mr. Wurtzel.

A definite assignment for the William Farnum and Buck Jones company has not yet been made, although both these stars have begun work on new photoplays. Mr. Farnum's play is a screen adaptation of Clarence E. Mulford's western novel, "The Orphan,' 'and Buck Jones' story is taken from "Forbidden Trails," by Charles Alden Seltzer. Until film editors for both companies are named, J. Gordon Edwards, veteran Farnum director, will continue cutting and trimming, and Scott Dunlap will cut the Jones picture in addition to directing it.

Japs Appreciate "Flying A" Star.

Margarita Fisher, who is playing the leading role in American's new superdrama, "The Dangerous Talent," appears to be as popular with the Japs as with American fans. The Players Graphic, published in Tokyo, carries a photograph of the star on its cover, and makes its appeal through the Japanese, Chinese and English languages. Rupert Julian, director of the latest "Flying A" Special, "The Honey Bee," also appears to have made a hit with the almond eyes, as he is featured in the midst of a bunch of stars. Shigeru Imura, the editor of the Graphic, says, "Nothing is more appreciated in the Japanese market than the American films now-a-days, the most popular of which is, no doubt, five reels dramatical play. Italian productions are just as well powerful and popular, and have large admirers too. Keen competitions between American and Italian films is worth paying attention."

Leatrice Joy Poses for Statue.

A life-sized statue called "Blind Youth" is used in the National Pictures production of that name and Carle Romanelli, one of the most distinguished sculptors of the West, was engaged to make the model. It fell to the lot of Leatrice Joy, who has been in other National productions made at the Selznick West Coast studios, to pose for this statue.

General Manager Woody of Realart Urges Fight on Bill Before Senate

A BILL passed recently by the United States House of Representatives and now under consideration by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee would, if properly interpreted in dispatches printed in newspapers, bar from the screen many of the great masterpieces of the English speaking stage, such as Shakespeare's "Hamlet" and "Macbeth," Hugo's "Les Miserables," Dumas' "Monte Cristo" and Du Maurier's "Peter Ibbetson."

The proposed legislation, according to news reports, provides that all motion pictures in which the hero has committed a crime shall be barred from interstate comerce and foreign exportation.

Declaring it to be arbitrary and discriminatory legislation, J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, suggests exhibitors take immediate steps to defeat it. He urges that they enlist the aid of their patrons in the fight. Mr. Woody argues that a "free screen" is as vital to American liberties as a free press and is inseparably a part of that institution.

Fight for a "Free Screen."

"Exhibitors should place the facts squarely before the public in their publicity and on their screen," Mr. Woody says. "The aid of newspapers should be enlisted and theatre patrons should be urged to write immediately to their senators urging the defeat of the proposed bill. The occasion should be made the start of a fight for a 'free screen.' It seems to me that the principle of a 'free screen' is as strictly American as the well-established principle of a free press The two are inseparably linked.

"The measure is discriminatory because the stage and newspapers are not affected. Plays in which the character is a crook or murderer may still hold the boards in our cities and be allowed to travel from state to state and into foreign countries. Magazines and novels presenting the same theme are not affected. But when motion pictures do what the stage and the press are allowed to do, the act becomes a crime!

What the Law Would Bar.

"Take Shakespeare's 'Hamlet' and 'Macbeth' as brilliant examples of plays which would be barred from the screen under the proposed law. Consider the Robin Hood stories for children that were made into one of the best operas of our time. Goethe's 'Faust' would come under the ban, and hardly one of the great operas of Wagner, Mascagni, Verdi, Beethoven and others could survive a strict interpretation of the proposed law.

"Hugo's 'Les Miserables' and Duma's 'Monte Cristo,' both masterpieces of literature and drama, and the numerous plays by Pinero, Jonas and Ibsen would be banned. And what would happen to screen productions of Du Maurier's 'Peter Ibbetson' or Tolstoi's 'Power of Darkness?'

"The theme of sin and regenaration is one of the most powerful in drama, poetry, literature and opera. It is a vital part of religion, life and art. Is it to be barred arbitrarily from motion pictures? If its presentation encourages crme in motion pictures, should it not be barred at the same time in plays, opera, poetry and literature?

"Half a Law Already."

"There is another practical aspect of the case which is of interest. Must the federal courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission be called upon contnually to decide what productions present a crook or murderer as their principal character.

"Let no one get the idea that this measure will be defeated unless there are protests. It is half a law already, having passed the House of Representatives, and the chances of its passage by the Senate will be materially strengthened if it is recommended favorably by the committee to which it has been referred. The time to protest is now!"

"My Dear! a Press Agent!"

William Fox Starts Pearl White and George Walsh on New Vehicles

WILLIAM FOX has started two companies on location. Pearl White, who will be directed by Charles Giblyn, has left for Port Henry, N. Y., to make the exteriors of "Tiger Cub." George Walsh, under the direction of Dell Henderson, has left for Tennessee, where the exteriors of "The Dead Line" will be made.

All interiors for the eastern companies of Fox Film Corporation are now being photographed in the new Fox building on West Fifty-fifth street. The companies have been recalled from the four studios formerly leased by Fox and interiors will be confined to the new large stage.

During the week "The White Moll," starring Pearl White, was completed, as was "A Manhattan Knight," with George Walsh as the star. The films will be placed on the Fox schedule of releases in a short time.

In making "The White Moll" from the Frank L. Packard story, Pearl White, most popular of all international favorites, is seen in a role entirely different from any in which she hitherto has appeared, and one that promises to be a revelation to her followers. It is the first time that this popular actress has definitely deserted serials.

Other Artists.

"A Manhattan Knight," the George Walsh picture which George Beranger directed, is founded on Gelett Burgess' well-known novel, "Find the Woman." It is described as a novelty melodrama and promises much in the way of action. Virginia Hammond plays opposite Walsh and, incidentally, this is the first picture that the former star of World Pictures Corporation has made for Fox.

The first part of "While New York Sleeps," the big Fox special which Charles J. Brabin is making with an all-star cast, has been completed. Estelle Taylor, Marc McDermott and Harry Southern are studying their parts for the second edition of the picture, which is declared to be a distinct novelty, full of tense, dramatic scenes.

In the West, Gladys Brockwell has just completed "The Mother of His Children," under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint. Miss Shirley Mason, the delightful star whose work in "Her Elephant Man" has been universally praised, is at work on "Molly and I" under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell. Tom Mix is working on "Desert Love," with which picture Jacques Jaccard makes his debut as a Fox director.

Buck Jones Hurt.

"The Iron Heart," which Denison Clift wrote, adapted for the screen and is directing, is the new vehicle for Madlaine Traverse, while William Farnum is at work on "The Orphan" under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, Louise Lovely is playing opposite Farnum. William Russell's next picture will be "Leave It to Me," on which he will begin work in a few days.

An injury to his toe interrupted temporarily Buck Jones' work on "Forbidden Trail." However, he will soon resume work on the picture which he is making under the direction of Scott Dunlap.

Buys "God's Country" for Japan.

I. Omita, Japanese film magnate, has purchased the rights for "Back To God's Country," the Curwood-Carver Production distributed by First National Exhibitors Circuit, for Japan.

Mr. Omita left recently for his native land with his film and a giant Great Dane Dog. He intends to make extensive use of this dog in the exploitation of "Back to God's Country," in Japan. According to Mr. Omita, his Great Dane will be the first of this species to be seen in the Eastern land.

"When I return to New York," said Mr. Omita, "it will be with as much weight in money as I took away in film, dog and advertising matter."

New York Showmen Discuss Poster, Juvenile and Percentage Problems

ONE of the best attended meetings of motion picture exhibitors in Greater New York was held on Friday, February 13, in the Hotel Astor. More than 200 theatre owners representing every borough of the Greater City were present.

The call had been issued by the officials of the state league to consider the following questions: The refusal of certain exchanges to sell unmounted paper to the poster companies from which exhibitors are now renting mounted posters, and the report of the legislative committee of the state organization in reference to pending and proposed legislation. An invitation had been issued to the F. I. L. M. Club and to the mounted paper renters. Both invitations were accepted and members of the F. I. L. M. Club attending were I. E. Chadwick, Mr. Connors, Henry Siegel, I. Schmertz and W. E. Raynor. All of the five companies dealing in slides, accessories, photos and mounted posters were represented.

O'Reilly Speaks for Exhibitors.

State President Sydney S. Cohen asked for opinions on the question of mounted posters. Charles L. O'Reilly stated that he could not understand the big minds represented in the national association bothering themselves with such petty details as six sheets and one sheets. The mounted poster was an absolute necessity for the small exhibitor, he said. The exchanges having declined to furnish posters to the men who had heretofore mounted and sold them, the exhibitor was in a serious predicament.

Mr. Raynor of the F. I. L. M. Club replied that it was merely a question of having the poster department break even. Under present conditions, Mr. Raynor said, the poster departments are losing money because the men who bought paper for mounting purposes naturally decreased the quantity of sales from the exchange to the exhibitor. To this Mr. O'Reilly responded with the suggestion that the producers cut out the tons of literature now shot at the exhibitor for the purpose of telling him how to run his business.

Would Have Matron Appointed.

Mr. Chadwick suggested that a committee be appointed to consider this question. The chair named Gus Koenigswald, I. Saphier, H. Snediker, E. Falter, S. Sheer and A. Knaster.

State President Cohen spoke on the legislation to be introduced at Albany to repeal the present law which absolutely prohibits the admission of unaccompanied minors into the motion picture theatres. Mr. O'Reilly explained that he hoped to get the co-operation of the Gerry Society in the form of a bill which will be satisfactory to everybody. The bill will provide for a matron whose appointment must be approved by the Gerry Society and who must be licensed somewhat in the same manner in which children are licensed today for appearance on the public stage.

President Cohen called attention to hostile legislation proposed in Albany. He said that there was talk of a state-wide license bureau and of a bill making an hour's intermission between each performance compulsory. Censorship bills are also in the making.

Protest Percentage Booking.

"This legislation which seriously affects our investment we can only defeat by 100 per cent. organization," he said. "It was in this way that the old blue laws were repealed last year. Every one of you has an opportunity to show his faith and interest in the organization by attending our state convention, which will be held on March 9 and 10 in Utica."

Mr. Cohen invited an opinion from the meeting on the question of percentage booking. Executive Secretary Samuel I. Berman said that southern exhibitors have put up forfeits obligating themselves to deny access to their screens to any proposition that is offered them on a forced percentage basis.

Mr. Manheimer said he did not believe that there were any arguments in favor of percentage bookings. A motion was quickly passed declaring the unanimous protest of the meeting against forced percentage booking.

"Checkers," Racing Drama, Pleases British Public

THE racing drama "Checkers," which took the United States by storm in its screen version, is fast gripping the motion picture public of Great Britain, according to reports that have reached Fox Film Corporation from its exchanges in England. With the all-star production booked for a solid week at the great Birmingham Picturedrome, at Sparkbrook, Birmingham, a success on the English screen paralleling the American triumph is foreshadowed.

The management of the Picturedrome has communicated directly with the executive offices in New York, expressing satisfaction at being able to book the great photoplay and congratulating the producer upon the valuable press sheet and exploitation aids issued for the picture.

"Checkers" is a visualization of a most famous racing drama. Its showing on the speaking stage was responsible for more slang phrases now in popular use than any other single play. It fairly bristles with plot and counterplot and tense situations, and the real racing scene taken at the Belmont Park track furnishes a climax of its kind never surpassed in thrilling effect.

The likelihood of an overwhelming success for this screen drama in England is particularly strong because of the tremendous popular interest in horse racing in that country. The story of "Checkers" is so realistic both in its clear cut detail and in its entirety that it should capture the popular mind.

Mary Beaton Makes Her Screen Debut with Metro

COMING to motion pictures fresh from a girl's finishing school near Philadelphia, Mary Beaton has joined the Metro forces at the company's studios in Hollywood, Cal., as the only feminine member of the studio stock company. Miss Beaton was placed under contract recently by Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, during his visit to the Pacific Coast in company with Marcus Loew.

Miss Beaton, who is a young woman of singular beauty of face and figure, had long been desirous of launching upon a career in the silent drama. She is well known in the younger social set in and about Philadelphia.

Before going to the Pacific Coast Miss Hampton posed for test pictures at Metro's New York studios in Sixty-first street, and the results were so satisfactory that she was sent to Maxwell Karger, Metro director general in Hollywood.

Mayer Engages Rene Guissart.

Rene Guissart, recognized as one of the foremost picture photographers of the day, has been secured by Louis B. Mayer to take charge of the camera work on future Anita Stewart productions. His first picture will be Harold MacGrath's "The Yellow Typhoon," in which Miss Stewart will be drected by Edward Jose.

Mr. Guissart comes to the Mayer studios with an enviable record for photographic achievement. For years he was manager of the Reutlinger studios in Paris, later holding the same position with the Felix Company. From there he went to Eclair, and then decided to try his fortune in America. He was associated with the Manuel Tourneur Productions, where he was in full charge of the camera work.

"Jiggs in Society" Is First Bringing Up Father Comedy

THE first of the "Bringing Up Father" Comedies from the MacManus cartoons just completed at the Christie Studio in Hollywood has been christened "Jiggs in Society."

The comedy is in two reels. It was directed by Reggie Morris, a recruit from the Sennett studio, under the superision of Al Christie, and it will be released by Pathe within the next two months under a distribution contract made by International Film Service Company, Inc.

The principal roles are played by Johnny Ray as "Jiggs," Margaret Cullington Fitz Roy as 'Maggie" and Laura La Plante as the pretty Jiggs heiress. Other important parts are played by Marjorie Payne, Ward Caulfield, Jack Henderson, George Burton, Eddie Baker and Gus Leonard. A. Nagy and A. L. Lane were the cameramen.

The second "Bringing Up Father" feature comedy is being produced at the Christie studio under the direction of Reggie Morris. Johnny Ray, Margaret Cullington Fitz Roy and Laura LaPlante who enacted the principal roles in the first Jiggs comedy are also in the second.

Hodkinson Promotes Branch Heads; Puts on More Men

F. B. WARREN, vice president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corp., announces certain managerial promotions and changes in the branch sales organization as follows:

Rudolph Berger, Hodkinson manager in Washington, has been promoted to the management of the Philadelphia Hodkinson office, succeeding Charles Henschel, who has resigned to enter the brokerage business with his brother.

J. J. Milstein, manager of the Hodkinson interests in Omaha, has been promoted to the management of the Hodkinson Washington, D. C., interests as successor to Mr. Berger.

H. K. Moss, former manager of the Triangle office in Detroit and later manager for the Stephen A. Lynch interests, has been placed in charge of the Hodkinson sales in Omaha.

G. H. Quigley, formerly one of the honor salesmen in the Pathe organization, has been made Hodkinson manager in Buffalo, succeeding, O. T. Schroeppel, resigned.

United Artists to Release "Romance;" Doris Keane Plays the Leading Role

EXCELLENT progress has been made on the screen production of "Romance," Edward Sheldon's popular story, for United Artists Corporation, in which Doris Keane plays the leading role. The release date of the picture will be announced shortly.

"Romance" is one of the most exceptional stories that has ever appeared on the stage and is filled to overflowing with the emotional glamour of love, in which on the speaking stage, Miss Keane appeared more than 3,000 times, in New York, Chicago, Boston and London, and which has had continuous runs in those cities for more than five years.

The story is that of the romance of a famous grand opera singer and a young clergyman, who despite their different callings are drawn together by a profound and sincere love. The woman has drained the cup of life so deeply, that her marriage to the minister is impossible, yet in the hour of trial, she rises to sublime heights of self-denial, proving herself stronger than the man.

The charm of "Romance" has proven irresistible on the stage. Its sentiment is delightful and the acting of Miss Keane most admirable, for it is a quaint story of sentiment, love and power, one that grips at the heart-strings of its every audience.

Sparing No Expense.

As Mme. Cavallini, the prima donna heroine, Miss Keane has unlimited opportunities to give vent to her qualifications as one of America's foremost emotional actresses. Her impersonation of the difficult role on the stage still is conceded to be one of the most brilliant acting achievements of the past decade.

United Artists is sparing no time and expense to make this picture a remarkable production. It will vividly portray the life of New York's society during its most interesting period and the most minute care is being taken to faithfully represent its every well-known detail, as the plot of the story confines much of its action to the well known section of New York's Greenwich Village, which has necessitated the erection of big settings. Chet Withey is directing the production.

The book and the play have been internationally proclaimed by critics the greatest story of life, passion, action and power, containing in its whole, an exceptional amount of action and heart-interest, sufficient suspense and with the very necessary qualification, an ultimate justification.

Warner Oland Comes East Starts on New Pathe Serial

WARNER OLAND, famous interpreter of serial villain roles, has arrived in New York from Los Angeles to begin work before the camera at the George B. Seitz studio in the Pathe serial "The Mad Talon," which is being directed by Bertram Millhauser and offers Juanita Hansen in the star role.

Apparently the only way for Mr. Oland to get a little vacation from the studio is to alternate between the coast and New York, for he finished work at the Gasnier studio on "The Third Eye," a forthcoming Pathe serial in which he will be co-starred with Eileen Percy Wednesday, January 3, packed up and boarded a train for New York on the 6th, arrived in New York the 10th, at noon, and the following day was at the Seitz studio arrayed in full make-up in time for the first "camera" call of the day.

Work on the serial was started sometimes ago and Mr. Oland said that he expected he would be worked at top speed to make up his share of the scenes for the early episodes of the serial.

"Land of Opportunity" Receives Praise of Prominent New England Men

IN the Americanization plan of Franklyn K. Lane, secretary of the interior, wherein he asked the cooperation of the motion picture industry, "The Land of Opportunity," the Ralph Ince-Lincoln picture, presented by Lewis J. Selznick, seems to have struck a lead for others to follow.

The first of the Americanization pictures to be released, it has been watched very carefully and the volume of congratulations sent to the Selznick offices show beyond a doubt that it has struck the right note. Governors of states, government officials and prominent exhibitors have forwarded telegrams and letters of congratulation unsolicited to Mr. Selznick, praising him for the promptness with which he responded to Secretary Lane's call as well as for the quality of the production.

Distribution Rather Than Profit.

In the first place, after the picture was completed and found to be about what was wanted, plans were promoted for extensive distribution during Lincoln Week. The result is that "The Land of Opportunity" was not only showing at every Broadway theatre with one exception during the week of February 8, but there is not a city in the United States of any size where it is not being screened in at least one theatre.

To assure extensive distribution, the following telegram was sent to all branch managers of Select who are releasing the play: "Extensive distribution of 'The Land of Opportunity' means more to me than the price for the same. We want the largest distribution possible and every print must be kept busy. Lewis J. Selznick."

The response to this telegram was most liberal and Select and Republic salesmen found that the exhibitors were more than willing to co-operate. The result has been that the Americanization plan has been given a big boost.

Big Showing in New Haven.

One of the biggest private showings of the picture took place in New Haven at the Bijou Theatre on February 5 before a distinguished audience of officials and Yale University men. There were present Ex-President William Howard Taft, President Hadley, of Yale; Mrs. Osborne, his secretary; Mayor David Fitzgerald, of New Haven; I. Osborne, the mayor's secretary; S. Z. Poli, L. M. Segal. O. C. Edwards, manager of the Palace Theatre, New Haven; Fred Valles, manager of the Bijou Theatre, New Haven; L D. Doty, auditor of the Poli Enterprises; J. J. Splain, general manager of the Poli Enterprises; L. D. Garvey, publicity director of the Poli Enterprises, and E. J. Poli, besides exhibitors and representatives of newspapers.

From Governor Coolidge, of Massachusetts, has come the following telegram: "Dear Mr. Selznick: You are entitled to great praise for your first Americanization picture portraying some anecdotes in the life of the great president and man. 'The Land of Opportunity' is a picture that can with profit be seen by everyone of us, as it shows where Abraham Lincoln plainly stood on the issue of Americanism."

From M. L. Brittain, state superintendent of schools of George, came a similar letter. These are but a few of the letters received.

To Start Production Next Month.

Geo. H. Callaghan, special representative of the Smith Syndicate of Los Angeles, which company has recently entered the picture producing field with ZaSu Pitts as its first star, announces that production activities will commence next month in its new studios now under construction in Hollywood. Miss Pitts is now finishing her last picture for Brentwood.

Sara Nason, who is responsible for most of Miss Pitts' successes, while under the Brentwood banner, has been engaged by the Smith Syndicate to write stories especially adapted to the star's personality.

Marshall Neilan Leases Studios in Hollywood

MARSHALL NEILAN, whose initial independent production, "The River's End," by James Oliver Curwood, will soon have its first showing in every large city of the United States, has just completed a deal with John Jasper, manager of the Hollywood Studios, Inc., on Santa Monica Boulevard, which provides that Mr. Neilan shall have the exclusive use of one of the big stages for a period of six months. At the end of this time it is expected that the new Neilan studios will be ready for occupancy. This puts an end to the rumor that the director-producer would soon come east to produce.

The Hollywood plant is one of the best and most modernly equipped in the country. It was built in 1919 under the supervision of Mr. Jasper. It consists of four separate units, each unit comprising a light and dark stage, individual lighting equipment, a projection room and a set of offices for carrying on the business affairs of the producing company.

The Neilan organization will take over one entire unit and the young producer is enthusiastic over the prospects of filming his pictures for the next six months without the delays which have handicapped him in the past because of the lack of available studio space.

New York Fire Fighters to Be Pollar's Guests

GENE POLLAR, back in New York from California, where he recently completed the star role in Numa Pictures Corporation's production of "The Return of Tarzan," will be host to officials and members of the Hook and Ladder Company, No. 20, of the New York Fire Department located at 157 Mercer street, at a special showing of the film, shortly. The affair is in recognition of the interest shown Mr. Pollar by these men who were, for a vigorous season, co-workers with him in the exciting task of guarding one of the most dangerous fire districts in the entire city.

Sought Genuine Thrills.

Mr. Pollar's enrollment as a member of the Fire Department followed an examination in which the big fellow received a 100 per cent. rating. It took place about three years ago, when the actor, bored with the imitation heroics and the uncertainties of screen and stage activities, decided that he must have some of the genuine thrills that he had been imitating so successfully.

Mr. Pollar left the Department to enlist in the United States Army where he saw nineteen months of service.

His guest list for the coming showing is headed by Chief of the Department John Kenlon, Deputy Chief H. B. Helm, Captain Edwin Hotchkiss and Captain Edward Harmon.

Carlin Joins Metro Publicity Staff.

George A. Carlin, until recently of the editorial staff of The Evening Sun, has joined the publicity department of Metro Pictures Corporation, under J. E. D. Meador, which is composed entirely of newspaper men. He is another addition to the former service men on the staff, having served a year in France as sergeant with the First Army Headquarters Regiment. He was admitted to the New York bar on his return from overseas. He passed his bar examinations in 1917, after he had enlisted in the Forty-seventh New York Infantry on his graduation from Fordham Law School.

EARLY reports from branch managers of Pathe Exchange, Inc., indicate that "In Walked Mary," the Albert Capellani production featuring June Caprice, will be put down in the records as the third great success of the director in the last year. Prerelease showings to exhibitors have resulted in important bookings and predictions that it would meet with the same popular favor as "Oh, Boy!" and "The Virtuous Model."

All of the clever human touches and the witty action that has marked the work of the director in past productions is given play in "In Walked Mary," and June Caprice delightfully interprets the spirit of the story. It is the romance of a Southern girl and a Northern boy and their happening together at times when each one needed the other.

The settings and the physical characteristics of the production, also, bear all remarks of a typical Capellani production. The interiors are in the best taste, with a richness not overplayed; the outdoor scenes were selected with the discrimination of the director.

Enthusiastic Exhibitors Want More "Pollyanna"

THE popularity of "Pollyanna," Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists, is best exemplified in the fact that it has not only broken box-office records in many sections of the country, but that there has arrived already in the home office of the corporation numerous requests for extended runs and repeat bookings on the production, from exhibitors who have made exceptionally successful engagements out of the picture.

Will D. Harris of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, is exceedingly enthusiastic over the two weeks' engagement of "Pollyanna" and at the conclusion of it he wired United Artists to this effect: "Closed Mary Pickford in 'Pollyanna' last night after wonderful two weeks of good business. There was not one day of even fair weather, cold, rain, snow, slush, icy streets. Almost impassable. Send me contracts for her next production and also contracts for return engagement of 'Pollyanna' to be shown when the sun shines."

A wire was received from the Cabrillo Theatre, San Diego, Cal., to the effect that the management would hold "Pollyanna" over for a second week, since it was impossible for them to accommodate the tremendous crowds during the first week's engagement.

Canadian Parliament May Abolish Reel Tax and Raise Import Tariff

THERE is every prospect that the Canadian Parliament, at its session which opens at Ottawa, Ontario, on February 26, will take up the questions of re-arranging the tariff on moving picture imports into Canada. It has already been intimated that this tariff will be adjusted so that British moving pictures will be given decisive preference. This development has been assured to representatives of exhibitor associations who have interviewed a cabinet minister with regard to government taxation.

Another promise is that the special federal tax of 15 cents a reel a day will be abolished entirely and that the revenue from this source will be made up by an increase in the duty on moving picture prints from the United States. It has been intimated that there will be no increase on the duty on moving pictures from Great Britain, and if this plan is followed out there will probably be considerable preference in favor of British productions.

England May Have Preference.

Secretary Thomas Scott, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Ontario, has been urging that the duty on British film imports into Canada be removed entirely so that the English producers would have free access to the Canadian market. Incidentally, the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., of Toronto and Montreal, which is a subsidiary company of the Exhibitors Association in Ontario, has contracted for the Canadian rights of eight British features, the first of which "Romany Lass," has already been presented in a number of Ontario theatres. More of these English productions are to be secured by the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, it is intimated.

Sir Henry Drayton, the federal minister of finance, is the government representative who has prospective tariff changes in hand, and it has been intimated that one of his important proposals will be the abolishment of the so-called reel tax and the increase in the duty on American pictures. Up to the time that Sir Henry reached the decision to repeal the reel tax, exhibitors in all parts of the country made loud complaints against the injustice of the law, inasmuch as they were paying, in some cases, a larger reel tax total than the rental of their theatres by the year.

Promise Great Things for New Fox Feature

REPORTS from the West Coast studios of Fox Film Corporation, where the staging of "The Orphan" is under way, indicate that this first effort of William Farnum since his return to California will be flawless in its "atmosphere." Under direction of J. Gordon Edwards, who has an enviable reputation for consistently faithful effects, there is every reason to believe that the finished product will justify the reports.

Farnum at Palm Springs.

William Farnum and a company of 100 persons began work at Palm Springs on this story from the pen of Clarence E. Mulford. With a view to absolute authenticity of setting, an area of many miles around Los Angeles was canvassed painstakingly to find the right location. When the technical director had decided upon the types of houses to be used in "The Orphan," he had his plans duplicated for the interior scenes, which are to be done at the Fox studios in Hollywood.

The screen advent of "The Orphan" is awaited with great interest. The story is said to be tensely dramatic and to constitute a fine vehicle for the actor of manly characters marked by strength, passion and intense sympathy.

Reports from Select Exchanges Show Increase in Bookings and Service

THE severe winter has had little or no effect on the efficiency of the Select branch office forces, a statement from the home office contends. In fact, the statement says, the general trend of the exchanges is toward a constant increase in efficiency and service to the exhibitor.

From Philadelphia comes the report that four new towns were added to the list of that exchange. E. L. Castor, salesman, succeeded in booking Select productions in the four towns that heretofore had not been on the Select "map." Additional prints were called for by the Philadelphia office on "The Isle of Conquest," the Norma Talmadge Special production. The report says there is an extraordinary demand for this production in all parts of Pennsylvania. "A Regular Girl" headlined the bill at the Alleghany Theatre two weeks ago and last week this theatre showed the Owen Moore release, "Piccadilly Jim." The Alleghany is the largest theatre in Philadelphia.

Closes for Two Washington Houses.

A report from Seattle states that the two towns, Raymond and South Bend, Washington, had not shown Select Pictures for two years but that Salesman Knox of the Seattle office recently succeeded in signing the Reizner theatres in the two towns for two Select pictures a week, under a contract covering several months. Branch Manager Rennie, of Seattle, is at the present time touring Montana and his reports indicate an increase in Select's business in that state.

Exploitation representative J. H. Lichtenstein of the Pittsburgh office assisted in putting over the Talmadge production, "She Loves and Lies," which played at the Olympic and Cameraphone theatres last week and is now busy exploiting "Greater Than Flame," the Elaine Hammerstein release, which is showing at the same houses this week.

The Omaha office reports the success of Jake Cohn, who recently was appointed Eastern Iowa representative, in closing an unusual number of excellent contracts. These are not only on the regular productions but on the Specials as well.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S second attraction to be distributed by First National Exhibitors Circuit will be entitled "Fires of Love" and will be released in March. The greater portion of this production was screened on the Island of New Providence in the Bahama Islands, and it during the cruise to this location that the entire Griffith party was swept into the galé that for nineteen hours threatened their lives.

The cast for "Fires Of Love" is comprised of many Griffith favorites whose absence from the screen, it is understood, was for the extreme purpose of rendering their work fresher and more vivid in this attraction. Clarine Seymour, of "Cutie Beautiful" fame, has the role of her career in this production and among others who have prominent parts are Richard Barthelmess, Creighton Hale, Anders Randolph, Kate Bruce, Porter Strong, Herbert Sutch, Florence Short, Walter James, Thomas Carr, Adolphe Lestina and Ben Grauer.

Though not finally completed, "Fires of Love" is fast approaching the "finishing touches" stage.

Army Cameraman Joins Fox News Office Staff

HAVING travelled 17,000 miles in Russia as a captain in the signal corps of the United States army, during which journey he obtained priceless motion picture views of the doings of the Bolsheviki, the Czecho-Slovak soldiers and the scenes of the place where the Czar and his family were killed, Howard P. Kingsmore has been brought by Fox News to New York City where he has joined the home office staff of news cameramen. Kingsmore, who formerly lived in Philadelphia, was decorated by Admiral Kolchak, late leader of the anti-Bolsheviki forces in Siberia, receiving the Order of St. George.

Major Howard Price Kingsmore.

Few men have had an opportunity to see Russia in its darkest days so thoroughly as did Kingsmore. The cameraman, although honorably discharged from the army with the grade of captain, was commissioned a major in the Reserve Corps in recognition of his services in obtaining remarkable motion pictures in the heart of Russia.

"In November, 1918," says Mr. Kingsmore, "I boarded a Red Cross train at Vladivostok bound for Ekaterinburg, a distance of 6,000 miles. The train was made up of twenty-five freight cars filled with food, clothing and medicine for the thousands upon thousands of destitute refugees in the interior of Siberia and Russia proper. We were under way nearly a month before we reached Omsk, the headquarters of Admiral Kolchak.

"Part of the supplies were unloaded at Omsk; the rest was sent on toward Ekaterinburg, 1,000 miles farther west. It took us nine weeks of riding to get to Ekaterinburg. Our accommodations on the train were of the poorest sort."

Following the showing last week of the first Kaufman Weekly entitled "Little Red Riding Hood," which Lewis J. Selznick will present through Select Pictures, it is announced that the fifth of the Kaufman editorials is about to be screened at the Selznick Bronx studios.

"Easy Money" will be started soon under the direction of John Lopez and William Duffy, assistant director. George Wright and Louise Lee play the leading roles. The scenario is by Merle Johnson.

"Rich Man, Poor Man, Beggar Man," the fourth Kaufman Weekly was finished recently, and has gone into the cutting room. Mr. Wright and Miss Lee also play the leads in this.

"Other Men's Shoes" Goes Big in the Larger Cities

"OTHER MEN'S SHOES," Edgar Lewis's first big production for Pathe release, in the initial week of its distribution has proved to be one of the best box-office attractions which Pathe has ever issued. Reports to the home office indicate that the most important first-run theatres in the United States are booking "Other Men's Shoes" for extended runs. The New York, Chicago and Indianapolis exchanges are particularly active in the booking of the Lewis extra special.

Among the big theatres booked out of Chicago are the Jefferson, Fort Wayne; Centennial, Warsaw, Ind.; West, Galesburg, Ill.; Avoy, Moline, Ill.; Liberty, Davenport; Orpheum, Rockford, Ill., and Strand, Freeport, Ill. These are all first-run accounts. Indianapolis records the booking of the Lewis attraction by the Liberty, Terre Haute; Murette, Richmond, Ind., and Wyaor-Grand, Muncie's leading screen palace. The Liberty, Spokane, will feature it as will the Pinney, of Boise, and the Burley, of Burley, Ia.

In New York, in addition to booking the foremost of the Loew and Fox theatres, the local exchange has placed the production in the entire M. & S. Circuit, the Plaza, B. F. Keith's Prospect, Pastime, National Winter Garden, Majestic, Keystone, West End, Fourteenth Street Theatre, Poli's Garden, Waterbury, Conn.; Strand, Bayonne; Empire, Port Richmond; Academy, Jersey City; Steinway, Astoria; the entire David Picker Circuit; the Beverly and the Crescent.

D. C. Naegley, who also operates the Opera House, Columbia, Pa., has taken over the Star Theatre, in that town, with Charles Shirley, his associate in both enterprises.

Rotchford Remembered on Birthday.

J. J. Rotchford, assistant to General Manager Sam E. Morris of Selznick Pictures, is wearing a new watch and chain as a silent reminder that he has passed another milestone upon the highway of life.

Upon Mr. Rotchford's birthday, a few days before the country solemnized the anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth, Mr. Rotchford was presented with the watch and chain by the branch managers of Select as a token of their esteem. The presentation speech was made by Morris Safier, of the Select New Haven branch.

Bert Lytell Will Do "The Temple of Dawn"

"THE TEMPLE OF DAWN," a novel by the young Australian author, I. A. R. Wylie, will be Bert Lytell's next Screen Classics, Inc., production following "Alias Jimmy Valentine," Metro officials announce. Arthur Zellner of the Metro scenario department has started work on a scenarioization of the novel.

"The Temple of Dawn" is the story of an English army officer, Leigh Dering by name, who through unfortunate circumstances becomes an outcast in India and later finds himself.

Miss Wylie is the author of "Towards Morning," a novel of the world war that attracted much attention. "Stronger Than Death," Nazimova's newest Metro release, was adapted from a novel by Miss Wylie.

Bert Lytell is now on his sixth week picturizing "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the famous Paul Armstrong stage play. He expects to complete the production in four weeks more. Production of "The Temple of Dawn" will be started immediately following the completion of "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

Kunsky Takes Over the De Luxe Theatre, Detroit

THE name of John H. Kunsky of Detroit again comes to the fore in the announcement of the taking over by Mr. Kunsky of the DeLuxe Theatre from its present operating company. The DeLuxe, recognized as perhaps the most beautiful of all residential theatres in the "city of the straits" adds one more to the already extensive chain of Detroit theatres operated by Mr. Kunsky and marks but one of a chain of several new theatres to be operated under the Kunsky banner.

With a capacity of 1,800 and with everything that money can purchase in the way of luxury and comfort, the DeLuxe operates daily to a clientele composed mainly of residents of the "Indian Village," Detroit's most exclusive residential district. It will be noted that the auditorium of the DeLuxe is constructed upon the Roman Coliseum style, thus allowing for added capacity and making the main floor and balcony one, thus eliminating much of the trouble experienced by the average theatre in inducing its patrons to be seated in the balcony.

Mrs. Sidney Drew Returns to Films in Third of Her Pathe Comedies

IN response to the written requests of thousands of motion picture patrons and the demands of hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country, Mrs. Sidney Drew has decided to return to the screen. She will begin work at once on the third comedy of the Mrs. Sidney Drew series and her initial appearance upon her return will be in this production, "The Emotional Miss Vaughn." The decision gives thousands of exhibitors who have booked her entire series of comedies an unexpected asset.

It was the original intention of Mrs. Drew to refrain from a screen appearance for some time, but the third picture of the series carries a part exactly suited to her talent, and this fact, coupled with the extraordinary demand for her, decided her. Her reappearance adds the finishing touch to the remarkable series of pictures which she is creating to fill the long-felt want for comedies made famous by the late Sidney Drew and Mrs. Drew.

Mrs. Sidney Drew.
Returns to acting roles in her comedies for Pathe.

Mrs. Drew the Guiding Power.

In all of her work with her late husband, and in the first two comedies of the present series, Mrs. Drew was the guiding power. She wrote, directed and appeared in the first Drew comedies, and in the new series she has adapted for the screen the "After-Thirty Stories" of Julian Street and has personally supervised the direction of the first two pictures, "The Charming Mrs. Chase" and "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton," in which John Cumberland will also appear in the third comedy.

"The Charming Mrs. Chase" is meeting with remarkable success with exhibitors in every territory. In New York City it makes its initial appearance at the Capitol Theatre and the management of that important picture house has booked the entire series. The finest theatres in the country contracted for the entire series without knowing that Mrs. Drew herself would be seen in some of the comedies, and the Pathe offices have received a multitude of telegrams of congratulations on the first comedy.

The second picture, "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton," has already been completed, and at the first showing it was generally agreed that it was an even better production than the first. The story is of the "spring urge," making restless the hearts of a nice married couple.

Harry McRae Webster to Direct "Determination"

HARRY McRAE WEBSTER has arrived in Washington with John J. Livingston, one of the largest motion picture representatives in the world, and has closed a contract with Capt. F. F. Stoll, author of "Determination," to direct the production of this photoplay. Mr. Webster has directed the following stars in features: Dorothy Dalton, Gloria Swanson, Beverly Bayne, Bryant Washburn, Dorothy Phillips, Delores Cassenelli, Francis X. Bushman, William Farnum, Louise Glaum, Stuart Holmes, King Baggot, E. K. Lincoln and many other well-known stars.

"Determination" is being produced by the United States Photo Play Corporation and actual production will start on June 1 at Grantwood, N. J. Between now and that date Capt. Stoll and Mr. Webster will be getting everything in readiness for this production. There will be an all-star cast. It will take at least eight months to produce "Determination," then the company will follow with "The Soul of Man," "The Home of Man" and "Deception," all ten-reel photoplays.

Jay Kaufman, celebrated "round-the-towner" of the Evening Globe, aid the young Pathe favorite a high compliment, when he wrote:

A system of operation has been inaugurated whereby the exhibitor is in direct contact with a Fox manager precisely as in the United States, and this has resulted in a cordial relationship which has increased still further the Fox business in the outside markets.

During his tour Mr. Sheehan will arrange for additional facilities for these branches to keep pace with their growth. Mark Goldaine, who has been directing Neal Burns since he joined the National staff, will continue to handle this rising young comedian, who will be supported by Lucille Rubey, formerly the Paramount-Artcraft cross-country girl.

Pathe Promises April 4 Release for Serial, "Trailed by Three"

PATHE announces that "Trailed by Three," the fifteen-episode serial produced by Arthur F. Beck, in which Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann are co-starred, has been chosen to follow "The Adventures of Ruth" on the program of Pathe serial offerings and will be released on April 4.

The story and scenario are by Charles Turner Dazey, author of the famous stage success, "In Old Kentucky," and numerous screen successes, among them "Wolf Lowry," starring William S. Hart, and the Douglas Fairbanks feature, "Manhattan Madness."

The main line of action developing through the fifteen chapters of "Trailed by Three" centers about a priceless rope of pearls which represents the ransom of a tribe of South Sea Islanders from a group of villains practicing oppressions and cruelties of the typically serialesque character. The group is made up of three men who keep diligently on the trail, hence the title.

The characters are involved in a series of adventures which carry them from New York to the Arizona desert, San Francisco's Chinatown, an island in the South Pacific and thence to the bizarre and colorful atmosphere of India.

Vekroff the Director.

Perry Vekroff directed the production. Mr. Vekroff has directed for American Kinemacolor, Metro and Vitagraph. He was selected for this serial because of his familiarity with peoples and customs of the far East. Mr. Vekroff was born in Alexandria, Egypt; educated in Constantinople, and studied law and dramatic art at the University of Sofia, Bulgaria. His record with American producers as a director is one of distinction.

The supporting cast includes such well known actors as John Webb Dillion, Wilfred Lytell William Welch and Ethel Kay. Important parts are played by the well-known Chinese actor, Sam Kim, and an 11-year-old Oriental child prodigy whose name is May Toy. Sam Kim also assisted in the supervision of costuming and make-up of characters playing in the scenes laid in Chinatown in San Francisco.

Pathe has completed plans for an extensive advertising and exploitation campaign. "Trailed by Three" is to publicise on the same big scale accorded every Pathe serial. It is announced that "Trailed by Three" is a serial lending itself particularly well to novel exploitation ideas, and Pathe promises many suggestions and plans to aid the exhibitor.

Chaplin Film Blocks Traffic.

For the first time in the theatrical history of Atlanta, Ga., local police reserves were called out five different times to regulate traffic conditions about the Criterion Theatre during the showing of "A Day's Pleasure," Charlie Chaplin's fourth million dollar comedy released by First National Exhibitors Circuit.

"No matter how we judge it," said Willard Patterson, manager of the Criterion, "Charles Chaplin has pulled his very best picture this time. The box office receipts say so and there is no higher supreme judge than the grand total line."

Long Missing Cameraman Escapes from Bolsheviki

FEARS for the safety of Victor O. Kubes, a New Yorker, missing for months in the heart of Soviet Russia, were allayed on February 14 when a cable was received from Paris stating that Kubes had telegraphed from Berlin that he was on his way to the French capital. Kubes, formerly a lieutenant in the U. S. army signal corps, was a cameraman for Fox News, and left Paris October 26 last to try to make his way to the stronghold of the Bolsheviki.

It was known that he had succeeded in entering Russia by way of Finland, but after that no word was received from him. Alarmed by his silence of months, Fox News recently telegraphed to the State Department in Washington, requesting that the government institute a search for him.

In his message to the Paris office of Fox Film Corporation, Kubes said briefly that his journey had been full of excitement and hinted he had reached Germany only after the greatest difficulties.

Naulty, studio general manager, and will be a permanent feature.

"The Lone Wolf" Still Booking.

"The Lone Wolf," Select release starring Bert Lytell, which was distributed to exhibitors throughout the country some time ago, has shown a big spurt in bookings recently, according to reports from the Select offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

This increase in the popularity of the film is attributed by Lewis J. Selznick to the declaration which has been made that "The Lone Wolf" is one of the best productions that Bert Lytell has appeared in. The box office reports and exhibitor satisfaction are cited as ample proof that this is so.

Parker Read, Jr., star to stay over for the premiere of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" at the Newman Theatre. Ben Blotcky, the Hodkinson exchange manager, arranged the reception. In Albuquerque, N. M., and in Chicago, where S. J. Goldman, the Hodkinson representative, met Miss Glaum, the star also was warmly acclaimed.

New J. Warren Kerrigan Production, "$30,000," Has Thrills and Laughs

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces for February 29, release J. Warren Kerrigan's fifth in his series of Bobert Brunton productions, "$30,000," a gripping, fast-moving adventure story of New York society life by H. B. Daniel, author of a dozen popular novels, including "Timber McKee," "What's Money?" and "Snobs.'

It is said that "$30,000" is the liveliest vehicle in which Mr. Kerrigan has been seen in many a day, the role of John Trask giving the popular star many opportunities to revel in that brand of comedy and dramatic situations that has won for him the big popularity he enjoys among patrons of the cinema. Besides cohesive action and a striking plot, "$30,000" is rich in rollicking humor.

Some of the most popular players of the stage and screen support Mr. Kerrigan in the new production. Fritzi Brunette, the clever little heroine of "The Lord Loves the Irish" and "Live Sparks," is again seen in the feminine lead. Others in the cast are Nancy Chase, an English beauty late of the London stage, who makes her first appearance on the screen; Joseph J. Dowling, who played the patriarch in "The Miracle Man," Thomas Guise, Arthur Millette and Carl Stockdale.

Leah Baird Completes Latest Hodkinson Picture

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE'S "Cynthia of the Minute," Leah Baird's fourth in her series of Artco productions for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, has been completed at the Leah Baird studios, where it is now in the cutting stage.

The final scenes were taken at the Cliffside, N. J., studios following the return of Miss Baird and her company from Tampa, Fla., where the many thrills, always looked for in a Louis Joseph Vance story, were photographed. Not all of the tense situations were enacted in the South, however, much of the shipboard action having been taken aboard the former German liner Kronz Prinz Wilhelm in the Hudson River, before the vessel was turned over to the Cunard line.

Players of nation-wide repute were selected by Mr. Beck to support Miss Baird in "Cynthia of the Minute." Hugh Thompson, an actor with a long list of successful achievements, is Miss Baird's leading man. Burr McIntosh was assigned one of the outstanding roles. Others who support the star are Alexander Gaden, erstwhile leading man for Doris Kenyon in "The Bandbox" and later with Miss Baird in "The Capitol"; Ruby Hoffman, Matilda Brundage, William Welsh and John Webb Dillion.

"Cynthia of the Minute" has to do with the extraordinary adventures of a young American girl born to good social position and wealth, who finds herself by the exigencies of fate compelled to fight her own battle against a band of crooks bent on securing possession of her property and ready to use any foul means to achieve their ends.

"The Fortune Teller" To Be Released by Robertson-Cole as a Special

THE FORTUNE TELLER," the A. H. Woods dramatic production which played a record run in New York City and startled the country on tour, will shortly be given to the screen world by Robertson-Cole as an "extra special." This big production directed by Albert Capellani was obtained by Roberston-Cole this week. Marjorie Rambeau acts the leading role. She is supported by a cast of notable stage and screen artists.

"'The Fortune Teller' is without doubt the most elaborate and best staged film thus secured by Robertson-Cole," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. "The picture is a dramatic setting of a play of the same name which had a continued run not only in New York City but in every large city in the United States.

"In this production de luxe, Albert Capellani outdid himself. It is true, he had a marvelous story to work with and a star who has been proved as one of the best drawing cards both on the legitimate stage and on the silver sheet but, on the other hand, his artistic touches, together with the elaborate scenes and dramatic settings, has stamped this as one of the best productions given to the picture field.

Wide Exploitation Planned.

"When we say that it is the greatest picture Robertson-Cole has ever been fortunate enough to release, we are not boasting—we want the exhibitor to know that the stamp of approval of this concern has made this not only a special but an 'extra special' feature production. This is the first time in the history of this corporation that we have given the trade an 'extra special.'

"'The Fortune Teller' will be exploited in the most thorough manner. The caliber of the picture will be told in national advertising; and its exploitation possibilities explained in publicity and advertising matter.

"The press campaign books, the lobby and the paper will be a surprise in motion picture work. We know what we have in this picture and we are not going to allow money or time to stand in the way of making this the biggest box office attraction of the times."

Boston Will Have Second Largest Theatre in America

PLANS for a new moving picture theatre, the largest in New England, were revealed with the announcement of the sale of the Seigal department store building, Washington and Essex streets, Boston. The great building, which has been vacant for several years, was sold by the department store trust to Benjamin A. Prager, of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation; Max Mitchell, president of the Cosmopolitan Trust Company; Adolph Leve, of the New England Waste Company; L. Agoos and L. Agoos Company, wholesale leather merchants, and Reuben Broomfield, president of the Stoughton Mills.

Announcing that the eight-story $4,100,000 vacant store is to be converted into a motion picture theatre and a business producing building, the new owners said it is their intention to devote the rear portion of the building to a motion picture theatre that will be superior in appointments to any in the country. Its seating capacity will be 4,000, being exceeded in this respect by only one theatre in America, the new Capitol in New York City. The theatre will occupy part of the basement and sections of the first, second and third floors.

This theatre, the largest in New England, will fill a long felt want and will give the public a motion picture house unexcelled by any in America in attractions and equipment. It will show the highest class first-run pictures obtainable and will offer other features unique in the amusement business of New England. Just how the remainder of the building will be utilized has not been fully decided.

Maddened Steer Injures Joe Ryan, Delaying Exciting Vitagraph Serial

A MADDENED steer, with his neck twisted to the breaking point, several days ago made a last lurch and heave that hurled a Vitagraph serial many weeks out of its schedule. Joe Ryan, known widely as "the best loved villain on the screen," suffered the direct force of the steer's wrath.

Ryan lies bedridden with three broken ribs and contusions that will permit all the steers in California to breathe more easily for some time. His injuries are described as severe but not serious. They have caused Vitagraph, however, to issue formal announcement that the release date on the forthcoming Joe Ryan-Jean Paige serial is indefinitely postponed.

Joe Ryan was being raised, together with Jean Paige, the winsome little leading woman of many Vitagraph features, to serial stardom for the first time by this production. He has appeared as leading heavy in several of Vitagraph's recent serials.

The exploit of the new star and the healthy steer was being enacted as part of the third episode. The erstwhile film villain has a penchant for steer fighting. He has had long training on the plains and in his film characters as a handler of cloven-footed animals.

When the serial ultimately is resumed and completed, the actual scene of Ryan's fight with the steer will probably appear as one of its supreme high lights. The encounter lasted forty minutes and the final climax brought the complete defeat of the steer even more dramatically than the story required. For the steer died.

WHAT the Republic Distributing Corporation considers one of its most important purchases was announced when it became known that "The Great Shadow," said to be a powerful picture depicting the general social unrest of today, was bought from the Adanac Production Company for release at an early date.

While the picture is declared to be in no sense propaganda, it is described as timely in theme, vigorous in treatment and absolutely convincing.

While the play teaches the folly of capital and labor, who depend much upon each other, getting into a tangle, it also shows the logical and happy conclusion when the country recovers from a species of insanity.

Selznick Engages Red Eagle.

The Selznick studio roster of players now contains the name of a man whose ancestors date back farther in American history than those of any other American stage or screen star, or player.

This personage is Red Eagle, a real Indian who is a direct descendant of the chief of one of the oldest tribes in America. He has been engaged for the role of Payatuk in the new Ralph Ince special production for Selznick which is titled "The Law Bringers."

Charles Ray Studios Ready for Production

WITH a statement from Charles Ray promising exhibitors and public the best efforts of his organization comes the news that the studios of the Charles Ray productions in Los Angeles will be ready for actual production by the time Moving Picture World reaches subscribers.

Steady progress has been made on the extensive alterations and additions to the original Fleming street studios which will house the new Ray products, and the plant will be cleared for action in time to conclude plans for the first work of the star. Ray is enjoying a much needed vacation away from Los Angeles and will return to commence independent production in the latter part of the month.

Jerome Storm, who has declared his intention of continuing as director of the star, is already on the scene, making arrangements for the initial First National attraction in which the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation will present the star. Mr. Ray is highly pleased to have obtained the services of Director Storm, who has long been a close associate of the actor. Mr. Ray believes that co-operation between all the vital factors in the making of photoplays is the first law of successful production, and that with such support he can safely promise both exhibitors and public even better and more entertaining pictures than he has done in the past.

DESPITE one of the most severe snowstorms which New York City has experienced in years, William Fox, overcoming all traffic obstacles, introduced to the trade press on Thursday, February 5, the all-star super-production of Clemenceau's great and only story, "The Strongest."

With all traffic lines blocked between the big new Fox studio building in West Fifty-fifth street, into which Fox Film Corporation recently moved, and the Fox laboratories at Fort Lee, the outlook for the trade showing of this widely heralded special looked rather dark. Mr. Fox, however, came to the aid of the projection department by turning over his private car, and in this high-powered machine the Fox messenger raced from the new building northward to the Fort Lee ferry in time to connect with one of the few boats that were kept running.

The trade paper reviewers, meanwhile, were entertained by the current issue of Fox News, a Sunshine Comedy entitled "Her Naughty Wink" and the latest Bud Fisher Animated Cartoon starring Mutt and Jeff in a timely subject called "I'm Ringing Your Party." With these three interesting features before them, the reviewers passed the time pleasantly.

A Sensational Entry.

The company's messenger on his return trip raced from the Fort Lee studios to the Fifty-fifth street building through snowbanks wheel-high, testing the power of the engine to the last ounce. Finally with his engine smoking hot, and snow piled high on all exposed portions of the big machine, Mr. Fox's chauffeur swung the car onto the Fifty-sixth street ramp which leads to the second floor of the big structure, and the messenger rushed in with the film. It was a sensational introduction for the sensational film.

The production of "The Strongest" at once impressed all who saw it as distinctive and without fault as regards the detail of its French settings. Another notable feature observed was the skilful performance of the entire cast, an all-star cast including Harrison Hunter, Carlo Liten, Georgette Gauthier de Trigny, C. A. de Lima, Jean Gauthier de Trigny, Florence Malone, Renee Adoree and the young Hal Horne, a juvenile who shows great promise.

Opinions of the reviewers regarding the Fox version of the great Clemenceau's book are more than gratifying to the producer and his organization, and the effect has already been felt in the increased demand for first runs on this special.

Arrange Foreign Distribution.

Arrangements have been made for shipment of a quantity of prints of "The Strongest" to France, England, Russia, Germany and other continental countries whose vital interest in the theme of the story finds its germ in the conditions resulting from the recent world war. Already the Fox representatives in these countries have reported the widest interest among the trade, and the international publicity which has been given this film has awakened exhibitors in districts where the big special type of screen entertainments never has been shown.

"The Strongest" is the fourth of the big Fox specials for the 1919-1920 season, the others being "Evangeline," "Checkers" and "Should a Husband Forgive?" A print of "The Strongest" complete, with the finished art titles executed in French, has already arrived in France on its way to the home of the celebrated "tiger of France." The Paris representative of Fox Film Corporation also is on his way to confer with the great statesman, and will cable the expressed opinion of the author concerning the Fox Film production of his only novel.

Wolfberg Fights Censorship Bill.

Harris P. Wolfberg, manager of the Cincinnati exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is martialing the forces of his exhibitors through Kentucky to make a determined fight against the state censorship bill introduced in the Kentucky Legislature by Representative T. C. Pryne of Lee County, Kentucky. Immediately upon learning of the censorship movement, Mr. Wolfberg sent out letters to every Paramount-Artcraft exhibitor in Kentucky urging them to have their senators and representatives take a stand against the censorship, outlining the dangers and difficulties surrounding the plan.

Exhibitors Already Begin Booking "Deadlier Sex"

THE announcement of March 28 as the release date of the Blanche Sweet production, "The Deadlier Sex," has brought exhibitors throughout the United States into the Pathe branch offices to book the attraction. Pathe is just starting on the sales campaign for the production and the demand at this time is therefore not due to sales effort but is caused by the remarkable results achieved everywhere by Blanche Sweet in "A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy."

In "The Deadlier Sex" Miss Sweet has of course, the advantage of a story by Bayard Veiller, author of "The Thirteenth Chair," another of the great successes of the year. In the production Miss Sweet appears in an entirely different role than any in which she has been seen in some time, that of a young woman who undertakes to run her father's railroad after his death. Wall Street railroad wreckers are after the property and in a battle of wits she proves herself the master of the situation.

Mahlon Hamilton, Miss Sweet's leading man, the Wall Street magnate, gives a fine performance of the man who couldn't be tamed. Russell Simpson, who has appeared in many notable productions and was last seen with Miss Sweet in "Fighting Cressy," is also in the cast. Walter Perry, Boris Karloff, Winter Hall and Roy Laidlaw are among others who strengthen the production.

Legislature at Annapolis Hears Arguments Favoring Sunday Opening

THE advocates of the George D. Iverson, Jr., bill, which will permit the opening of moving picture theatres on Sunday after 2 p. m., were heard by the House Judiciary Committee on Wednesday morning, February 11, at Annapolis, Md. Some of the facts brought out at the hearing were that minor crimes are lessened by moving pictures on Sunday, that the education of people and the Americanization of aliens is aided by the screen and that the people want the moving pictures on Sunday.

The principal speakers were Elmer J. Cook, representing the Whitehurst Theatrical Enterprises, of Baltimore, including the New, Garden, Parkway and New Century theatres; Charles E. Whitehurst, of the Whitehurst interests; George A. McDermitt, manager of Loew's Hippodrome; Howard Stanford, a citizen who said he represented the unorganized majority; Edward Hirsh, who represented the Castelberg interests operating the Strand Theatre, and D. C. Creecy, also appearing as a citizen, who was the attorney who defended the "Blue Law" cases recently heard in Baltimore.

Predict Favorable Action.

It was predicted that the bill permitting the Sunday opening of moving picture theatres would be reported favorably by members of the committee after the hearing.

The willingness to submit the matter to a referendum of the voters was expressed by all present. When questioned by Mr. Webb, a member of the Judiciary Committee, as to whether the employes of the moving picture theatres would be obliged to work seven days a week if the bill should be passed, Mr. Whitehurst gave an affirmative answer, but Manager McDermitt of the Hippodrome interrupted to state that it would be seen to by the union that these employes would be paid double time for Sunday work.

The county members of the Judiciary Committee were informed by Mr. Cook that no objection to the exemption of the counties from the operation of the measure would be offered by the supporters of the bill. He pleaded with the county members that Baltimore be not kept behind other cities.

The members of the committee were asked to visit the moving picture theatres on any Sunday afternoon to make their own observations.

Moves Studio Headquarters from Fort Lee to the Bronx

ANNOUNCEMENT of the moving to new quarters of the Selznick eastern studios headquarters was made this week. The staff, headed by Myron Selznick and Frank J. Hampton, studio manager is now located in the former Biograph building near Crotona Park, the Bronx. The move was made with a view of increasing the efficiency of the studio staff which recently has been augmented by several capable members. In the new headquarters there will be room to accommodate not only the present staff but the larger staff which Mr. Selznick is now about to assemble.

The former headquarters at the Fort Lee studios became too small for the staff and in addition the daily trips across the Hudson river caused a delay at times which will be overcome in the new location. The address of the new headquarters is 807 East 107th street. The entire upper floor which was at one time used by the Fox company is now utilized by Myron Selznick and his staff.

P. A. Powers on Way to Coast.

P. A. Powers, treasurer, and John Brownell, scenario editor of Universal, have left for Universal City, where they will confer with West Coast officials upon many topics of immediate importance. Mr. Powers will carefully survey the situation at the Universal studios and it is expected that some interesting announcements will be the result of his trip.

Mr. Brownell, it is understood, will stay on the coast for an indefinite period, during which time he will plan for closer co-operation between the members of his staff and the directors.

Pathe Serial Sales Manager Tells of Big Demand for Dempsey Serial

EDGAR O. BROOKS, serial sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has completed his tour of the eastern branches. After visiting the cities of Boston, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Washington and Philadelphia in the interests of Pathe's new serial, "Daredevil Jack," Mr. Brooks returned to New York with the report that the Jack Dempsey starring vehicle is being looked upon generally by exchange men and exhibitors as the greatest serial Pathe has offered to date.

"I found," Mr. Brooks stated, "everywhere expectations for this new serial keyed to the highest pitch. Our branch managers to a man expressed their confidence that in 'Daredevil Jack' they had a serial production of artistic qualities and drawing power that would enable them to achieve results surpassing their best records of the past. The number of unsolicited contracts concluded and the interest shown by exhibitors in the new serial heightens the conviction that 'Daredevil Jack' will set a mark difficult for Pathe to reach with future serial offerings."

Lynch Books Serial.

Some of the contracts reported for "Daredevil Jack" include a booking for every theatre of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises for the entire Atlanta territory. The Gaiety Theatre, Cleveland, has contracted for the serial for a week's run. Some of the bigger houses in Texas which will show Jack Dempsey as a serial star are the Dixie, Galveston; Lincoln, Houston, and Grand Central, Dallas. The Sunbeam and Diamond are the Duluth, Mich., theatres which will present "Daredevil Jack" for the first run.

It is reported that practically every regular Pathe serial user in the New York territory has booked or is negotiating for the picture. Negotiations are also under way with Pantages for presentation of the serial in all that organization's theatres in the West.

The Majestic Theatre, Albany, has booked the picture for a week's run and the T. L. Kerse Theatres in Charleston, W. Va., has taken it for runs of one week. It is unprecedented for a town the size of Charleston to show each episode of a serial for a week straight.

Two Houses Change Policy.

The Hauber Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark., will present "Daredevil Jack" three days each week. Two houses in which serials have never been shown that have signed for Pathe's latest are the Klock, Pittsburg, Kan., and the Elk's Theatre, Parsons, Kan. The Model and Star, Sioux City Iowa, and the Rex Omaha Neb., are also on the list.

"Jack Dempsey as a screen star has won praise from exhibitors everywhere," said Mr. Brooks.

Plan Big Exploitation for "Smoldering Embers"

PATHE is living up to its promise to exhibitors by giving big exploitation aids to big pictures and an unusual amount of advertising will be launched for the new Frank Keenan production, "Smoldering Embers," to be released February 29. The combined efforts of the exploitation and art departments have left nothing to be desired by enterprising showmen in campaigning this new feature.

In "Smoldering Embers," Mr. Keenan, who not only stars in the play but also directed it, has endeavored to produce something different than any of his late vehicles. Getting away from political and labor dramas, the distinguished character actor appears as a wandering vagabond who returns to his former home town where the plot soon develops his past and gives him a big part to play in the life of his son. The whimsical comedy touches are something new, as undertaken by the star, and although he carries off many gripping situations, he also demonstrates he is an inimitable comedian.

As a character actor Frank Keenan has few rivals. For a supporting cast he has chosen Jay Belasco, Kate Van Buren, Lucille Ward, Russ Powell, Graham Pettie, Hardie Kirkland, Frances Raymond, Thomas Guise and Burwick Hamrick.

"12:10" Leads Republic's Films in Booking Records

IT was thought that last week was a banner week in bookings for pictures being distributed by Republic Distributing Corporation, but the sweep of the features put out by this organization not only continues to move on but is increasing in volume and number. "12:10," with Marie Doro, heads the list in popularity with "The Amazing Woman" and "The Blue Pearl" running close behind. "Girl of the Sea," the Williamsons undersea picture, featuring little Betty Hilburn, is also beginning to give a good account of itself. Its release date is March 15.

"12:10" bookings this week were in from two to four theatres in Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, New York, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Chicago Denver and Minneapolis. In New York alone there were fourteen new bookings playing the same day and date.

Boston, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Texas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Seattle and New York also took kindly to "The Blue Pearl," and "The Amazing Woman" was booked in nearly all of the houses whose owners contracted for the other productions.

Two new pictures secured by Republic recently are "The Convert of Revenge" with Grace Davison, and "An Adventuress" with Julian Eltinge.

Goldwyn's Western Studios Claim the Greatest Generating Capacity

THE installation of a 450 horsepower motor generator set at the Goldwyn studio, Culver City, Cal., gives this studio probably the greatest generating capacity of any studio in the world. This, supplemented with other generating sets already in use, gives a total capacity of 1,250 horsepower, which consumes an average of $70 worth of electricity each working day.

Carried over the mountains and valleys through huge cables suspended from lattice-work metal towers, the electricity finally reaches the new sub-station near Culver City, where these 60,000 odd volts meet with another force equally as strong, but generated at a steam-power plant nearby. This substation was constructed to meet the ever-increasing demand from the motion picture studios for adequate power service.

Continuous "Flow" Assured.

Power is furnished from this terminus of the two lines so that in case one line is interrupted the power may be directed from the other, thus assuring the studios a regular flow of "sunlight" twenty-four hours of the day. When this power reaches the studio in the form of 2,200 volts, alternating current, it passes through the large motor-generating sets which convert it to direct current, which produces a steady, even flow of light and eliminates all flickering.

The power generated by the studio generator sets is capable of furnishing lights for the five large glass-covered stages as well as for the mammoth "dark" stage, all of which have a floor space of nearly 100,000 square feet and which are continually in use by the companies producing Goldwyn pictures.

First West of Rockies.

The recent addition to the studio power plants, which are under the supervision of Louis Kolb, master electrician, is a new motor-generator set which holds the distinction of being the first of its kind to be installed west of the Rocky Mountains by the Ridgway Company of Pennsylvania, manufacturers of electrical equipment.

This generator set has a capacity of 300 kilowatts and is equipped with a 450 horse-power synchronous motor. With this generator is an immense switchboard consisting of four panels, two generating, one line and one alternating current, as well as the latest model Weston 57 instruments and all modern conveniences and mechanical effects.

Big Paris Picture Theatre Books Selznick Pictures

WITH the statement from Jean Rosen, general manager of the Select Pictures Corporation of France, that the new Select headquarters have been established in Paris comes another from the same source which states that Selznick productions have been booked in Paris' most exclusive house, the Letetia Wagram.

Export Manager Louis Brock received this information last week. The theatre is the premiere first run house in Paris and is said to be one of the finest in appointment in all France.

The new Select headquarters are on the Place Clichy. This is in the heart of the Parisian motion picture theatrical district and is of central location in the city.

Anita Stewart to Star in "The Yellow Typhoon"

A WIDELY discussed magazine story will find visualization on the screen when Louis B. Mayer presents "The Yellow Typhoon" for release through First National channels with Anita Stewart as the star.

Both the author, Harold MacGrath, and the story came in for much comment and praise when "The Yellow Typhoon" was introduced as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, about a year ago. Since then it has been published in book form and has been in great demand throughout the country.

The two leading feminine roles in the picture, both of which are played by Miss Stewart, fit the star as perfectly as though the story had been written especially for her. She will be seen as Hilda and Berta Nordstrom, twin sisters who are identical in appearance except for the color of their hair. In their natures, however, the girls present a strange contrast.

Selznick Campaign Books Now Contain Editorials

IN the evolution of the exhibitor campaign book from a conglomeration of meaningless and wasted words and phrases to a book that is of real benefit and value to exhibitors, Selznick Enterprises lays claim to the distinction of being among the first in the field.

Selznick's newest campaign book, the one for Owen Moore's production, "Sooner or Later," is probably the first supplied to an exhibitor with an editorial page incorporated. It is not a lengthy nor weighty editorial—it is an editorial for the busy exhibitor who has time only for worthwhile suggestions and helps. In the Selznick press books this editorial is carried under the head of "The Silent Partner." In the "Sooner or Later" book the Silent Partner says: "The leaders of mankind, the giants of industry, are men who not only do new things but also old things in, perhaps, a new and more efficient way. Any man may build a theatre, or rent one, equip it, project a picture upon its screen and call himself a showman. But, what kind of showman would he be? Do everything humanly possible to create public interest in your theatre and its attractions. That is your business—the business of creating public interest."

HARRY GOLDBERG, manager of the Sun Theatre in Omaha, tied up his exploitation of Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables" with three local charitable institutions through the Omaha Daily News in such a way that 500 youngsters had a free outing to see the picture.

The box office record had been smashed only the week before by "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, but "Anne of Green Gables" came within a few dollars of equalling it, according to Mr. Goldberg.

Newspaper Gladly Accepted.

Mr. Goldberg was so enthusiastic over the two successive weeks of record-breaking business that he dispatched the following wire to J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart: "At last there is a company that has solved the golden rule of what the public wants, and that company is Realart. So far as I am concerned your batting average is 1,000 per cent. My heartiest congratulations."

Exploiting "Anne of Green Gables" from the angle of its childhood appeal and the youthfulness of the star, the management of the Sun Theatre invited the Omaha Daily News to entertain a party of youngsters at its house. The News liked the idea and invited the children in the City Mission, Father Flanagan's home and the Social Settlement. R. A. Leussler, president of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Street Railway Company, notified Mr. Goldberg that he must have a hand in the business, too. He arranged to have street cars at the various institutions to carry the youngsters to the theatre.

Theatre Got Much Publicity.

The Sun Theatre received much publicity. The entertainment was arranged for January 17, the last day of the week during which the picture was shown. For the entire week of showing the News carried a front-page story of considerable length each day, in addition to granting the attraction more than the usual space in the reading notices because of its own interest in the matter.

More than two columns of front-page space were printed about the affair during the week by the newspaper. On the day of the showing the account concerning it was the featured news story. It held the entire first column on the front page for all editions of the day, and in addition was accompanied by two large four-column photographs of the youngsters, one of which showed the cars loaded with children and bearing announcements that they were to be the guests of the News at a performance of "Anne of Green Gables" at the Sun Theatre.

Mr. Goldberg prepared a special and very effective lobby display for the production. In addition, a tie-up was affected with the one book store in Omaha and with two stores having book departments.

First Gale Henry a Straight Comedy.

Gale Henry announces she will start work in a few days on the first of her new series. Four weeks have been spent in preparing the first story, which is announced as a straight human comedy, with thrills, and here and there a touch of pathos. Her new contract calls for six two-reelers a year. Miss Henry has an entire new cast engaged.

Christie Working on Five Reeler.

The first five reel picture made by Al Christie will soon be under way. It will be a comedy drama starring Charles (Chic) Sale, the vaudeville headliner, who makes his film debut in "The Smart Aleck," a picturization of Irvin Cobb's Saturday Evening Post story of that name. "The Smart Aleck" is to be made under an arrangement with the Robertson-Cole company, and will no doubt be followed by a series of Chic Sale features.

S. E. V. Taylor, Noted Playwright, Adapted New Taylor Holmes Picture

THE scenario for "The Very Idea," the second of the Broadway comedy successes in which Taylor Holmes stars on the screen, was written by S. E. V. Taylor, for several years script-writer and production adviser to D. W. Griffith, and during the war in charge of motion picture work for the United States Government. Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., is making "The Very Idea" for distribution through Metro Pictures Corporation. "The Very Idea" was adapted from the notable stage hit by William Le Baron.

S. E. V. Taylor has been playwright and production adviser to D. W. Griffith for the past two and a half years. During that period he had a personal hand in all the productions made in the D. W. Griffith studios. In addition to these, he either wrote the original stories or the scenarios of a number of productions by Mr. Griffith personally, and these include: "The Great Love," "The Greatest Thing In Life," "The Girl Who Stayed Home," "Scarlet Days" and "The Romance of Happy Valley."

Adapted "Broken Blossoms."

In association with Mr. Griffith, Mr. Taylor wrote the scenarios of "Broken Blossoms" and "True-Heart Susie." In addition to this, he also wrote the original story and scenario of "The Hun Within," produced by Chester Withey under the supervision of Mr. Griffith with Miss Dorothy Gish in the stellar role, and a number of other Dorothy Gish pictures, including "Battling Jane" and "Boots."

During the war, Mr. Taylor served as secretary of the Motion Picture War Service Association, of which D. W. Griffith was president, and Mack Sennett treasurer, and in this capacity had charge of all the motion picture work of the United States Government that was executed by the various units of the motion picture industry on the Pacific Coast.

Prior to this, Mr. Taylor had been for three years playwright and production adviser to D. W. Griffith with the Biograph Company, during which time he wrote more than 80 per cent. of the stories which were produced by the Biograph Company under Mr. Griffith's direction.

Before this, Mr. Taylor had been a writer of melodrama and vaudeville acts; also stage and stock company director in the Middle West.

"His Word of Honor" Stars Moore.

Word has been received from the West Coast that Owen More is now working with his company in "His Word of Honor," a story that was bought for him a few weeks ago by Myron Selznick, head of production of Selznick Enterprises.

This indicates that Owen Moore has finished production work on "Love Among the Chickens," which was scheduled as his third Selznick picture, following "Piccadilly Jim" and "Sooner or Later."

The Los Angeles report states that the Moore company is now in the Santa Monica valley near Los Angeles, where a country fair set has been erected.

Another Electric Sign for Selznick.

Another spot has been found along New York's great White Way for an additional electric sign. Crowded as the old thoroughfare was, room enough was discovered on the building at 727 Seventh avenue, for the erection of a big sign that will shine forth a motion picture message—and the message will be from Lewis J. Selznick, of Selznick Enterprises.

This latest electric sign to be erected by Mr. Selznick is probably one of the most intricate in design of the many in New York. Its colors will be many and its animations varied. The stars who will look down upon Seventh avenue throngs will be Owen Moore, Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien, Elaine Hammerstein, and Elsie Janis. "Selznick Pictures Create Happy Hours" is the slogan.

Fox News Cameraman Is Filming Asia Minor

THERE is much of interest to see and photograph in Smyrna and in all of Asia Minor. Viviane Whittall Adams, a Fox News camera-correspondent in the Near East, left New York early in December to return to her home in Smyrna and to take pictures there and in the Holy Land. She stopped in Italy and in Greece and now is back in Asia Minor, where she was born, her father having been an English merchant there.

Mrs. Adams writes that she expects to go to Jerusalem, boarding a train at Constantinople that will carry her through the most beautiful sections of Asia Minor and Syria. At present, she adds, the interior is overcrowded with Armenian, Greek, Syrian and Turkish refugees, all living together and helping one another while their governments are disputing about the ownership of the territory. The motion picture opportunities are unlimited, she says.

There are in Asia Minor excellent motion picture theatres of which the Turks are enthusiastic patrons. American pictures are very popular, the people tiring of heavy French and Italian films. The people there like American actors. Pearl White, Mrs. Adams finds, is a great favorite.

Blanche Sweet Picture Among the Pathe Features Scheduled for March

REPORTS from all branch offices to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., indicate a most optimistic outlook for the coming spring months, and the volume of inquiries on the three Pathe productions to be released in March foreshadows a very successful month. June Caprice in "In Walked Mary" will be released on March 7; Dolores Cassinelli in "Tarnished Reputation" is scheduel for March 14, and the Blanche Sweet Extra Special Production, "The Deadlier Sex," will go out on March 28.

"Reports from every part of the country have indicated, with certainty, that this spring would find motion pictures in greater demand than ever," said Mr. Brunet, in discussing the situation, "and we find ourselves in the very fortunate position of being ready to fill this intensified public demand with several high class pictures.

"The breaking up of the hard winter conditions, which have kept people at home, and the coming of pleasant evenings permitting people to get out to the theatres, will undoubtedly make the next few months the best of the year. Exhibitors seem to sense this and there is an aroused interest everywhere in the new productions which may be had.

June Caprice in "In Walked Mary."

"In Walked Mary" is an Albert Capellani production. It is a story of the young love of a girl of the South and a boy of the North. Mary, in the person of June Caprice, has an odd trick of appearing in the life of the boy from the North, and a romance, of odd angles and unusual thrills, has been devised under Capellani's direction.

"Tarnished Reputations" is a tense dramatic story of an innocent girl in a small town, who becomes for the moment the plaything of an artist. She is deserted by him and faces a bitter struggle for existence in the city. A false charge sends her to the reformatory for thirty days, and, upon her release, she visits the home of the judge who sentenced her and demands redress.

It is a Leonce Perret production with Dolores Cassinelli in the title role, and the artistry of both director and star are clearly evidenced in the picture.

Blanche Sweet, whose first two pictures for Pathe, "A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy," are among the big hits of the year, is seen in "The Deadlier Sex," written by Bayard Veiller and produced by Jesse D. Hampton. It is a light drama which spreads from Wall street to the North Woods in its locations, and betrays a charming new style for Mr. Veiller in the creation of plays.

Paul Brunet Announces Promotions of Employes

PAUL BRUNET, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has announced the promotion of Frank Hudson to manager of the Atlanta branch; Jack Auslet as manager of the New Orleans branch, and Arthur Miller to the important position of superintendent of the Bound Brook Laboratories. All of the men promoted come from the ranks of employes in the Pathe organization. This is in line with the Pathe policy of rewarding those who display conspicuous ability and loyalty.

Mr. Miller started with Pathe fifteen years ago in the New York office as projection operator and was transferred in 1908 to the Bound Brook Laboratories, where he worked at first in the shipping department. He has been a keen student of the mechanical end of the industry, and a year ago became assistant superintendent at Bound Brook.

For the last six months Mr. Auslet has been special feature salesman at New Orleans and he has shown splendid results in that field. He has been with Pathe for about four years. Mr. Hudson was manager of the Pathe branch office at San Francisco several years ago. After an experience with other firms, he returned to Pathe as assistant manager of the Boston branch a few months ago.

Jury in Portland Declares Confiscation of Feature Was Wrong and Restores It

By C. S. JENSEN, of JENSEN & VON HERBERG

Portland, Ore., February 18.

A LOCAL censorship ordinance has been proved in court to be imperative. The censors still maintain the right to make eliminations. The ordinance allows one individual as representating the board to eliminate or take off an entire film and control any situation as she desires.

The idea of allowing one person to tell the masses what they shall and shall not see is obnoxious, un-American and distasteful to the majority. We have proved that no legal permit has ever been issued in the nine years of local censorship.

The trouble broke over an elimination ordered by the board in "The Thirteenth Commandment." When the picture was viewed at the exchange after running two days the secretary maintained that examinations had not been made as ordered and confiscated the film in spite of the house managers asking to be allowed to make further eliminations and continue with the picture.

The film was taken off at 7 p. m. in spite of the fact the theatre was filled. Hisses and hoots followed the action.

The film was reclaimed and put back at 9 o'clock. The manager of the Paramount Exchange was arrested. The jury immediately returned verdict of not guilty and declared the film had been wrongfully confiscated.

The censor board is politically influenced and is used as a political asset by present office holders. This is what we are fighting.

The few demand stricter censorship under the present system, while the many are for a board consisting of three persons, one appointed by the city, one by the picture interests, these two to appoint the third. An ordinance to this effect will appear shortly.

Women's clubs and ministers are waging a campaign to have all films cut to suit children, when a careful computation of the attendance in our theatres shows from but 3 to 5 per cent. are children.

We are merely asking for fair and square censorship and most decidedly expect to win.

Metro Technical Expert Coming East to Prepare Studios for Big Features

M. P. STAULCUP, supervisor of art interiors for Screen Classics, Inc., is on his way from Los Angeles to New York, where he will prepare Metro's Sixty-first street studios for a number of big productions to be made there, starting with "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Metro has not used its eastern plant for more than a year. Late in the fall of 1918, because of the exigencies of the war—chiefly on account of the restrictions placed on the use of coal—the company transferred its entire producing activities to the Pacific coast after having maintained two studios in simultaneous operation. Since then other companies have from time to time made use of the Sixty-first street studios as sub-leasees.

The coming to New York of Mr. Staulcup is in line with the recent announcement by Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, that the company would resume dual production operations with the advent of spring. Maxwell Karger, director general, will make his headquarters in the metropolis.

Preparing to Film "Four Horsemen."

Preparations for the early production, with an all-star cast, of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the book by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the Spanish writer, have been under way for several weeks. June Mathis, head of the Metro scenario department, has about completed her scenario from the book; an endeavor in which she received the personal co-operation of Senor Ibanez himself.

Ina Claire, the young Belasco star now playing in "The Gold Diggers," will make her appearance before the camera for Metro at the New York studios. Miss Claire is to be starred in a screen version of "Polly with a Past," the successful farce comedy by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, authors of the current stage hit, "Adam and Eva." Miss Claire was featured in David Belasco's stage production of this comedy.

Stern Produced N. Y. U. Film

We are glad to rectify a mis-statement in our issue of last week, to the effect that the New York University endowment and pro-Americanism film was directed by Vincent Roberts.

This picture, a three-reeler, made for the University's $6,500,000 endowment campaign, was written by Mr. Roberts, but directed by I. Martin Stern. Mr. Stern, a graduate of N. Y. U., like Mr. Roberts, had complete supervision of the production of the picture.

Mr. Stern, it will be remembered, put over the exploitation of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," at the Broadway last summer. He will be connected with the second N. Y. U. production, a five-reel college and pro-Americanism production to be used to boost the university to preparatory schools and promote college education in general.

Exhibitors' Pays Dividend.

After being in business just thirteen weeks, the Exhibitors' Film Company of Kansas City, C. S. Edwards, president, has declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent. on its preferred stock and 10 per cent. on common stock, payable March 1, 1920, to holders of certificates registered on the books of the concern at that date.

This company started active business November 3, 1919, with offices in the Gloyd building, and since then has earned sufficient profits not only to pay these dividends, but have created a reserve fund toward retiring their preferred stock at the expiration of five years. Both C. S. Edwards, president of the company, and his son, C. S. Edwards, Jr., who is a member of the firm, are well known to the film trade.

Hello, Lunnon! Here Comes Rothacker You'll Like Him.

NOW comes the super key-city, following in the wake of Watterson Rothacker's expansion and enterprise.

Chicago has known him since he began operations in a one-man way to develop a big man's idea. That was in 1910.

Ten years later and the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company is an institution—in all the effectiveness and essentials the term implies.

He's going to make 1920 his big year. He is right now in Los Angeles establishing a branch plant on the site he has already purchased.

It doesn't take Rothacker long to "do things," so Londoners might better "put his name in the pot" for a cup of tea about mid-summer.

To Chicago and Los Angeles, New York will be added, the Rothacker arrangements for a plant here having already been completed.

London will make the fourth super-key city. And when the Rothacker laboratory starts "grinding," English films will take on a new luster before the eyes of our "cousins" across the briny.

Further and full details later. This is simply a tinkle of the warning bell. That is to say, Londoners are going to like Rothacker when he gets there and starts doing Rothacker things in the Rothacker way.

Kansas City Bandits Rob Loew's Garden and Get Away with $900 on a Bad Night

DARING motor bandits made a flying stop at Loew's Garden theatre, Thirteenth and McGee streets, Kansas City, at 11 o'clock the night of February 10, held up Al Strode, assistant manager and treasurer and escaped with $900, the evening's ticket receipts. The bandits escaped in a big brown touring car without their presence being suspected by the many pedestrians passing on the well-lighted downtown street.

Miss Vivian Miller, one of the ticket sellers, noticed a young man approach the window shortly after 10 o'clock. He asked how much of the show could be seen. She told him the pictures were being shown then. He declared he didn't want to go in if the vaudeville was over. He stood in the lobby and waited. Mr. Strode came down from the upper office and into the ticket office, emerging a moment later with a box in which the money was kept.

"You can give me that box," the young man said.

"What is this, a joke?" said Mr. Strode.

The bandit then whipped out a revolver and gave it to another young man standing near, the only other person in the lobby at the time, except the doorman who attempted to interfere. The bandit turned his gun on the doorman and commanded him to stand still.

The bandits then fled with the money. Both appeared to be about 23 or 24 years old.

"They picked a bad night," Wiliam Jacobs, manager of the theatre, said later. "Receipts are not so heavy now because of the influenza. Anyway, Tuesday is not our best night."

San Francisco Mob Likes Not the "Irish Stuff" in Film; Wrecks Theatre

OBJECTING to scenes of poverty in Ireland as portrayed in "Kathleen Mavourneen," featuring Theda Bara, a mob rushed the operating room of the Sun Theatre, San Francisco, on the evening of February 8, beat the operator, William Ulrich, smashed two new projection machines and made away with two reels of film.

After demolishing the operating room the mob turned its attention to the upper gallery and smashed railings and chairs. A riot call was sent in, but no arrests were made.

Manager Abe Markowitz was warned just before the raid commenced that trouble would be started by members of the American Committee for Irish Freedom who openly declared the film to be British propaganda. "There is nothing objectionable in the picture and we will continue to show it," said Manager Markowitz, "even if it is necessary to have police protection." Two reels of film to take the place of those stolen were rushed to this city from Los Angeles by airplane and the house was opened on time the following day.

Theatre Owner Asks Writ.

G. L. Hooper, a theatre owner of Topeka, Kan., who was arrested February 10, for opening his theatre in violation of a city health board ordinance closing all public meeting places during the influenza epidemic, announced he would seek a restraining order in the district court to prevent the city from interfering with his business.

McLaughlin Injured at Chicago.

Alexander McLaughlin, of Kansas City, was dangerously injured in a motor car colision in Chicago February 12, according to word reaching the former city. Both McLaughlin and his wife, who also was injured, are said to be in a dangerous condition in a Chicago hospital. Mr. McLaughlin was on his way to New York at the time of the accident to make final arrangements for the promotion of a big motion picture distributing and booking agency. The concern was known as the J. Cooper Theatre Company. Mr. McLaughlin was for two years manager of the Select Pictures Corporation branch at Kansas City.

The taxicab which is reported to have crashed into the machine containing Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin, was said to have been speeding at the rate of 50 miles an hour. The police are searching for the driver of the taxicab.

Mann Reported Organizing $2,000,000 Film Company

CONRAD H. MANN left Kansas City February 14 for New York City, where he expects to spend ten days completing final arrangements for the promotion of a new two-million-dollar film company which will enter the producing and distribution end of the film industry. The concern will have its headquarters in Los Angeles and will be headed by Mr. Mann.

The new film venture will be backed by an influential group of Kansas City, Cleveland and New York capitalists, according to reports in circulation in Kansas City.

Mr. Mann is well known in business circles in Kansas City. He formerly was in the brewing industry in that city for many years, and with the coming of national prohibition January 16 began looking about for new fields of endeavor. Mr. Mann said he expected to have plans under way in a short time and that the actual production of pictures would be begun within a very few months.

Insures Newman Employes.

All the employes of the Newman Theatre of Kansas City, and of the Regent and Royal, all owned by Frank L. Newman, have been given insurance certificates covering both life and total disability. Included in the plan are more than 160 employes who are insured for amounts ranging from $500 to $1,000, the amount being based on the length of service.

Those in the employ of the company continuously for five years will receive policies of $1,000 each; less than five years and more than three years, $750, and less than three years $500. The plan was put into effect February 10.

The insurance provides for the services of trained nurses in case of sickness of any of the employes.

E. W. Hammons.
Vice-president Educational Films Corporation.

Tom North Joins Tom Moore

Tom North has been made managing director of Tom Moore's theatrical enterprises in Washington and assumes his new duties February 23. Only recently Mr. North resigned from the William Fox organization where he was in charge of sales and distribution of short subjects.

He went to Fox from Pathe and in his previous engagements has for years been active in every branch of the film, theatrical and circus publicity business.

Contracts for Dramas.

The Exhibitors Film Company, of Kansas City, has just closed a contract with the Clark-Cornelius Corporation to distribute its Goodrich, Kane and American five and six reel dramas, twenty-four in all, in the Kansas City territory. It also has contracted for twenty-one Rothacker outdoor scenic subjects. This concern is doing a large business with churches, schools, seminaries, universities, boy scout organizations and other religious and educational institutions in the Middle West territory.

Sensations in News Reel.

Robertson-Cole Selects Adolfi to Direct Carpentier; Picking the Story

JOHN G. ADOLFI, one of the foremost directors of screendom, has been selected by Robertson-Cole to produce the Georges Carpentier Special for exclusive distribution by the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Adolfi signed his contract this week and is busily engaged with a staff of experienced scenario men to choose a story for Carpentier so that he can commence work on this special production as soon as he arrives in this country the latter part of March. In addition to the heavyweight champion of Europe, Descamps, his manager, and two sparring partners will arrive in New York City about March 22.

Will Write Story if Necessary.

Mr. Adolfi already has more than a dozen stories to choose from and he has been given free hand by Robertson-Cole to select the vehicle by which Carpentier will be introduced to the American public. If Mr. Adolfi should cast aside the scripts presented to him, plans will be made so that a new story can be written for Carpentier.

Robertson-Cole executives, together with Mr. Adolfi witnessed screen tests made of the French war hero this week and all agreed that from his appearance on the screen, one would never regard him as the logical contender to Dempsey's crown, but a matinee idol whose looks and personality wins admirers by the thousands.

Cast Will Be of the Best.

At the present time, Carpentier is traveling Europe on a six weeks' vaudeville and lecture tour. Present reports given to Robertson-Cole is to the effect that the Frenchmen is about to become a benedict and that the future Mrs. Carpentier is no less a personage than one of the famous Parisian beauties. If screen tests made of the woman are as good as those of the French fighter, then it is probable that Mr. Adolfi will cast her with Carpentier.

As soon as the story is chosen for Carpentier, Mr. Adolfi will seek his cast. No expense will be spared to secure the finest artists that are obtainable for the screen.

"There is no doubt that America will go wild about this chap," said Mr. Adolfi. "I was more than interested in him owing to his war record and when I had the privilege of seeing him on the screen, I decided that we had the bet of the year.

Carpentier a Good Screen Subject.

"Carpentier is not an experiment. He has made good and his screen tests bear out in detail the reports sent from abroad that he is an actor of no mean ability. He has natural poise, strength and character to back it up and a determination that spells success. He can play any kind of a role and is as much at home in front of the camera as he is in the squared arena."

The Georges Carpentier Special will be produced and exploited in the same elaborate, dignified manner as other Robertson-Cole specials have been. A big staff of publicity and exploitation experts have been employed to handle this phase of the Carpentier picture.

"Sporting Duchess" To Be Next Alice Joyce Feature

VITAGRAPH has definitely decided on "The Sporting Duchess" as its next Alice Joyce release. Due to weather conditions, which even necessitated a trip by the company to New Orleans for the racing scenes, the special production occupied more than the usual time in the making.

The star and her supporting company spent more than two months on outside locations in the vicinity of Rye, N. Y., and Stamford, Conn., where country estates of typical English architecture were found, and more time was consumed at various points on Long Island than at other country homes and at the seashore.

But few scenes remained to be made after the company returned from New Orleans, a trip made necessary by the closing of the race tracks in the North, and now that they have been completed and the necessary cuts made the feature is practically ready for a public showing.

Tower Prepares Unique Exploitation for "Tillie"

IN reviving Mack Sennett's masterpiece of comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the six reel feature which will be released on the state rights market soon through the Tower Film Corporation, the picture is said to have been re-edited, and reconstructed to make it even more attractive than when originally released and to have been brought up to the minute in every respect. The prints are all new and in excellent condition. Special art titles have been made. The draggy portions of the film have been eliminated and the picture has been re-edited.

A complete and new line of "punch" advertising matter has been prepared, consisting of two styles of ones, threes, sixes and a twenty-four sheet poster. There are 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28 lobby display photographs. A special hand painted, beautifully colored 30x40 and 40x60 lobby display has also been prepared. In addition there has been completely outlined for the exhibitor's use a unique and practicable exploitation campaign in which are included many novel and inexpensive "stunts" that will bring attractive results.

Paramount-Artcrafts for Solid Month at Capitol

Leading off the Paramount Artcraft month is Dorothy Dalton in her Thomas H. Ince production, "Black Is Black," which was directed by Charles Giblyn. The picture is based on a story by George Barr McCutcheon. The week of March 14, Ethel Clayton in "Young Mrs. Winthrop" will be the main attraction. This is an adaptation of the play by Bronson Howard and was directed by Walter Edwards.

The Maurice Tourneur special production, "My Lady's Garter," based upon the famous novel by Jacques Futrelle, is the feature for the week of March 21, while for the week of March 28 the Cosmopolitan Production, "April Folly," with Marion Davies, will be presented. The last named picture is taken from the story by Cynthia Stockley and was directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

Buys Territory on Dooley Comedies.

Change in Release Date.

"Man and Woman," originally scheduled by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., for March 1, has been put forward on the program and will not be released until March 15. Betty Mason is the star of this production.

Allan Dwan Discusses Associated Producers

THAT important developments in connection with the Associated Producers, made up of Thomas H. Ince, Marshall Neilan, Allan Dwan, George Loane Tucker, Mack Sennett and Maurice Tourneur, may soon be expected, was indicated by the arrival in New York, early last week, of Allan Dwan, who will be followed shortly by Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read, acting business representative of the new organization.

Mr. Dwan brought with him from the West Coast his three latest productions, "A Splendid Hazard," "In the Heart of a Fool" and "The Scoffer," an original by Val Cleveland, a New York newspaperman who died recently of influenza. These pictures will be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, of which Isaac Wolper is president. While Mr. Dwan is in New York, exploitation campaigns for these productions will be outlined as the result of conferences between the producer and Mr. Wolper.

Kremer Chaplins Active in Sales and Showings

VICTOR KREMER Film Features, Inc., announce The Feature Film Company, Inc., of Minneapolis, has acquired for North and South Dakota and Minnesota four Chaplin reissues.

"A Burlesque on Carmen," the four-reel Chaplin reissue was shown at the Rivoli Theatre in New York and the two reel Chaplin, "The Champion," will be shown at either the Rialto or the Rivoli within the next three weeks.

Arthur C. Bromberg, of Atlanta, states that "A Burlesque on Carmen" has been booked for a week's run at one of the most important first run theatres in the South, which will present it as the feature attraction. One hundred twenty-four sheet stands will be used, extra space taken in the newspapers and ten thousand of the miniature scene cards, carrying the chorus of the song "Carmen" on the reverse side, will be distributed by this theatre.

Production Started on Second Olive Tell Film

THE first scenes for Olive Tell's second Jans Picture, which is based on Charles Belmont Davis' novel "Nothing a Year," has already been filmed at the Peerless studio in Fort Lee. The working title of the script is the same as the novel, but it is announced that the picture will probably be given another title.

Prominent in Miss Tell's support are Lucille Lee Stewart and Edmund Lowe. Other members include Donald Hall, Annette Bode, Warner Richmond and Stanley Walpole. The story is laid in the South and around New York City, opening with a "shot" at Fifth Avenue and Forty-seventh Street.

Announce New Starring Vehicles for Lovely Katherine MacDonald

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Attractions Distributing Corporation of the stories that will be screened as starring vehicles for Katherine MacDonald as the second series of three releases through First National Exhibitors Circuit.

The first of the new series, following "The Turning Point," third of the first series, will be an adaptation of "The Guests of Hercules," by Mrs. A. M. Williamson, who, in collaboration with C. N. Williamson, her husband, has long been in the forefront of American literary ranks. "The Guests of Hercules" is a story of Monte Carlo and an American girl of mysterious parentage, reared by nuns in a French convent. She is a girl of such extreme beauty that it commands sensational attention at the famous resort and results in an amazing and dramatic series of events.

The second production will be an adaptation of "Curtain," a dramatic story of domestic life written by Rita Weiman and published in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Miss Weiman will go from New York to the Katherine MacDonald studios in Los Angeles to write the continuity. The third release in the second series will be a screen version of the "The Notorious Miss Lisle," from the book by Mrs. Bailey Reynolds. The continuity is now being written. It is a drama of mystery and adventure.

James Young, who directed Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds," her initial release through First National Exhibitors Circuit, has been engaged to direct Miss MacDonald in "Curtain." Mr. Young is now in Los Angeles awaiting the arrival of Miss Weiman, with whom he will collaborate in drafting the scenario. Miss Weiman is an experienced dramatist and the author of one of New York's big stage successes, "The Acquittal."

"The Turning Point," which was released on February 2, is the most recent of the novels by Robert W. Chambers to be screened, and as a starring vehicle for Miss MacDonald is proving a great success. Her first release through the Circuit was "The Thunderbolt" and the second was "The Beauty Market."

Brandt Will Soon Show "The Kentucky Colonel"

JOE BRANDT announces that the first showing of "The Kentucky Colonel," the first of the National Film Corporation's All-American photoplays, will be held immediately upon arrival of the print, which will be the last week in the current month.

This picture, based on Opie Read's novel is being cut by Director William A. Seiter into seven reels. The cast is headed by Joseph J. Dowling, supported by Francis McDonald, Elinor Field, Lloyd Bacon, Cora Drew, Frederic Vroom, Fred Kohler, Thelma Salter, Gordon Griffith and Ed. Bracy.

Morey in Role of Seaman.

Harry T. Morey, who has played about every sort of a motion picture hero, from policemen and a detective of the Nick Carter type to tramps and society gentlemen, is a sea captain in his next Vitagraph feature, "The Sea Rider." Early in the story he is only the mate of a fishing smack, but he rises to the dignity of captain of a sizeable schooner. He has been working on his new picture for more than a week, sailing both the smack and schooner around in Sheepshead Bay, New York, and the Lower Bay.

English Actor-Athlete to "Invade" American Field

NO, it couldn't be called "an English invasion of American film circles." There isn't a large suggestion of hostility in the appearance of this clean, athletic-looking young Englishman. But even though it isn't an English campaign as such, Bruce Gordon, British film actor, seems sure of making the results the same—namely, his entry into American picture acting.

And he appears well equipped. He carries with him a batch of reviews of pictures in which he starred in England, and the critics write such laudatory things as "charming personality," "subtle touches," "tactful handling," "mastery of technique" and "unlimited future." Mr. Gordon has acted under the banners of Progress Film, Gaumont, and Phillips Productions.

Most everybody in the film business quit something else to join the picture circle, and Mr. Gordon, not to be at all outdone, casually mentioned to the Moving Picture World man that he quit surgery for the screen, after having been a student at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, for three years.

Mr. Gordon is a keen athlete and looks forward to enjoying America's sports. He is twenty-six years old, stands six feet in a nationally advertised brand of holeproof hosiery we can't mention, and should have little difficulty in landing stellar or leading man roles under the tuition of American producers.

Late Productions at Universal City Feature Players of Special Talent

FIVE new feature productions have been started at Universal City within the past two weeks and a strong cast has been engaged for each of them.

Frank Mayo is starring in "The Girl in Number Twenty-Nine," a photoplay based on Elizabeth Jordan's popular novel, "The Girl in the Mirror." He is supported by Claire Anderson, Elinor Faire, Harry Hilliard, Ray Ripley, Ruth Royce, Arthur Hoyt, Robert Bolder and Bull Montana. Jack Ford is directing.

Edith Roberts is starred, supported by Katherine Kirkham, Harold Miller, Rudolph Christians, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Ogden Crane, Leonard Clapham, Virginia Ware, Henry Woodward and Leota Lorraine, in the comedy drama "The Daring Duchess," which is being directed by Harry Franklin.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are proceeding with their first five-reel comedy feature, "Everything but the Truth," from the magazine story by Edgar Franklin. Their support includes Anne Cornwall and Katherine Lewis.

Ten in Carey's Cast.

Harry Carey has a splendid cast surrounding him in his current production, "Bullet Proof," based on John Fredrick's story "Luck," which is being directed by Lynn Reynolds. The company includes Robert McKim, Kathleen O'Connor, Beatrice Burnham, J. Farrell MacDonald, Charles LeMoyne, Will Ryno, Bob McKenzie, Joe Harris, Fred Gamble and Captain Anderson.

In her new feature, "A Tokio Siren," Tsuru Aoki, Universal's popular Japanese star, is supported by Jack Livingston, Arthur Jasmine, Eugenie Ford, Toyo Fujita, Caro Kino, Fredrick Vroom and Elinor Hancock. Norman Dawn is supervising.

Oakman and Beery Together.

In Priscilla Dean's production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," under Tod Browning's direction, Wheeler Oakman and Wallace Beery were cast in the important male roles.

In Von Stroheim's production, "The Devil's Passkey," now in the cutting, appeared Clyde Fillmore, Una Trevelyn, Sam DeGrasse, Maude George, Mae Busch and Leo White.

In Dorothy Phillips' latest feature, "Ambition," directed by Allen Holubar, Robert Andersen, Rudolph Valentino, Frank Elliott, Emily Chichester and Elinor Fields made up the strong supporting cast.

Eason Begins Western.

Reeves Eason has begun work on an action western starring Hoot Gibson and entitled "The Rattler's Kiss." Prominent in the cast are Mildred Moore, George Field, Toto DuCrow, Charles Newton and Breezy Eason.

"Held for a Honeymoon," a snappy western photodrama by W. C. Tuttle, is now in the course of production under Arthur Flaven's direction. In the company are Josephine Hill, Bob Reeves, Edward Moncrief, Otto Nelson, Chick Morrison and Louis Pattee.

Eddy Polo and Edward Kull have reached the ninth episode of the Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger." Mr. Polo's principal support includes Thelma Percy, Peggy O'Dare, Ruth Royce and Ray Ripley.

Director Philip Rosen, who has just completed "The Road to Divorce," with Mary MacLaren, is selecting a cast for "Virginia," a southern drama based on Ida M. Evan's popular magazine story of that name.

As soon as Edith Roberts has finished her current production, "The Daring Duchess," Universal will star her in "Jewel," a screen adaptation of Clara Louis Burnham's book, which attracted much attention a few years ago.

"The Dangerous Talent" Throwaways.

The "Flying A" salesmen are "starting something" with neat little throwaways, bearing a warning to exhibitors: "All Is Discovered, Beat It!" But on closer inspection they find that "All is discovered in Margarita Fisher's Latest Production, 'The Dangerous Talent.' Beat it to the nearest Pathe Exchange and ask for the American representative."

C. A. Stimson, the general sales manager, has had several thousand of these cards printed in red and blue, the two lines quoted above in bright red type, eighteen and twenty-four point, respectively, with the explanatory lines in six and eight point, blue ink, so small that they do not detract from the effect of the story which appears at first glance.

The same style of card with a little change in the wording of the explanatory small type lines would make this card a "fetching" throwaway for the exhibitor's use.

Jack Nelson to Direct MacLean-May Features

JACK NELSON, former leading light of the "legitimate" stage and later an ambitious pupil under Thomas H. Ince at Inceville, has been placed under contract by Mr. Ince to direct the Douglas MacLean and Doris May productions.

Entering the theatrical profession as a "lead" in one of the successful Broadway attractions, Mr. Nelson, in 1911, abandoned the legitimate stage in favor of a berth with the Selig company in Chicago. In 1913, he migrated to California and promptly attracted the attention of Mr. Ince. He was placed among the leading men of famous Inceville and later appeared with Clara Williams, Charles Ray, Jack Kellar and Robin Adair in prominent roles.

After three years at Inceville, Mr. Nelson went to Fox. While playing juvenile lead with Tom Mix, his director was compelled to retire because of sudden illness and Nelson was called upon to complete the direction. His vivid imagination and keen appreciation of the requirements of drama and art served him to fine advantage and the title of director remained steadfast.

Pauline Frederick in wig and chips, stars in the one and Tom Moore, in navy blue in the other.

Abounds with Comedy Touches.

According to advices from the Thomas H. Ince studios, the new Ince special, "Wheelbarrow Webster," featuring Lloyd Hughes, is a picture redolent of humor and human interest. Hughes first appears as a country boy with a longing to do big things in life. Tired of pushing a wheelbarrow, he engages in the study of law, though much against the desires of a father whose dearest wish it is that his son uphold the family reputation of "unexcelled farmers." He is at last seen elected district attorney.

Foundation Films Boosting Releases with Exploitation

ACCORDING to reports received by M. W. Garson, general manager of the Foundation Film Corporation, "The Blindness of Youth," the first release of the company, is developing quick profits for state right buyers. Circuits already have booked the picture and leading theatres of the country are planning to run it in the near future.

Little difficulty was experienced in disposing of the territory, according to Mr. Garsson's statement. "State right buyers appreciate the co-operation we are giving them in helping to make the production a success financially," says he.

"We are going to continue to advertise the picture, directing our campaign exclusively toward the exhibitor," continues Mr. Garsson, "and in order to assure its success as far as the showman is concerned we have prepared effective exploitation material for his campaign direct to the public.

"We are going to continue this policy with all of our releases. Our second picture, 'A Dream of Fair Women,' will be handled in the same manner. We already have in preparation unusual and distinct mediums of exploitation for this picture and it is indicated, from the interest it already has created, that it will be just as successful as our first release."

Full-Page Advertisements Helped Exhibitor to Offset "Flu" Scare

MAKING capital of an exhibitor obstacle seems as irreconcilable as patting yourself on the back when you hit your finger with a hammer or slip in the mud. Yet it has been done, is being done and was accomplished only recently by H. M. Thomas, the energetic manager of the Rialto Theatre, operated under the ownership of the A. H. Blank Enterprises at Omaha, Neb. This time the obstacle was something hard to combat. It was the potent force of public opinion, educated, alarmed and warned against attending public gatherings for the reason that it was a hard battle to be exposed and not to join the victims of General Influenza's army.

There was a formidable antidote to offset the public's stay-away feeling. There was a method that, applied universally, would convert the refrainers. This system was a special feature attraction and an exploitation campaign that in its intended intensity has had no equal in the theatrical history of that part of the country surrounding Omaha.

Thus it was that "In Old Kentucky," the Mayer-made Anita Stewart production distributed by First National Exhibitors Circuit, went into the Rialto Theatre at Omaha accompanied by the most concentrated efforts in the way of newspaper exploitation that Mr. Thomas and his publicity assistants, Bill Karbach, Gordon Bennett and Tom Knisely, could conceive. Full page advertisements, a number of them made from drawings by members of the Rialto's art department, were the medium that Mr. Thomas used to fight the "flu" scare. During the opening stages of the attraction, no display ad less than five columns by twenty inches was brought into play.

Cartoon sketches of Anita Stewart were the cardinal feature of the newspaper displays. A six-column spread brought the portrait of the star and a suggestion of the Kentucky negro life into play. Well displayed word matter stated the attraction strongly and briefly and no elaboration was used regarding the production except a statement that a "special old plantation prologue combining jubilee singing, buck and wing dancing and special stage and electrical effects" was on the program.

According to Mr. Thomas, ad space properly used will offset any kind of an anti-theatre scare. And the box office receipts of the Rialto during the run of "In Old Kentucky," showing the second best week in the history of the theatre, bear him out.

Tyrad Pictures Buys a C. A. Taylor Production

TYRAD PICTURES, INC., has secured the world's rights on "The Whiphand," a five-part feature written and produced by C. A. Taylor. This photodrama has just been completed in California and is one of several secured by Matthias Radin, president of the Tyrad organization, now in Los Angeles, where he is attending to final details regarding contracts before announcing the titles of the other subjects he has obtained for his company.

"The Whiphand" is a strong drama with an unusual theme. Many tense scenes depict in sequence the principal points in the story, while a vein of human interest runs throughout the entire production.

A cast of popular screen stars was asembled by Producer Taylor. Clare MacDowell makes a reappearance on the screen in a role admirably suited to her type. Little Ben Alexander, a popular child actor, plays a prominent part. Frank Mayo and Prudence Lyle are the featured members and are ably assisted by Tom Sawyer, Dell Boone and George Gebhardt.

Clergymen View "Empty Arms."

A number of clergymen were guests of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside at a private exhibition of their initial production, "Empty Arms," Willard King Bradley's motherhood and birth control.

From all reports the clergymen were intensely interested in the film's message and all seemed to be united in the opinion that "Empty Arms" will yield a great influence for good.

A Catholic priest who was present stated that in some episodes of the picture sin and vice are painted in deepest black and this only went to emphasize and accentuate the whiteness of a number of charming scenes devoted to driving home the sweetness and purity of mother love.

S-L Pictures Buys Tales; To Release Through Metro

S-L PICTURES, INC., has bought for production and release through Metro Pictures Corporation, the picture rights to two big stories; one, "The Trap," a novel of modern society life by Maximilian Foster, at present running serially in McClure's magazine and to be published in the spring in book form; and the other, "The Fallen Idol," Guy Bolton's dramatic stage success of a few years ago, which was first presented at the Comedy Theatre, New York, under the management of Joe Weber, afterward playing on the road to big success. These two productions are to be the first of a series of five pictures S-L will make for distribution through Metro this year.

As may be noted from the nature of the purchases, "The Trap" and "The Fallen Idol" are to be adaptations of a popular novel and of an outstanding stage success. S-L Pictures, Inc., has announced that only novels and stage successes will be used as material for its super-productions.

Production of the first of these two features will be begun by S-L within the next few days, according to a statement from Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures.

WHEN the motion picture exhibitors of New York will assemble for their State convention in Utica on March 9 and 10, they will be invited to give their views on some of the most important motion picture bills ever proposed in the State Legislature. The one subject on which definite action will be taken before the exhibitors adjourn is the "Children's Bill," as it is called.

This bill repeals that section of the Penal Code which makes it a misdemeanor to admit minors, actually or apparently under the age of sixteen, into a motion picture theatre. The phraseology of the law "actually or apparently" under sixteen years of age has been a source of harrassing experiences to motion picture theatre owners throughout the State and especially in the city of New York, where it is enforced with drastic severity.

Seek More Liberal Definition.

The committee which has charge of the subject expects to be able to make a satisfactory report to the convention. This hope is based on an effort of the committee to use ideas expressed by the late Justice Gaynor in a decision in which that jurist defines the word "guardian" in a more liberal sense than the strictly legal one, when applied to the man or woman who accompanies a minor into a theatre.

In addition to the "Children's Bill," action will be taken on hostile legislation now pending or about to be introduced. One of these bills provides for intermissions of one hour each between every performance in the motion picture theatre.

These questions will provide ample material for serious consideration and action of the convention, but they do not by any means constitute the entire program. Plans to defeat any censorship legislation will also be discussed.

"Big Guns" at Convention.

It may interest every exhibitor to know that many of the big film men and exchange managers will be at Utica, assurances to that effect having been received both by President Cohen and Treasurer Linton. The idea is to have exhibitors meet these men personally and get acquainted with a view to the establishment of more friendly relations.

A good many annoying wrinkles will be ironed out in this way. The exchangemen propose to establish headquarters in the Hotel Utica, each producer to be represented by booths and boxes of their own. The F. I. L. M. Club is going to be represented in a body.

As to the lighter side of the convention, there is talk that the Utica newspapers will arrange a "popularity contest." The young man and young woman heading the poll will be assured of enacting a scene under the supervision of a well-known director, the picture thus made to be screened the night of the movie ball.

"Movie Ball" to Be Feature.

Various news weeklies have displayed considerable interest in the convention. Arrangements are being made to have motion pictures taken of all important events of the convention and of the exhibitors who will attend.

The "Movie Ball" will be a spectacular feature of the program. Permission has been secured from the Governor for the use of the State armory, in which the affair will be staged on the evening of March 10. Picture stars and directors will be prominent and numerous in attendance and the scene will be handsomely put on.

Mr. Linton, the State treasurer, who is on the ground (his home being in Utica), reports an extraordinary exhibtor interest in the convention. He says that his circularization campaign promises to produce the most gratifying results.

"What did you do—study the subject at close range?"

"Nearer than that, we got close enough to touch the target. All of the newspaper scenes were taken in the old editorial rooms of The Sun, and I did the police beat with a real reporter and absorbed local color at the criminal courts and the 'Tombs.' Helen Stevens, the heroine, is supposed to be given the 'Advice to the Lovelorn' column when she starts working on the paper. This leads to her unearthing a crime and clearing the man she eventually marries. There is all of the excitement of getting a daily to press, coupled with a dramatic love story right in the editorial rooms of the paper. You know, of course, the meaning of the title, 'Deadline at Eleven'?"

"Oh, yes; that's the hour at which all copy must be in for the first edition."

"This editorial rule is connected cleverly with the human interest of the plot and makes an excellent name for the picture."

And Miss Griffith made this unbelievable answer:

"The most amusing incident had a courteous taxicab driver for its hero."

"It starts like a fairy tale," said I.

"It ends like one," said she. "His cab stood in front of the Tombs. A lady who was passing suddenly clutched her skirts and sent out other signals of needing a harbor of refuge. The driver opened the door of his cab and invited the lady to enter. She accepted immediately and the door was slammed shut. A moment later she stepped from the cab, smiled sweetly at the driver and no longer clutched her skirts. And he didn't charge her for the time she was in the taxi."

First Run Picture of First Run Exhibitor With First Run Trade Paper—First —Always First

YOU know the idea—getting THE picture taken with THE champion. Sometimes it's a cow, sometimes it's a $5,000 hen, sometimes it's a family, and sometimes it's a trade paper. In this case Henry C. Schweppe, owner of the Colonial Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., picked his champion trade journal.

And which one did he pick? Why, the one with the meat, the name, the service, the policy that backs the clean things of the industry at any cost. Sure there it is, plain as day—"Moving Picture World"—with Jack Meador's layout on Nazimova on the cover and everything.

Prosperous looking, Henry Schweppe, eh? You bet! The M. P. W. does the trick for him at the box office.

"I'll Tell the World."

Sidelights and Reflections

THE Lincoln week observances in the moving picture theatres in Times Square brought the character of The Great Emancipator graphically before the eyes of the throngs which filled four of the pictures houses on Broadway. "The Copperhead," which was transferred to the Rialto after being shown at the Rivoli, is strongly influenced by the spirit of Lincoln all through the story, although the man himself appears only in a few short scenes. In "The Land of Opportunity" he is the central figure. The supposed incident in his life is told with Ralph Ince as the Martyr President and told with deep feeling and fine simplicity.

John Drinkwater's stage drama "Abraham Lincoln" is still attracting crowded houses at one of the New York theatres and receiving nothing but the highest praise for both play and players. All of this is, of course, a source of great satisfaction to all real Americans.

In the reviews of this play no mention seems to have been made of a play written on the same subject in this country some thirty years ago. It followed about the same course of events in Lincoln's life as does the English made drama and ended with the death scene about his bed. The part of the president was excellently impersonated by Elmer Grandin, who is still an active member of his profession; but the play was not a financial success. After a brief but stormy career the final curtain descended in the city of Washington, leaving the members of the company to return to New York and apply at the dramatic agencies for new engagements.

An actor named Evans had been playing Secretary Stanton, and to him fell the closing line of the play. As Lincoln breathed his last the Secretary repeated the historical speech; "He belongs to the ages!" On this closing night Evans repeated the tag in his accustomed impressive manner, and added with still greater pathos but so low that only his fellow actors heard him:

"And we, heaven helps us, belong to the agents!"

Nothing has been heard lately from the scenario writers who are fond of rushing into print with the assertion that the screen should practically limit itself to original material. Well, let's have it. The more the better—if it's of the right quality. In the meantime novel-stage-screen productions like "Pollyanna" are continuing to attract full houses of delighted spectators. The general public does not give a hang where the material comes from, so long as it is entertaining. The reports from "Huckleberry Finn" indicate that Mark Twain's most popular character is as great a success on the screen as he ever was between the covers of a book.

"The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come"

Goldwyn Presents Jack Pickford in a Realistic Story of Kentucky in Civil War Times.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

VIVIDLY realistic, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," Jack Pickford's first release through Goldwyn, is an attractive illustration of a novel by John Fox, Jr. It deals with Kentucky life just before and during the Civil War, which, in such border states, divided families, pitting brother against brother and father against son. Jack Pickford plays the leading role in a creditable manner, but the Goldwyn production is meritorious chiefly through the direction of Wallace Worsley. It depends largely for interest upon atmosphere, upon the care and thoroughness with which the pervading influences of the time are set forth. With infinite patience the director has prepared a great number of scenes aptly suited to the telling of the story and lifted his curtain on a glimpse of American life as it was in Kentucky sixty years ago.

There are touches of humor in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," and notes of tender pathos, quaint characterizations of plantation darkies, moments of heart-breakng womanly sacrifice. The big cast is selected to clearly reflect the very look of daily life three score years ago in the mountains and blue-grass regions of "Old Kaintuck." All this makes for human interest and for plausibility, hence the director can be cheerfully excused for distracting the attention of the spectator once in a while by his insistence on accuracy of detail. Instead of trying to be true to drama and to the novelist at the same time, the director has attempted no compromise. He has produced a photonovel pure and simple. That it is a good one could be easily judged by a crowded house at the Strand. It holds up the mirror to a phase of American life at a critical period of our history

The Story.

Into the Kentucky valley of "Kingdom Come" comes Chad, a "Little Shepherd" from the hills. The boy's combined poverty and high spirit strongly attract childless Major Buford, and Chad's education begins when it is discovered that he, also, is a Buford. He finds playmates among the neighboring proud family of Deans, but he leaves all his friends and returns to the hills when it is rumored that he is a "wood colt," an illegitimate child. He leaves behind tender Margaret Dean, only to inflame the heart of a mountain girl, Melissa. It is through suffering and self-sacrificing Melissa that his name is cleared, the poor girl dying with her love unrequited. Meanwhile, Chad is sought out by Major Buford and given a fine education at Lexington.

The Civil War finds Kentucky a house divided against itself. All the Deans are for the South, except Harry, who declares for the government of Abraham Lincoln. Chad Buford and Harry Dean become officers in the Union Army and are in Kentucky when Dan Dean and his father are with Morgan of the Confederates. Chad is sent with a squad to search the Dean mansion for guerrillas at the moment when Dan Dean is secretly visiting his mother and sister. Dan is captured in the raid, along with two genuine guerrillas, and all are condemned to be executed at sunrise the following day. Chad pleads in vain for Dan's life. All other means failing, he rides through dangerous territory to a General he knows and saves Dan's life when the latter is bidding farewell to his mother and Margaret, his sister.

When peace comes, when Harry Dean in blue and Dan in grey are taken to their mother's arms, Chad refuses to enter the house. He had once been called upon to tear down from it a Confederate flag placed there by Margaret, and she had refused to surrender. Her brothers tell her that Chad is in the garden. She takes the flag with her, goes to Chad and surrenders unconditionally for life.

The Story.

Andy Gray is a motor truck salesman of retiring nature and his ideal salesman is William Blinker, who is a bluffer. Mr. Wells, the boss of the company, favors Blinker, who is trying to land a sale to Mr. Dodge, a buyer of trucks. Andy meets Mr. Dodge and the latter is impressed with him.

Andy has to visit the boss' house, where Dorothy, his daughter, and whom Andy loves, receives him. It happens that Dodge is there on a visit. Somehow or other the truck dealer thinks he is talking to Blinker, and as they are about to close the deal Blinker appears, and Andy vacates.

Finally matters are straightened out and Andy gets the order. This leads to happiness for Dorothy and the young salesman, who decide to spend their lives together.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Ray as strongly as you can, for he means money to most houses. Then hook the title with the jewelers and other dealers in clocks. You might work over the Ruffner stunt and use alarm clock cuts in place of scene cuts for your newspaper attractors. If you can borrow a bunch of alarm clocks for lobby decoration, with a credit card for their use, time them to go off about every five minutes around show times, setting them again for the next show.

"$1,000,000 Reward"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

A SENSATIONAL serial in fifteen episodes is "$1,000,000 Reward," by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey. Popular Lillian Walker has the stellar role. The first chapter, which is devoted to the brewing of a conspiracy of double strength, promises enough villainy to keep the spectator in suspense for an indefinite period. The victim of both plots is Betty Thorndyke, daughter of a diamond mine owner in South Africa. Betty has been carefully and secretly reared in California, and a reward is suddenly offered for finding her by the stockholders of the mine, who are anxious that the property be divided. A band of crooks read of the offer, and decide to win it, preferably by foul means. At the same time the girl's welfare is endangered by the schemes of William Russell, who hopes by getting her out of the way, to gain a large share in the mines. He kills Hannah, Betty's nurse since childhood, by hurling a deadly arrow at her on the night of the ball at Bradleys. At the same time Bradley's precious diamond is stolen, and the scene closes with Russell carrying Betty off. Lillian Walker and Coit Anderson in the leading roles have pleasing personalities, and the entire cast, William Pike, Leora Spellman, Charles Middleton, Bernard Randall, Joseph Marba, George Lessey, and Ray Allen, are excellent types. Successful as an introductory number, which insures the interest from the start.

Leaving Kingdom Come Ridge.

Episode 2.

Spencer rescues Betty from being kidnapped by Russell. Soon after, Betty sees and follows the man whom she suspects of having stolen the diamond to his den. She is holding him up, when Russell, who has watched her, appears and grapples with her opponent for the diamond. She leaves through a window, comes out on a roof, sees that Russell is now following her, and terrifiedly mounts to the belfry of an old church. From here she swings out onto the cable and is half-way down when Russell appears above with a knife in hand ready to cut the rope. This closes the chapter which scores especially for its realistic settings and the successful creation of suspense throughout.

Episode 3.

Spencer and Bradley, approaching in an automobile, see Betty hanging on the rope. They speed up to her and save her. Russell disappears, but presently follows in another machine. Upon being discovered, he escapes to the wharf and goes off in a launch. Bradley gets into another launch and gives chase, but is outwitted by Russell, who has the other's boat blown up. Later Betty and Spencer go on a yachting trip. Russell and his confederates learn of their plans, get on board ahead of them, bind and gag the crew and plan to abduct Betty. As soon as she is alone, Russell comes stealthily upon her. She screams so that Spencer, on the deck above, hears, and Russell aims his gun at her. There is a wide variety of settings and an abundance of exciting action in this chapter.

"Torchy"

First Master Films Release of Sewell Ford "Torchy" Comedies, Featuring "Johnny" Hines.

THAT "Torchy" is announced to be the first of a series of Sewell Ford comedies commends it to attention, and there is seen in it a sincere attempt to be entertaining. The role of "Torchy" is played by full grown" Johnny" Hines, supposedly a pert office boy. He secures his first situation by sending all other applicants for it to the story below and assuming that he is already hired. He has attracted the attention of the boss, who is looking for a live boy, and this saves him from being fired at once. He shows the boss how to wake up a lazy girl at a telephone switch board and this constitutes his first day's work.

He manages to get the evening job of a check boy at a fashionable restaurant and dancing cabaret. While engaged in checking the wraps of guests and picking up tips, he becomes interested in an impulsive young lady who is bored by conventions and looking around for something new. "Torchy" elects to dance with her, but he cannot go on the floor in his uniform. He snatches off the dres coat and waistcoat of a terrified young man and sails out on the dancing floor with the venturesome young lady.

Their dance is different—it is the sensation of the evening—but the young lady's mother intevenes and "Torchy" is sent back to his job in the cloak room. When the evening is over, he is seen riding on the rear axle of a limousine, puffing a cigarette, murmuring "home James."

"The River's End"

Marshall Neilan's Initial Production for First National Proves to Be a Well-Made and Strong Curwood Story.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

STARTING with a snap, developing in the first reel a genuine "touch of nature," "The River's End," Marshall Neilan's initial production for First National, swings steadily through nearly six thousand feet to a truly smashing and gun crashing climax. The story—there really is a story—is of the frozen north and the Saskatchewan country and it is in James Oliver Curwood's best style.

As to that touch of nature: It is all the more noteworthy because it is not related to the love of man for a woman or vice versa. It is the bond of regard, or of affection if you will, that ripens between two real men, natural enemies by all the rules—one the representative of the Law, the other captured by the first on a charge of murder after a three years' hunt. His lung affected by the cold the Northwest Mounted man collapses. The captive battles to save the life of his new friend—and loses.

Early in the action there is shown a representation of the northern lights that will draw attention to the cameramen. One of these is Henry Cronjager, who nearly ten years ago was photographing Maine scenes for Edison—with the thermometer 40 degrees below and the resulting film showing no static.

The writer abominates dual roles. When "The River's End" was started on its way he had failed to note in the cast the fact that Lewis Stone sustained two parts, those of the hunter and the hunted. His near chagrin when he discovered that the smooth-faced Conniston and the bearded Keith had been portrayed by the same man was shared by a well-known director sitting at his elbow. All of which would seem to reflect to the joint credit of cameramen and director.

It may be trite but it is true to say the work of the cast is of uniform excellence. Mr. Neilan's selection of Lewis Stone is especially worthy of praise. Some of the best of the player's work is in the dialogue between the dying policeman and the one-time lawyer, who realizes that the death of his companion means his own freedom. His execution of the lone battle with the many Orientals who spring to the aid of Shan Tung is most thrilling. Marjorie Daw is a continuing delight. She has abounding youth and abundant charm, the unaffected winsomeness of the girl of sixteen, and she has her full share of gray matter.

Then there are the veterans Barney Sherry, who is with us all through the story, and George Nichols. Jane Novak has a serious role, that of a woman relentlessly pursued by the infatuated and influential Shan Tung, Togo Yamamoto's cold-blooded performance as the Oriental fascinates even as it repels.

The writer of these lines sees comparatively few pictures. No longer may he truthfully be accused of being another one of the blase and satiated reviewers. Nevertheless he makes bold to assert Marshall Neilan has scored—again—and strongly. "The River's End" will fill the eye and grip the mind of the wearer of flannel shirt and boiled shirt alike—whether in hamlet or in town.

Renunciation is the chief theme of the story—and in the working out there are two splendid examples of this greatest of human attributes.

The picture was given its first showing before the Canadian Club of New York at the Biltmore on February 16. Naturally the gathering was most critical—not only from the viewpoint of education and worldly wisdom, but also from the sentimental angle of pride of mother country. Consequently the unanimity and spontaneity of the applause at the conclusion of the showing was significant.

Story by James Oliver Curwood.
Length, 5,750 feet.

The Story.

John Keith, wanted for the murder of Peter Kirkstone, is captured after a three-year chase by Derwent Conniston, of the Royal Northwestern Mounted Police. While bringing his long-sought prisoner back to the post Conniston contracts a deadly malady. Instead of taking advantage of this opportunity to make his escape, Keith nurses his captor and tells him the story of what he believes was the justifiable killing of Kirkstone.

A bond of love and mutual sympathy grows between the two men, and by a peculiar course of nature fate has decreed that Conniston and Keith bear a remarkable resemblance to one another.

Realizing that death is but a matter of days Conniston conceives a plan whereby Keith can make his way back to civilization without fear of the hangman's noose. Keith substitutes for Conniston and after the latter's death he returns to the post, where the deception proves successful and he reports the death of the outlaw to McDowell, the post commander.

Shan Tung, a Chinaman with an uncanny faculty for remembering faces, recognizes Keith, but for reasons which he uses as a means to an end he keeps the secret.

Shan Tung is in love with the dead Kirkstone's daughter, Miriam, and under threat of disclosing the fact that young Peter Kirkstone is the real murderer, he forces Miriam to consent to marry him.

Conniston's young sister, Mary Josephine, arrives in Prince Albert after a seven year search for her brother, and believing Keith to be the object of her search showers her sisterly affections on him, although a deeper love grows in his heart for her.

When Miriam Kirkstone confides in Keith the power Shan Tung holds over her Keith has a double reason for doing away with the Chinaman. After a terrific struggle with Shan Tung and several of his hirelings, Keith is the victor. He can no longer live the lie with Mary Josephine, so after telling her the truth from beginning to end he leaves to find peace and comfort at the end of the Saskatchewan. After his departure Mary Josephine learns the true story of old man Kirkstone's death and her fraternal love for the supposed Conniston turns to a greater love for the real John Keith. With the aid of one Andy Duggan, Mary Josephine makes her way to the river's end ahead of Keith and upon his arrival happiness greets them both.

Story by Louis Alan Browne.
Scenario by R. Cecil Smith.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

"Sooner or Later" is based on the subject of mistaken identity, and the idea is carried pretty far, inasmuch as it concerns two ladies with the same surname and initials, both wearing the same kind of clothes even to the vanity bag, one living in Fairhaven, New Jersey, and the other in Fairhaven, Connecticut. Both have an engagement at the same hotel at the same time and they have mutual friends, although unknown to each other. The difference is that one of them is married, while the other is not, but apparently willing to be.

The husband of the married one becomes suspicious of her and appeals to a lawyer friend to induce her to return to her home. The lawyer is afraid of women, which in fact does not deter him from attempting to kidnap his friend's wife, but, of course, he gets the other one. He takes her to his friend's home and the situation becomes complicated by the appearance of two burglars, who are twins. The burglars eventually land in the well-stocked cellar with two policemen and all four of them fall to the lure of John Barleycorn. The wife, who has been on an innocent errand to reunite her sister and her sweetheart, appears shortly after her husband, and finds the heroine fainting in his arms. The wife then faints in the lawyer's arms, and the reunited sweethearts appear, when explanations are in order. The final fadeout shows the heroine in the hero's arms, and supposedly the others are properly disposed of.

Numerous familiar devices of the farceur's art are utilized during the action of the story, notably a chase through multiple doors, a vase broken over the wrong head, etc. The most startling scene is a rear view of the hero in his B. V. D.'s, he having torn his trousers in an attempted second-story entrance, and discarded them for the precarious protection of a woman's kitchen apron. Apparently this is what causes the heroine to faint. The title means that eventually the female of the species will get even the most pronounced woman hater.

"Burnt Wings"

Five-Reel Universal Production Presents Adaptation of Play by Bayard Veiller.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AN attractive presentation has been given "Burnt Wings," a five-reel adaptation of "The Primrose Path," by Bayard Veiller, but the underlying theme is unpleasant. The plot is one of the sex type, familiar to Broadway playgoers in particular a few years back, and carries little genuine emotion or feeling of reality to the spectator. The cast is a competent and agreeable one, but the characterizations present a strange mixture of false sentiment and human weakness.

Josephine Hill, while a comparatively inexpereinced young actress, does very well with the role of the artist's wife, who sells herself to support her struggling husband. Frank Mayo appears as the artist, who wavers between an apparently real love for his wife and the fascinations of a society girl named Helen Cartwright. Betty Blythe has the latter role, which she plays with charm. Rudolph Christians has the most difficult role, that of Cartwright, father of Helen. Cartwright, after having bought and paid for the love of the artist's wife, tries to bribe or blackmail her into divorcing her husband so that he will be free to marry Helen, Cartwright's daughter.

The opening scenes occur in Paris and the later ones in the United States. The social events and artists' exhibitions are well staged and there are some beautiful exteriors and interiors. The disappointing feature of the production is the sordid character of the plot.

The Story.

Joan Templeton, in "Burnt Wings," is the wife of Ned Templeton, a struggling young American artist in Paris. They are in bad financial straits and Ned succumbs to hunger. Joan, in this extremity, chooses the "easiest way" to gain money, acting on the advice of the threatening landlord.

The scene changes to America, where Ned and Joan are now living in happier circumstances. He is meeting with some success with his paintings, and is engaged by a wealthy man, named James Cartwright, to paint his portrait. Cartwright's daughter, Helen, a very pretty society girl, falls in love with Ned.

Joan, meeting Cartwright in the hall on one of his visits to the studio, recognizes him as the man to whom she had sold herself in Paris in order to obtain money for herself and Ned. Cartwright later learns who she is. He is desirous of procuring Ned as a husband for Helen and offers Joan a large sum of money if she will give him up. Joan protests that in spite of what she did in Paris, her love for Ned is genuine.

"Steady—Kiddies!"
Says ZaSu Pitts in her laterest Robertson-Cole, "Seeing It Through."

Later both Ned and Helen learn the truth of what transpired in Paris. Helen gives up Ned and the artist returns to Joan, convinced that her love is true.

"Seeing It Through"

Zasu Pitts Displays Striking Individuality in Brentwood Production Based on Story of Original Character.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE is forced to give more than the ordinary attention to the Robertson-Brentwood production "Seeing It Through." There is more than one reason for this; for even if the star, Zasu Pitts, had failed to display the striking individuality of conception which she has done, the story itself, with an atmosphere well established in the picture and a rather unusual characterization, is compelling.

Zasu Pitts plays a character lead. If there is a weakness in the story, it is in the arrangement of a romance between the robust, good-looking young man, Jim Carrington, and the delicate, peculiar mannered little girl, Betty Lawrence, who is totally without physical attraction. This, however, could hardly be called a weakness, and is not even improbable; but it may be less satisfying to the ordinary imagination than the usual mating of the handsome pair. Zasu Pitts' portrayal of the character of Betty is refreshing. She is quite different from any of the other screen favorites and makes her innings by her talent, not by any beauty which she might possess.

The director has been successful in mingling comedy with tragedy and in securing a quality approaching grotesqueness in the mysterious atmosphere of the home of Bogrum, a receiver of stolen goods. Edwin Stevens as Ichabod Bogrum, Hughie Mack and Anna Hernandez as Mr. and Mrs. Tweeny are all excellent. Last but not least Frank Hayes as Bolter, gave one of the best characterizations of the picture.

The Story.

Betty Lawrence, the heroine of "Seeing It Through," lives with her mother in a suburb of Los Angeles. Her home, a small but indipendent property, forms the corner of the Carrington estate, which has been taken in hand by young Jim Carrington, who has just returned from France.

Betty's mother is in failing health, and both are weary with trying to hold their little home without sufficient means. Finally, when it is necessary for Mrs. Lawrence to go to a sanitarium, they pay a visit to Ichabod Bogrum, a money lender living nearby, about whom little is known. In their plight Bogrum sees an opportunity to enrich his purse and agrees to loan them a couple of hundred dollars and to get a tenant for their home, the rent of which is to be sent by him to pay the mother's bills at the sanitorium. In addition he offers Betty a position in his home as an assistant stenographer to Bolter, a peculiar character taken from an orphan asylum and beaten into submission by Bogrum. When the mother dies Bogrum piles up debts against the Lawrence property, and succeeds in swindling Betty out of it.

Information supplied by Bolter, who finally turns as did the proverbial worm, leads Jim Carrington, who is in love with Betty, to investigate. Bogrum is rounded up, made to relinquish his spoils, and is landed in prison. Jim Carrington and Betty decide that after this they will see things through together.

"On With the Dance"

George Fitzmaurice Production with Mae Murray and David Powell Is Interesting Paramount Release.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AS the name indicates, "On with the Dance" is a reflection of the feverish life of today under the lights of Times Square. Taken from a play by Michael Morton it deals interestingly with men and women with the average amount of good and bad in their natures and indicates clearly the uselessness of trying to evade the moral law. The story does not boast a hero who is the possessor of all the virtues or a heroine whose conduct will always meet with approbation; but both learn, through suffering, that contentment and happiness come only with right living, and the final scene finds them traveling different paths in the company of life partners suited to their temperaments.

The theme of "On with the Dance" is not a big one, but the George Fitzmaurice production of the scenario by Ouida Bergere adds vastly to the picture's importance and brings out all of the entertaining qualities of the story. Sound judgment of its dramatic possibilities and thorough artistic ability to transfer them to the screen is demonstrated throughout, the efforts of the two leading players and the supporting company being uniformly excellent. The casting of the picture required unusually careful thought. Mae Murray and David Powell are admirably suited to their characters, and in selecting Alma Tell and John Miltern for the two persons who finally bring joy and peace to the mis-mated couple, the situation is made convincing by the force of correct personality. Miss Murray's skill as a dancer is utilized naturally during the unfolding of the plot and her indication of the many moods of an impulsive, warm-hearted but self-willed Russian girl, who is thrown into unaccustomed luxury and almost spoiled by the experience is cleverly calculated to please and to persuade. David Powell as Peter Derwynt presents a human portrait of the character that is without one false or over-acted touch. Robert Schable as the unmoral but breezy Jimmie Sutherland wins unexpected laughs for a likable rascal who pays in the end for his reckless materialism.

Ouida Bergere has constructed her scenario with skill, and keeps the steady progress of the plot always in mind. Director Fitzmaurice, by his strict attention to every detail and generous policy of production, has made his first special for Paramount-Artcraft a picture of distinct merit.

Schuyler Van Vechtan	John Miltern
Jimmie Sutherland	Robert Schable
Countess of Raystone	Ida Waterman

Story by Michael Morton.
Scenario by Ouida Bergere.
Directed by George Fitzmaurice.
Length, 6,483 feet.

The Story.

Peter Derwynt, a young architect from the South, comes to New York and obtains a situation with the wealthy Schuyler Van Vechtan. Here he meets Lady Loane Tremelyn, whose mother has brought her to America to find a rich husband. She falls honestly in love with Derwynt, but the arrival of Sonia Varinoff at the Van Vechtan home and the circumstance under which Peter and the Russian girl are thrown together causes Lady Loane to believe the two are strongly attracted to each other. This is true on Sonia's part, but Peter has learned to care for the English woman. Sonia, who is passionately fond of dancing and who has never known luxury until brought under the protection of Van Vechtan after the death of her father, fairly throws herself at Peter. Lady Loane having put herself out of the architect's reach by marrying a western millionaire known as Jimmie Sutherland, the Russian girl catches Derwynt on the rebound.

Finding that her husband's income cannot supply her desire for fine clothes, Sonia determines to earn the money by her dancing. She has attracted the attention of Sutherland and he suggests that she appear at a cabaret owned by him and bill herself as the "marked dancer." Mrs. Derwynt does so and is a great hit. In the meantime Peter and Lady Loane discover the fatal mistake they have both made in their marriages, but remain true to their better halves. One of Sutherland's old flames finds out who the masked dancer is and tears off her mask while Sonia is in the midst of her dance. This leads to a violent scene between Peter and Sutherland and when the architect is accused of having compromised Sutherland's wife, Peter shoots him dead.

At the trial there is but one way to save Peter's life and Sonia takes it. She goes on the stand and swears away her own reputation by claiming that her misconduct with Sutherland justified the shooting. Derwynt is acquitted, is freed from Sonia and marries Lady Loane. The final scene shows Sonia the wife of Van Vechtan, who has stood by her through everything and who has always loved her.

"Broken Bubbles"

First Hank Man Two-Reel Comedy for Arrow Contains Many Laughs.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

GETTING off with a flying start, "Broken Bubbles," the first release of a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies starring Hank Mann, to be distributed by Arrow Film Corporation, sets a rapid pace for the subjects that are to follow.

The star appears in his usual type of comedy characterization and there are many laugh-provoking situations. He is supported by a competent cast headed by Madge Kirby. The story deals with a poor chap, with only fifty cents, who hesitates whether to buy a meal with it or visit a fortune teller. He chooses the latter, and gazing into a crystal globe, he is told to follow the horses. He is then shown working around a racing stable, and, of course, rides the heroine's horse to victory. That night they decide to celebrate in a cabaret, where several amusing complications ensue. All this is revealed in the crystal ball and, waking up, Hank finds himself in the fortune teller's booth. Going out, he gazes longingly at the sign advertising meals for a half a dollar.

While some audiences may not like the pitchfork episode, there are several other situations, both in the racing and cabaret scenes which will cause many laughs.

"Wolves of the Street"

Arrow Film Corporation Presents Edmund F. Cobb in Highly Sensational Six-Reel Melodrama.

PLENTY of action in a lavish profusion of melodramatic scenes characterizes "The Wolves of the Street." The hero plunges along through all sorts of dangers and difficulties with headlong vigor, and there is characterization, something unusual in this kind of play. The hero impersonated by Edmund F. Cobb has the spirit of adventure in his soul. He takes desperate chances in truly American style from love of what stirs his blood, trusting to escape through keen use of his brains and physical strength. It is this spirit of measuring mind and mettle against hard things to achieve which appeals powerfully to American youth and to many of us who refuse to grow old. Through this characterization the Arrow production has a strong appeal to man who still believes himself master of his own fate.

Though "Wolves of the Street" pictures a bitter conflict between men of vast wealth, the consequences depend on the energy and determination of the son of one of them. On his manly traits and on his courage in breaking out of the dull routine of existence hinge all the incidents and most of the feeling. The mood of the story, leading straight on to his success, is one of high optimism. This sort of melodrama will suit all classes. Edmund F. Cobb has caught the mood in his impersonation. Constantly alert, ever ready for action, he represents something, the American who fights to his last breath for his ideals. The scenes of infinite variety are short and swift. The whole production deserves to win, and there is little doubt that it will meet with decided success wherever shown.

The Story.

"Wolves of the Street" are Mangan and his asociates, brokers attempting a corner in wheat, injurious to America and the whole world. Determined opponent is Roderick Trevlyn. Between Mangan and Trevlyn it is a battle to the bitter end, with the radical element and labor agitators dangerous aids to Mangan. A sudden change comes when Trevlyn is mysteriously murdered. His son, James, is called from the active management of a Wyoming mine to avenge the murder and carry on the fight. He does so with staggering vigor, utilizing all the resources of his youth and his father's wealth until the Mangan party is obliged to resort to one hideous crime after another to escape defeat.

Again and again the life of James Trevlyn is attempted, and every mean device of the cunning and unscrupulous is used to defraud him . He and his sweetheart, Eleanor Fernwood, have made many friends among the humble, and warning comes from these to help guard against evil machinations. Young Trevlyn, however, is as alive in vigilance as he is in action. Once he fails. He comes upon a man who closely resembles him, Denver Devers, and trusts Devers to impersonate him while he goes West to untangle serious difficulties at the mine.

Devers quickly becomes the tool of the Mangan party for what there is in it. From him they learn of Trevlyn's trip and contrive to have him kidnapped on his arrival. Dever's, meanwhile, impersonating Trevlyn in the latter's office, disorganizes the attack on the Mangan crowd Only by wonderful presence of mind and remarkable exhibitions of daring does young Trevlyn escape from the toils cunningly laid for him, but he triumphs in the end. He wins the men of his mine from the radical agitators, brings Mangan to justice, is the indirect cause of Dever's tragic death, and guides his sweetheart into a harbor of security and love.

"Black Is White"

Thomas H. Ince Production for Paramount-Artcraft Starring Dorothy Dalton Grippingly Portrays Mother Love.

Reviewed by Charles Bennett.

MOTHER love, the most irrestible appeal to audiences the world over, is grippingly portrayed in "Black Is White," the Paramount-Artcraft picture adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel. True drama is presented worthily in this rather heavy subject, which centers about the unreasoning jealousy of a husband who is suspicious that even his son is not his own, finally drives his wife from his home. The wife flees to the home of her invalid sister and causes her husband and the world to believe she has died.

Dorothy Dalton displays creditable dramatic ability in the double role of the devoted young wife, Margaret, driven from the shelter of her home; and later as Yvonne, the brilliant, charming French woman with whom the husband, after long years of exile, falls in love and re-marries without suspecting her identity. The story is replete with tense, emotional scenes, quite successfully staged and well timed.

Polka Dots are Neutral.
Dorothy Dalton's attire is appropriate in her Paramount, "Black Is White."

The photography is deserving of praise, and no small portion of the success of the presentation is due to the beautiful settings, showing to advantage the superb gowns worn by Miss Dalton. The titles are good, but the picture might perhaps have been enlivened by a bit more of humor, to relieve the constantly recurring anti-climaxes and emotional scenes. Withal the story is appealing and merits the success which it is sure to meet. The role of the jealous husband is cleverly handled by Holmes E. Herbert, and the supporting cast is agreeable.

"The Very Idea"

Metro Presents Taylor Holmes in An Adaptation from the Popular Stage Comedy by William Le Baron.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

DEALING principally with the parental longings of a childless young couple having more money than brains, "The Very Idea" lightly touches a problem of eugenics, the screen version offering a very practical solution. Some of the lines of the original play which brought spontaneous laughter when uttered make fairly good subtitles on the screen, and they are helped out by lively caricatures, but they play a less important part than might be expected. Their bright double meanings are often obscured from lack of vocal intonation. Where the effect of the spoken word is not depended on for entertainment, the Metro product moves along easily through pleasant scenes, and the well-selected cast furnishes many interesting personalities.

Taylor Holmes does so well as a wealthy young inanity that one intuitively sympathizes with the eugenist's remark, "I don't know how Edith ever came to marry such a simp." His role of amiable stupidity could not be better interpreted. Possibly the greatest charm of the production comes from the impersonations of Virginia Valli, Fay Marble and Bessie Rose Clarke, These three ladies are not only exquisite types, but they are veritable actresses of the screen, graceful of movement, of pose and of poise, their faces eloquent in the language of silence.

The best general effect of "The Very Idea" as pictured is a visualized answer to the question of how to have children. The reply is plainly "Go fit yourselves for it by active physical exercise in the open." If this gets over strongly, the comedy is well worth showing in all parts of the country.

The Story.

"The Very Idea" of adopting a baby is hard to adopt by childless young Goodhue and his wife Edith, though they lack nothing on earth except that which money cannot buy. At the suggestion of a eugenic friend they arrange to forward the marriage of two of their servants, Joe, the chauffeur ,and Norah, the maid, already in love, but too poor to rear children. An agreement is entered into that the first child of the sturdy chauffeur and healthy maid shall be adopted by young Mr. Goodhue and his wife. They thereupon go on a long vacation and await events. At a Florida resort they both become interested in the superb dancing of a public entertainer. Edith takes up strenuous morning exercises and daily sea bathing. Goodhue has to follow suit to keep his wife from overexerting herself. He also becomes interested in the dancer for another reason—he hopes to purchase a pretty baby he thinks is hers. He is bound to succeed, even if he has to vamp the lady.

Edith, now fast becoming vigorous, finds her emotions so highly developed that she becomes desperately jealous. In a moment of wild impulse she abandons her husband and is only restored to him after many exciting adventures. She then learns that his motives were to buy a baby, and the young couple become ardently in love with each other. On their return home they find that the maid has given her robust husband a bouncing boy, but she cannot bring herself to part with him. Some embarrassment follows as the eugenist has prepared a hygienic nursery and friends call to see the supposed Goodhue baby. When the whole foolish plot is revealed, and Norah is allowed to go home with her child, the eugenist offers her the baby clothes, but Mrs. Goodhue refuses to part with them. Asked for an explanation, she whispers to her husband, and he announces with a broad smile that Florida is a great state.

"The Charming Mrs. Chase"

First of Mrs. Sidney Drew "After Thirty" Series for Pathe Two-Reelers One of the Best Ever.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE first of the Julian Street "After Thirty" stories to be adapted to film by Mrs. Sidney Drew for the Path Exchange, Inc., is "The Charming Mrs. Chase." The subtlety of presentation, which involves subtitling as well as direction, is a "carry on" from the former Drew comedies. It contains an abundance of refined humor, pleasing domestic touches, with a moment of retrospect adding an artistic splash of a different color.

Mrs. Sidney Drew adapted the story to the screen and also directed the picture. And if Mrs. Drew is able to do continuous work of such a high order, let us hope that she will not grow tired of helping to provide the public with the refined comedy entertainment, which she has proved herself able to do.

John Cumberland, the featured member of the cast, is delightful in the role of Mr. Wickett who, in his matrimonial canoe grown to the size of a canal boat with the weight of family cares, decides that his dull domestic life will stand a leavening of adventure. A social event brings him in touch with Mrs. Chase, a charming woman who admits that she is over thirty, and under the influence of the bright lights responds to Mr. Wickett's flattering comments on her youthful appearance, accepts an invitation to lunch on the following day.

Mrs. Wickett, who has had her eye on the pair, is equal to the occasion, and on the following morning is unusually buoyant in manner, and not in the least put out when her husband admits that he is going to lunch with Mrs. Chase. The inevitable follows—the adventure suddenly loses its "kick" and by the time he meets Mrs. Chase at the restaurant, it has entirely lose its flavor. Mrs. Chase is also regretful, and the end of it all is that each is discovered at home admitting that adventure after thirty requires too much effort.

The role of Mrs. Wickett is skilfully handled by Eleanor Custis, and Dorothy Wallace is equally attractive as Mrs. Chase.

A Correction

IN the review of the Arrow Film Corporation's pictures "The Wall Street Mystery" and "The Scrap of Paper," two of the twelve feature series "Tex, the Elucidator of Mysteries," a mistake was made in the solution of the two plots. The Chinatown scenes, which establish a false lead, belong to "The Wall Street Mystery." In ""The Scrap of Paper" a man who has lost money through one of the men connected with the provision pool, and has placed a dictograph in the room in which the three men met in the home of Jacob Strauss. He enters by the window, shoots Strauss and in wresting the agreement from him a portion of the paper is left in the injured man's hand. His immediate disappearance throws the blame on the last man to leave the room after the quarrel.

Comments

THE BALL OF DEATH (Pathe), Chapter 2 of "Daredevil Jack."—This installment gives Jack Dempsey numerous opportunities to show his fistic abilities, of which he takes full advantage. As a serial star he is clean-cut and athletic and trounces his opponents without undue brutality. In this number he interrupts a safe robber and later is threatened with death while about to kick a loaded football which his enemies have prepared for him. The action of the number is good and the incidents are stirring.

LIQUID FACES (Universal). No. 18, the final chapter of "The Great Radium Mystery." This brings the serial to a satisfactory conclusion. Gloria has the radium restored to her by the man of mystery and is overjoyed when she learns his true identity. The Buzzard and others of the gang are killed. The serial, as a whole, has contained considerable padding and repetition of situations, but on the other hand has had a lot of legitimate thrills. As a whole it has carried the interest well and runs stronger than the average.

A SAGEBRUSH GENTLEMAN (Western), Feb. 21.—A two-reel subject, written by Karl R. Coolidge. Robert Burns appears as the cowboy hero and Charlotte Merriam as the heroine. The girl is abducted by some bandits, who mistake her for an heiress named June Martin. The hero saves her from them. The plot of this is rather conventional, but it contains good action and holds the interest well.

THE PERILOUS PLUNGE (Universal), Chapter 10 of "The Lion Man." The man of mystery ,known as the "Lion Man," takes a prominent part in this number, appearing just at the moment Enright is preparing to destroy the Cavendish will. The later events on the mine derrick are of an exciting nature. Jim saves the Lion Man from death and in accomplishing this meets new dangers on his own account.

AT THE MERCY OF MONSTERS (Universal), Chapter 11 of "The Lion Man." This is an interesting number, full of action and melodramatic incidents. Jim and Stella enter into a mining partnership. One of Enright's men enters their employ and disrupts the laborers. Jim has an exciting combat with the men, while Stella goes for the payroll money. An explosion and a fire bring the number to a strong climax.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E.T. KEYSER

How a Modern Operating Room May Be Arranged and Equipped to Advantage

By J. H. Hallberg, vice-president, United Theatre Equipment Corporation

THE accompanying illustration shows the interior of a modern projection room for motion picture theatres. The lay-out is simple and efficient, consisting of two Power's 6-B Cameragraphs properly placed, together with one Hallberg motor generator for changing alternating or direct current, as supplied from the electric companies' mains, into direct current of the proper voltage and intensity for the two projector arc lamps.

The function of the motor generator is, in the first instance, to dispense with the use of the rheostat usually required in series with the arc, and, in the second instance, where the current supplied by the city system is not direct but alternating, to transform the alternating into direct current, which is the only satisfactory current for a projector arc lamp.

The illustration shows the small amount of space required for the motor generator, which can be located in a corner of the operating room, in an adjoining room, or in the basement if so desired. The better practice, however, is to always put the motor generator within the operating room, within constant view and reach of the operator, who will then be more likely to give it the ordinary and regular attention, such as cleaning and lubricating, which it requires.

The motor generator runs quietly and smoothly, with minimum vibration, and the ordinary operating room capable of sustaining a weight of not to exceed 600 pounds can easily support its weight. It should not be bolted to the floor, but should be placed on flexible pads, such as double thickness rubber heels as are ordinarily used on shoes. The rubber will absorb the vibration without transmitting it to the floor and will practically kill all noise, so the motor may not be heard above the sound produced by the projectors when operating. The modern projector operates so quietly that it cannot be heard outside of the operating room; therefore, it is better practice to put the entire equipment within one room, as illustrated.

Where electricity is not to be obtained from a city plant or other installation, and where it becomes necessary for the motion picture theatre to produce its own electricity for projection and the regular house illuminating system, the practice is to install a gasoline or kerosene engine directly connected to an electric generator, together with the necessary switchboard with instrument, controlling devices and cooling radiator or tank for the water required to keep the cylinders of the engine at normal temperature.

A Complete and Self-Contained Unit.

The unit which is herewith illustrated is known as the Hallberg 6 k.w. Electric Light Plant and is complete as a self-contained unit, ready for immediate installation and operation after it has been unboxed.

Attention is directed to the three point suspension, which gives free access to the crank case under the engine, which may be removed without disturbing any other part of the plant after unscrewing eight bolts. This feature is of great importance, especially where the plants are used long distances away from regular service stations, as it then becomes a simple matter to remove the crank case for cleaning and for the examination of the various bearings and fittings within the lower part of the engine, and, likewise, the complete connecting rod with the piston from either cylinder may be removed in this manner without disturbing the upper part of the engine.

The engine shown is equipped with the highest efficiency carburetor, hot air stove, magneto and silent muffler, making a most convenient, practical and efficient unit, and the generator is wound for either 60 volts 100 amperes or 110 volts 60 amperes. The total net weight of the unit is 800 pounds and the gross weight boxed for export is 1,000 pounds, and the box containing the plant measures 68x45x30 inches.

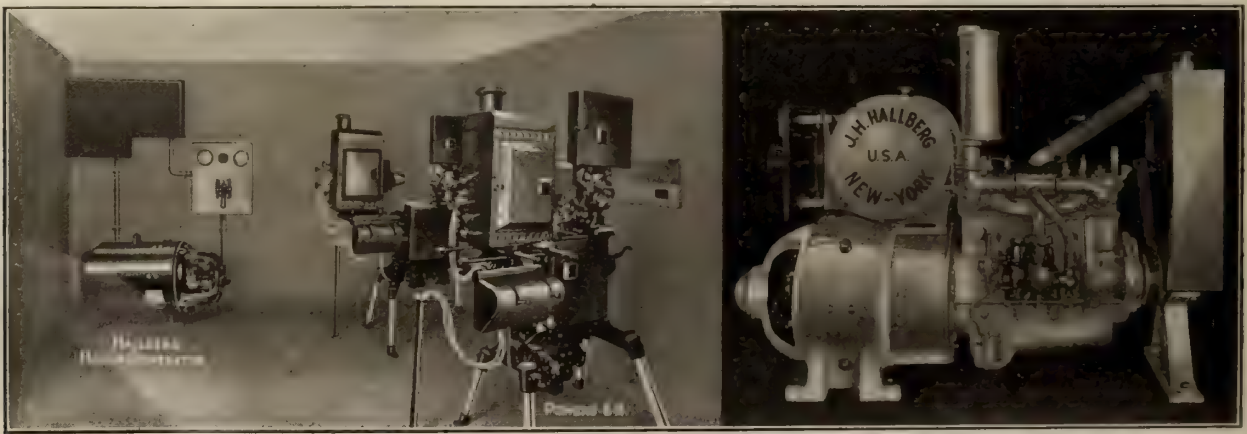
The engine is of twelve horsepower capacity and operates at a speed of 1,000 r.p.m., and is of just the right size for the average motion picture theatre, keeping in mind that the auditorium lamps would not be burning when the moving picture arc is on.

What Inquirers Should State.

It is essential for buyers to state, when inquiring about engines of this type, whether kerosene or gasoline will be used as fuel, and also to specify whether the winding is to be for 60 or 110 volts.

When inquiring for prices on motor generators, it is not sufficient to merely state the voltage and the number of amperes, but the following information should be submitted with the request for prices:

(1) Line Voltage.
(2) If alternating current, specify



A Well Arranged Projection Room and Its Equipment.
The Hallberg Generating Plant at right is substituted for the motor generator when current from central station is unobtainable.

cycles of the system and whether the system is single, two or three phase.

(3) Specify the number of amperes required at the arc.

One or Two Arcs?

(4) Specify if one or two arcs are to be operated at the same time. In some instances a generator may be installed with capacity for one arc, when it is desired to light the second arc, it is possible to "steal" the current from the operating machine to the one cut in without practically any interruption on the screen, and in that case a generator delivering the necessary amperes for one arc only will serve the purpose, but the better practice is to install a generator large enough to carry the two arcs at full amperage for at least five minutes at a time.

(5) If you are not competent to judge the amperes required at the arc, specify the make of your projector, the focus of your lens, if you know it, and the distance from the lens to the screen; also the height and width of the picture, as well as the quality of your screen, that is, if it is white, aluminum finish or of the gold fibre kind.

What Causes Delay.

With this information at hand, the inquirer may receive prompt replies with absolute prices; otherwise the inquiry may be subjected to considerable delay.

The above described Hallberg Motor Generators and Hallberg Electric Light Plants are manufactured by J. H. Hallberg of New York and are distributed exclusively in the United States and Canada by the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, 1604 Broadway, New York, U. S. A.

How the Monsoon System of Theatre Ventilation Cools or Heats at Will

By E. O. GARFIELD, Chief Engineer Monsoon System

IN THE heating and ventilating of theatres the customary procedure is to locate direct radiation, or to introduce heated air at or near the floor line, with the exhaust at the ceiling line. Naturally the air brought in, being at a higher temperature, and consequently lighter than the air in the room, quickly rises to the highest point—where it is exhausted. The heavier, foul air remains at the breathing line (except a small percentage which mixes with the fresh air and rises to the ceiling). The result is only a partial movement of the air within the room—and poor ventilation.

Speaking from the standpoint of economy, this is very inefficient—due to the exhaust at the ceiling line. This removes much of the fresh air and with it also an unduly large amount of heat. Actually the freshest and warmest air in the entire room is exhausted before it has fulfilled its function of replacing the foul air and supplying heat to the theatre.

An Even Temperature at Floor Line.

A method already used with excellent success in several theatres is to introduce warm fresh air at the ceiling line and exhaust it downward at the floor line. While this is contrary to the natural upward movement of warm light air, it does effect a complete change of air, with an even distribution of fresh air and an absolutely even temperature at the floor line. And, because with this system the air exhausted is the coldest air in the room, it is efficient.

Regarding this method of heating and ventilating, such an authority as Vernon Hill, M. D., Chief of Ventilation Division, Chicago Health Department, has this to say:

"The location of the coils at the ceiling line and the distribution around the four sides of the room make it possible to obtain much more uniform temperature where the direct radiation is split up into small units at the floor line. The fact that the air is introduced at the ceiling also removes the warm air in the neighborhood of the radiation and prevents the wide difference in temperature between the ceiling and the floor that is observed in the ordinary installations. The entire air travel being downward, with a very slight lateral motion, prevents drafts on the occupants."

What the Plans Show.

The accompanying plans show a method of heating and ventilating and of cooling in hot weather—all as designed and installed by the engineers of the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., for the Century Theatre, Baltimore.

For heating and ventilating, Units C and D are the sole means of supply, located at practically one point. Each unit consists of one No. 7 Monsoon pulling fresh air through heating coils and blowing it directly into the theatre through grilled openings in the proscenium arch above the stage.

About seventy-five per cent. of this air is exhausted through properly distributed openings at or near the main floor line and other openings at the rear of the balcony. As the foul heavy air which, because of its low temperature, lies at the floor line is exhausted, it is replaced by the fresh warm air which settles like a blanket of even warmth over the entire audience without the slightest tendency to drafts.

Builds Up Static Pressure.

The air supply not exhausted through the openings mentioned above builds up a slight static pressure in the room. This prevents the inrush of cold air attending the opening of a door in most theatres.

This method of heating and ventilating is effective. Briefly its advantages may be summed up as follows: 1—Rapid heating of theatre. 2—Abundant supply of warm fresh air, equally distributed. 3—Absence of objectionable drafts. 4—Economy of operation.

And the first cost also is low.

Because it acts from the roof, expensive duct work, underground trenches and other costly appliances are eliminated. In the Century Theatre, the saving in cost of the underground trench work paid almost the entire cost of the Monsoon System. And more, it saved time in the construction of the theatre and permitted an earlier completion.

For Baltimore's warm climate, witn its several very hot weeks during the summer months, an efficient method of cooling is necessary. The Monsoon Cooling System used in this theatre is based on the cooling effect resulting from a steady flow of huge volumes of fresh air.

Hot Weather Capacity Doubled.

Monsoon Engineers so designed the system that the same two No. 7 Monsoons (Units C and D) used for heating and ventilating in winter are arranged with simple by-pass dampers to give complete free air intake, thus doubling their capacity for hot weather duty.

They are further augmented by two No. 12 Monsoons above the stage (Units A and B), and by two No. 7 Monsoon Duplex Sets (Units E and F), over the lower edge of the balcony on each side.

The arrows indicate the course followed by the air currents in their sweep through the house. In the Century Theatre a total of 34,000,000 cubic feet is passed through the theatre every hour—10,000 cubic feet for each person, or a complete air change every forty-five seconds.

It can readily be seen that a refreshing breeze is thus set up, reaching every person in the audience—and making him comfortable in the hottest summer weather.

These Two Devices Effect Projection Room Economy

THE two devices described and illustrated below will prove of interest to the progressive house manager who seeks to improve his service and cut out unnecessary costs.

They are products of the National Carbon Company of Cleveland, Ohio, that has accomplished so much in putting American carbons upon the projection map.

The Columbia Carbon Saver.

The Columbia Carbon Saver saves money—saves time—saves trouble. By the aid of this holder, motion picture projectionists are using their carbons to the best advantage.

Simply placing the Columbia (upper) carbon in the holder and then tightening the clamp—which requires but little effort—the projectionist is assured of the following results:

Maximum life of carbons—the holder burns the carbon to an extremely short stub.

Ruggedness and Simplicity.

The illustration shows the ruggedness and simplicity of the Columbia Carbon Saver. It will fit any carbon jaw and is made of special material enabling it to function properly despite heat effects. Users note the absence of any tendency for the working parts and screw to "stick"; or any difficulty in clamping or in removing carbons from the holder.

This device takes all carbons up to and including the ⅞ inch size.

The Silvertip Adaptor.

Like the Columbia Carbon Saver, the Silvertip Adaptor is not only a vise-like holder but an adjunct to carrying the full current without arcing.

It is designed to permit the use of the Silvertip (lower) carbon in any type of projection machine, and will pay for itself many times over in the economy effected by burning the carbons to very short stubs.

By reason of the material from which this adaptor is made and the ruggedness of construction, it is practically a permanent accessory to the projection apparatus.

Breadth of Rim a Feature.

Attention is called to the generous breadth which characterizes the top rim of the holder. This lends great strength to the device. It takes but a slight turn of the clamp to hold the carbon firmly in place; in fact the user is cautioned not to turn the screw too tightly, otherwise the pressure is likely to break the carbon. If this one precaution is observed there is no chance of anything going wrong. Any deposit from carbon is easily removed from the jaw because of the simple design of the adaptor. The screw plate and the freedom of play within the holder allow for complete burning of the carbons with no troublesome effects.

This adaptor takes all sizes of Silvertip Carbons, namely the 5/16 inch, 11/32 inch, ⅜ inch and 7/16 inch sizes.

The Price is But One Dollar.

In our issue of February 14 we made a mis-statement as to the price of the "Pocket Reference Book for Projectionists and Managers."

The cost of the book is but one dollar, which makes it even a greater bargain than we gave it credit for being. It is published by the Theatre Supply Company, 125 West Forty-fifth street, New York.

CONCERNING THE RAISE IN MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S RATES FOR ADVERTISING

The war began to affect the price of various commodities in 1915.

When the United States entered the war, labor and all essentials connected with newspaper publishing jumped abnormally.

For the year following the armistice the already extreme cost of production was immensely increased. Everybody knows what everything costs nowadays—and we are still at war.

The rates to-day are the same per page as when the world war started.

For five years Moving Picture World shouldered the increased cost of production; stood it until finally a changed rate became a necessity.

Our advertising friends have reaped the benefit of a lower rate than any other trade-class have enjoyed in their publications.

Our subscribers have benefited because we did not raise the subscription rate, and they will continue to receive Moving Picture World without increased cost.

Now the time has come when the advertising rate must be increased. Had three "raises" been applied to the rates while war existed, the percentage of advance would appear small.

The advertiser who figures the new rate, considering the price he has paid while everything else has been "boosted", will find that the new charge is only a fair advance.

The new rates as advertised will become effective with the next issue.

The QUESTION and the ANSWER

Will the Perfected AUTOMATICKET REGISTER do what we claim it will? Will it make good day in and day out? Ask the thousands of motion picture theatre users.

THE PERFECTED AUTOMATICKET REGISTER

is selling on what it has done and is doing. One exhibitor telling another that the AUTOMATICKET REGISTER is helping him to make more money out of his enterprise is what sells it.

If it is good business for thousands of other exhibitors to install an AUTOMATICKET REGISTER, it's good business for you. We'll be glad to send you full information if you'll write for it.

WILSON EXPECTED TO BE BACK AT HIS DESK IN SPRING

President Steadily Improving and No Complications Now Confront Doctors.

His Favorite Diversions Are Reading and Witnessing White House Movies.

By David Lawrence.

(Special Correspondent of The Evening World).

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6. (Copyright 1920).—President Wilson seems to be getting along about as well as could be expected for a man who has had a severe nervous breakdown.

ENJOYS MOVING PICTURES IN WHITE HOUSE.

To relieve the monotony of the White House, the President's household have installed a moving picture machine and screen in the big East room, the handsome salon of crystal chandeliers, polished floors, gilded piano and ornamental vases, in which room ceremonies such as the presentation of distinguished foreigners and official receptions and other functions of social brilliance have been held in the past.

There sits the President nowadays, surrounded by members of his family, watching the antics of the slap-stick comedian as well as the dramatic episodes of film life—a diversion which the American public enjoys in crowded theatres, but which Mr. Wilson in the solitude of the White House can have at any time he waves the Presidential wand.

The President is susceptible to cold [illegible] physician has had to [illegible] when he [illegible] the White House is not such an easy place to keep in an even temperature, which is one reason why the President has had to be kept on the upper floors of the Executive Mansion, most of the time before an open fireplace.

It can hardly be said that official business doesn't reach Mr. Wilson when it should. There are numerous questions which must necessarily be solved by Cabinet members on their own responsibility but when it comes to the treaty controversy and matters of appointment to high offices Mr. Wilson is personally occupied with them.

GETS DAILY REPORTS FROM SENATOR HITCHCOCK

He gets daily reports from Senator Hitchcock, and a resume of what is happening in the political world from his private secretary, so he manages to keep informed.

It is a distressing confinement to Woodrow Wilson who has kept Washington on the jump for the last seven years in a pace reminiscent of his arch political [illegible] Theodore Roosevelt. [illegible]

IN A GAME OF POKER ONE CANNOT ALWAYS FILL HIS HAND, BUT THE EXHIBITOR IS ALWAYS SURE OF A FULL HOUSE WHEN HE DRAWS RITCHEY POSTERS!

BETWEEN poker and real life there are many similarities, and in both the shrewder man is the winner in the long run, for he grows to know and understand the actions and the reactions, the likes and the dislikes, of the people he plays with.

The exhibitor's game is played with the public, and the public like, and invariably re-act favorably to the RITCHEY poster. The exhibitor should not have to trust to luck to get them. He is entitled to them, and he should have them.

Experience convinces him that he draws a full house with RITCHEY posters, —and that the amount of his winnings is only limited by the size of his auditorium! Such experience breeds a positive faith in RITCHEY posters, —for they are as superior to other posters as blue chips are to white!

To offer him a substitute is pointless, —for the RITCHEY poster has no substitute!

A Great Actress in A Great Play

SIR ARTHUR PINERO has written in "His House in Order" one of the greatest plays of modern times. Great in heart appeal, great in dramatic action, great in emotional depth.

WITH ELSIE FERGUSON as the star in the wonderful picture version of this play, exhibitors have a combination that means box-office value in the highest degree.

IN her hands the play takes on new life and meaning, the role of Nina becomes more poignant, more alive, more stirring, than it was on the stage.

"Who Cares?" she cried!

And in the whirling madness of a masked ball, drowning in music and dancing, she tried to forget—to kill the memories that cut like knives.

"Who Cares?" he cried!

And under soft candle light, soothed by the voice of a flattering woman, he strove to forget his wife and the girl she used to be.

At Home, their child—

Stricken by fever, her life ebbing away, pitifully striving to bring back her parents, called in vain.

What had come between them?
What could bring them together?

Their story is the story of many, and it will touch the heart of every man and woman.

"Young Mrs. Winthrop" will leave them weeping but happy. You know what that means to your box office.

Beautiful manor-houses, archery fields, training quarters, luxurious salons and picturesque drives furnish the background for this story of stories.

So long as audiences are made up of human beings, this type of picture cannot but hold a depth of appeal. The interest is kept at fever heat until the end of the great climax—the Derby.

A Great Play is Brought to the Screen

Its remarkable record on the stage—nearly three years in London, a year in Chicago, a phenomenal season in New York, a special engagement of eight weeks in Boston—made it the object of the keenest bidding among motion picture producers.

United Artists Corporation is fortunate, not only in having acquired the play for picture presentation, but likewise in having Miss Keane herself appear in the role that she has made one of the most vivid figures of the modern stage.

"Romance" has won its way into the hearts of drama-lovers, because it tells an unusual, remarkable story and because of the rare talent and artistry that Miss Keane brought to it.

MEN'S SHOES

Adapted from Andrew Soutar's famous story. A gem of a picture, with a gem's beauty and brilliance. Edgar Lewis directed "The Barrier," "The Great Divide," "The Bar Sinister," "The Plunderer," "Northern Lights" and "Hiawatha." You remember those pictures and that they were the means of his being declared one of the greatest of all directors. You remember how successful they were. Edgar Lewis never made a better picture than "Other Men's Shoes."

DAREDEVIL JACK

We can hear some one say "I'll admit that Dempsey is a superlative box office attraction, but is the serial itself good?"

Listen, Mr. Man; the Pathe film committee looks at so many pictures that it is "fed up", it's hardboiled. It takes a ring dinger of a picture to get a good rating from that crowd. Weeks ago the first episodes of "Daredevil Jack" were shown all together to the committee, a hard test. There were fourteen present; thirteen gave the serial the highest possible rating and the fourteenth the next highest!

If we know serial audiences they'll just eat this serial up. Dempsey as a star is there and Robert Brunton has given true feature production.

More "Heart" in it than any picture of the year.

It is not the action and the great "rushes" that make "The Sagebrusher" so wonderful and popular with exhibitors and the public. Yet, the action of the picture is tremendous.

It is a big production, a big story, because of its downright humanness, its warmth, its romance, its tenderness. Its love story is as warm as a mother's heart.

Millions of people are crowding into theatres to see and feel the wonderful players who live before their very eyes a genuine, beautiful drama of life.

"The Sagebrusher" has everything in it that all kinds of audiences like and seek on the screen. It was slowly, deliberately made and months were taken to give it that "touch" that can never be achieved by accident.

Its first-run successes with the largest and most important theatres have given it the rank of the leading production in most of the exchange territories of the country.

Who's Your Servant?

Many and Many a big Picture Has Failed for the Lack of Proper Exploitation "Who's Your Servant" Has More Exploitation Possibilities Than Any Three Pictures Put Out in the Last Year

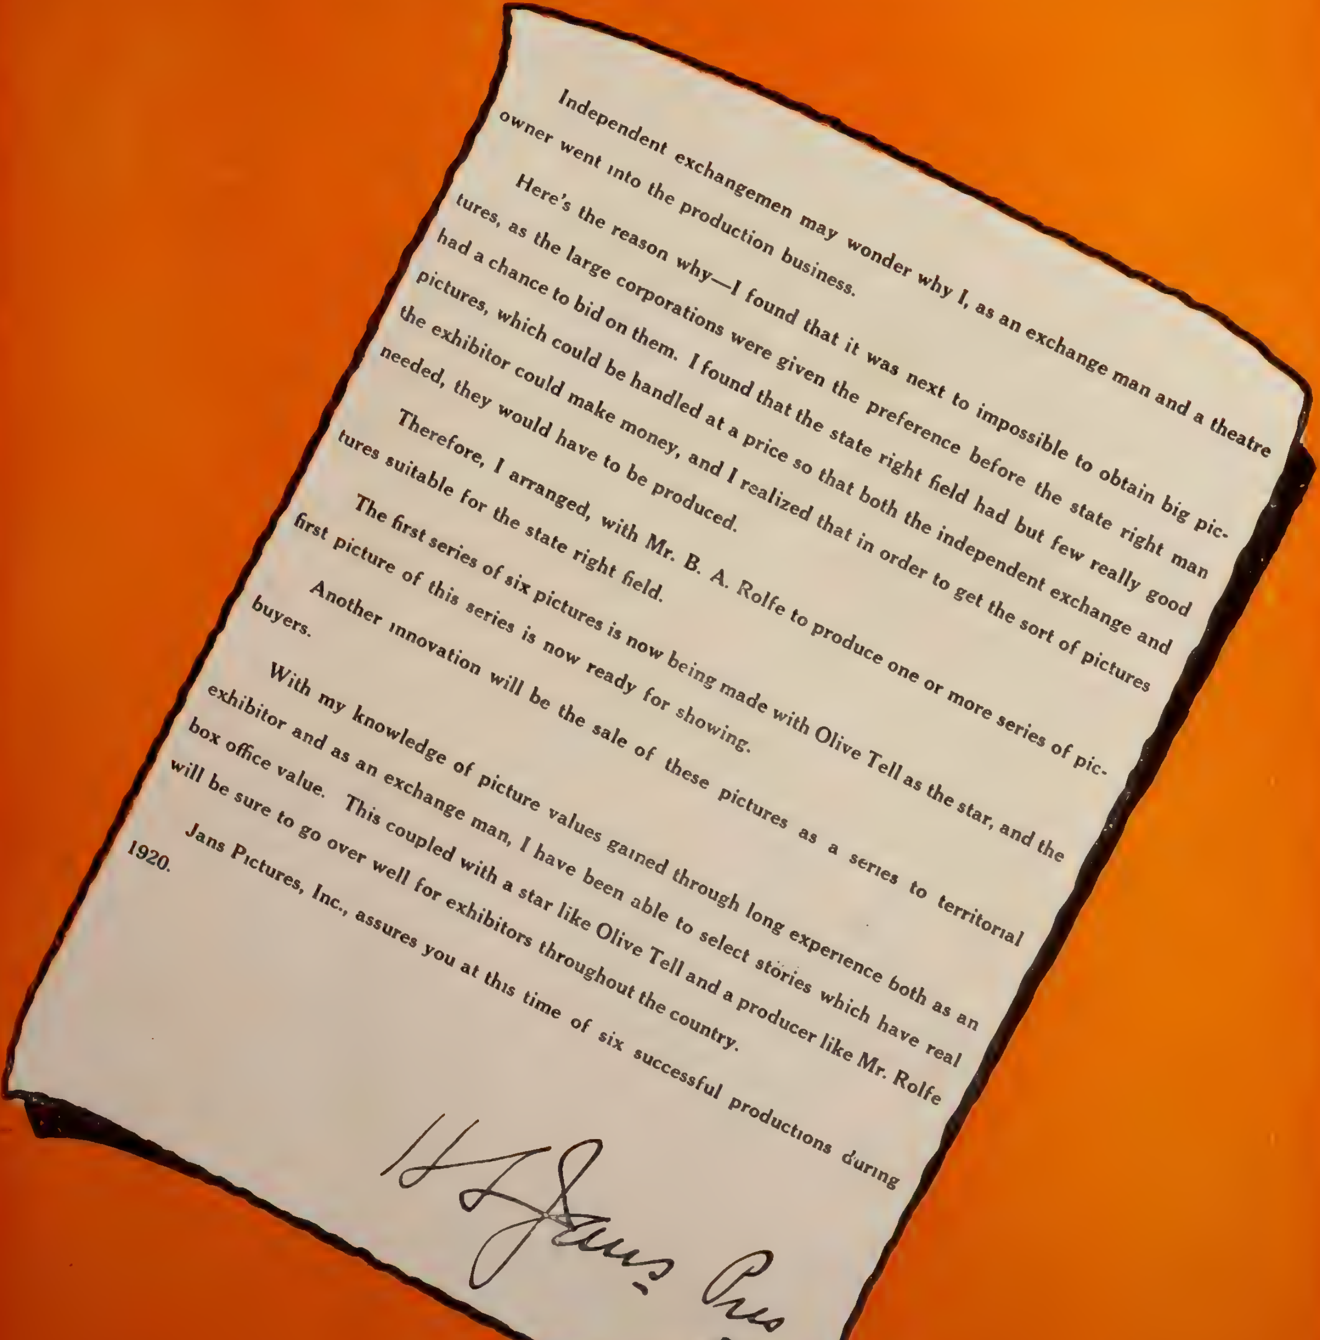
"Why I Entered the Production Field!"



Independent exchangemen may wonder why I, as an exchange man and a theatre owner went into the production business.

Here's the reason why—I found that it was next to impossible to obtain big pictures, as the large corporations were given the preference before the state right man had a chance to bid on them. I found that the state right field had but few really good pictures, which could be handled at a price so that both the independent exchange and the exhibitor could make money, and I realized that in order to get the sort of pictures needed, they would have to be produced.

Therefore, I arranged, with Mr. B. A. Rolfe to produce one or more series of pictures suitable for the state right field.

The first series of six pictures is now being made with Olive Tell as the star, and the first picture of this series is now ready for showing.

Another innovation will be the sale of these pictures as a series to territorial buyers.

With my knowledge of picture values gained through long experience both as an exhibitor and as an exchange man, I have been able to select stories which have real box office value. This coupled with a star like Olive Tell and a producer like Mr. Rolfe will be sure to go over well for exhibitors throughout the country.

Jans Pictures, Inc., assures you at this time of six successful productions during 1920.

—and the quality SUPREME

Perfection is the principle on which "COMEDYART" Pictures are produced.

The comedies are refreshing. They are NOT all matrimonial troubles, NOT all newlywed mixups, NOT all slapstick, nor all scantily-clad women. VARIETY is the predominating keynote.

Made For Wholesome Fun Only

The themes are as varied as the changing moods of human nature. The only "Sameness" running through all these comedies is the convincing spirit of fun.

Here Is a Big Punch!

The art-color scenics, the new color pictures, are more beautiful than any other color film ever offered. Science has given up a secret of art color heretofore unknown. The 400 feet colored scenic beauties carry stories and legends that are at once fascinating, full of absorbing interest.

The Art Color Section Alone Is Worth More Than You Pay For the Entire Two-Reel "Comedyart"

Memories—there is no limit to your patrons' pleasure in it except their own "MEMORIES." Artistry, pains and money have not been spared in this 200-foot novelty.

"The River's End"

Marshall Neilan's Initial Production for First National Proves To Be a Well-Made and Strong Curwood Story

Reviewed by George Blaisdell,

Editor Moving Picture World.

Starting with a snap, developing in the first reel a genuine "touch of nature," "The River's End," Marshall Neilan's initial production for First National swings steadily through nearly 6,000 feet to a truly smashing and gun crashing climax.

The story—there really is a story—is of the frozen North and the Saskatchewan country, and it is in James Oliver Curwood's best style.

As to that touch of nature It is all the more noteworthy because it is not related to the love of man for a woman or vice versa. It is the bond of regard, or of affection if you will, that ripens between two real men, natural enemies by all the rules—one the representative of the law, the other captured by the first on a charge of murder after a three years' hunt. His lung affected by the cold, the Northwest Mounted man collapses. The captive battles to save the life of his new friend—and loses.

Early in the action there is shown a representation of the northern lights that will draw attention to the cameramen. One of these is Henry Cronjager, who nearly ten years ago was photographing Maine scenes for Edison—with the thermometer 40 degrees below and the resulting film showing no static.

The writer abominates dual roles. When "The River's End" was started on its way he had failed to note in the cast the fact that Lewis Stone sustained two parts, those of the hunter and the hunted. His near chagrin when he discovered that the smooth-faced Conniston and the bearded Keith had been portrayed by the same man was shared by a well-known director sitting at his elbow. All of which would seem to reflect to the joint credit of cameraman and director.

It may be trite, but it is true to say the work of the cast is of uniform excellence. Mr. Neilan's selection of Lewis Stone is especially worthy of praise. Some of the best of the player's work is in the dialogue between the dying policeman and the one-time lawyer, who realizes that the death of his campanion means his own freedom. His execution of the lone battle with the many Orientals who spring to the aid of Shan Tung is most thrilling. Marjorie Daw is a continuing delight. She has abounding youth and abundant charm, the unaffected winsomeness of the girl of sixteen, and she has her full share of gray matter.

Then there are the veterans Barney Sherry, who is with us all through the story, and George Nichols. Jane Novak has a serious role, that of a woman relentlessly pursued by the infatuated and influential Shan Tung. Togo Yamamoto's cold-blooded performance as the Oriental fascinates even as it repels.

The writer of these lines sees comparatively few pictures. No longer may he truthfully be accused of being another one of the blase and satiated reviewers. Nevertheless he makes bold to assert Marshall Neilan has scored—again—and strongly. "The River's End" will fill the eye and grip the mind of the wearer of flannel shirt and boiled shirt alike—whether in hamlet or in town.

Renunciation is the chief theme of the story—and in the working out there are two splendid examples of this greatest of human attributes.

The picture was given its first showing before the Canadian Club of New York at the Biltmore on February 16. Naturally the gathering was most critical—not only from the viewpoint of education and worldly wisdom, but also from the sentimental angle of pride of mother country. Consequently the unanimity and spontaneity of the applause at the conclusion was significant.

Rich Production Is Given to Vivid Northwest Story

By Laurence Reid

Marshall Neilan's first independent production, "The River's End," looms up as a very satisfying offering. In fact, the producer has revealed the artistry of his "Daddy Long-Legs" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," so much of his own personality has he incorporated into the work. The subject is far removed in plot and characterization from these offerings and goes to prove that Mr. Neilan is equally at home in melodrama as in tales of heart interest and sentiment. To sum up the achievement we would say that there isn't a flaw in the production.

The vitality and vividness of this story of the Northwest and the Mounted Police are brought out emphatically, and these factors are realized through a thread of mystery, colorful characterization, a pleasant vein of romance and some of the most picturesque photography that has ever been flashed on the screen. The double exposure work is highly commendable and so admirably conceived that even an expert cannot detect it. Mr. Neilan has covered well the flaws of the story. One overlooks the unreality of the dual role. In fact, it appears actually lifelike, so genuine is the interpretation of Mr. Stone and his guidance by the director.

The formula is an overworked one on the screen, but it is brought forward with such a wealth of incident and detail that the obviousness is eliminated. Space forbids detailing the plot, but rest assured that love and hate, intrigue and conflict, romance and sentiment are fully established. The continuity is clear and the action carries its quota of suspense. Mr. Stone's graphic portrayal is a delight. Jane Novak, Marjorie Daw, Barney Sherry and Yami Mata are others who lend vitality to the picture. Length, six reels. Released through First National.

Neilan's First Independent "Big League"

The completion and presentation of "The River's End" has been anticipated with no little degree of interest, inasmuch as it is the inital effort of Mr. Neilan as an independent producer. In his first attempt at "going it alone" Mr. Neilan, both as producer and director, deserves the congratulations that he surely will receive.

"The River's End" is surely a box office bet. It has all the elements of a B. O. success. Not only because it is big but because there are enough ingredients to suit a variety of interests. The The story contains romance, mystery, humaneness and a degree of tragedy with certain sequences to satisfy the lover of thrills.

Derwent Conniston, with the motto of the Royal Northwestern Mounted Police foremost in his mind, "gets his man" after a three years' hunt, but before Conniston and his captive, John Keith, reach the post, Conniston dies, but suggests that Keith take his place as a member of the mounted police. Keith takes the big chance and returns to the post as Derwent Conniston with the news that he has captured and buried John Keith.

The post commander, played by Sherry, does not note the substitution. However, Shan Tung, employed because of his peculiar facility for remembering faces, recognizes the deception. He doesn't disclose the fact to the authorities, but makes known his discovery to the supposed Conniston himself.

The uncanny yellow man has a strange hold over the daughter of the dead Kirkstone which is not made known until almost the end, and clears up the whole affair. Shan Tung has the girl's brother in his power, and knowing that the Chinaman will prove the brother the real murderer of Kirkstone, she has agreed to marry the Chinaman. But Conniston (really Keith) comes to the rescue and kills Shan Tung. The mystery element in connection with Shan Tung is particularly effective in its way and affords opportunity for a terrific fight in the den of the Chink.

Lewis Stone is excellent in a dual role and Marjorie Daw is winsome and appealing.

There's no need for hesitation when it comes to booking "The River's End." It will please most of the people most of the time, if not all of the people all of the time. In other words, it is good all the way through, but there are special bits that will have particular appeal for certain tastes.

Outside of its variety of attractions, the picture is good to look at. Much care has been given to artistry and technique in its production. The lightings are decidedly beautiful, particularly the snow scenes.

Use the name of the producer in your advertising, mentioning some of his previous successes and promising them unusual entertainment value in his first independent production. The cast consists of names that in themselves should make them stop, look and listen.

Exhibitor's Trade Review

"The River's End" An Excellent Production

Reviewed by George T. Pardy.

Hearty congratulations are due Marshall Neilan for the high-water mark of success he attains with this production. The picture is unique in every way, a veritable triumph of the camera's art, skilfully constructed, possessing a plot which fairly vibrates with romantic heart interest and breathless suspense. There isn't a dragging moment in it, and Lewis Stone scores a tremendous hit in the dual role of Conniston, the Royal Mounted officer; and Keith, the hunted outlaw.

The double exposure effect sare simply wonderful, clearly defined and producing a perfect illusion. The photography as a whole is a masterpiece of filming; nothing finer than the views of the great wilderness of snow, with tall, somber pines in the background, has ever been screened. It makes a body feel cold to gaze upon that grim region of ice, and exquisitely beautiful are the woodland and water scenes of a milder clime. The closeups are remarkable for distinctness and neat posing, and there are long shots in evidence warranted to make the average camera operator ill with envy.

The story swings into quick action right from the start, keeps one guessing vainly as to what is coming next and never falters in its stride. The most exciting situation is that in which Keith, single-handed, fights his way out of the yellow man's trap, a combat of truly savage intensity, and the emotional scenes are strong in pathos and clean sentiment. Majorie Daw is charming as Keith's sweetheart, Jane Novak wins sympathy in the role of Miriam, and excellent performances are given by J. Barney Sherry and Togo Yamamoto.

Triumph in "The River's End"

Neilan Film Is Triumph For Screen Art

"The River's End," Shown at Strand, Adapted from Curwood's Famous Novel

Marshall Neilan's initial independent production, "The River's End," an adaptation from James Oliver Curwood's famous novel and now appearing at the Strand Theatre, marks a distinct advance in the progress of the motion picture art.

Mr. Neilan has closely followed the story in visualizing Mr. Curwood's great story of the Canadian Northwest and has introduced various novel effects in motion picture presentation which cannot help but win the admiration of the devotee of the silent drama. It is safe to say that this production is one of the really great photoplays of the season and that it will achieve unusual success is assured.

In offering this story in screen form Mr. Neilan had a wonderful opportunity to assert his unusual capabilities as a director, and that he has made the most of it is readily apparent. The story allows for great dramatic suspense and thrilling situations and the young director-genius has used his capabilities in handling such a plot to great advantage.

In the leading male role, playing both parts of Keth, the outlaw, and Conniston, of the Royal Mounted Police, Lewis Stone registers one of the most dramatic characterizations of the screen. Mr. Stone is an actor of both screen and stage fame and in "The River's End" is called upon to display his unusual histrionic accomplishments. Stone is not one of those pretty movie heroes, but rather a human sort of an artist that registers true to life.

Opposite Mr. Stone is that very attractive leading lady, Marjorie Daw, who for some months played lead for Douglas Fairbanks. In the part of Mary Josephine, Miss Daw gives the most dramatic characterization of her entire film career and shows indications of becoming one of our most popular movie stars. Another outstanding feature is the portrayal of Miriam Kirkstone by Jane Novak, another talented leading lady of the films. Miss Novak, as the victim of the Chinaman, displays a dramatic technique to a degree rarely evidenced on either the stage or screen.

Others in the excellent cast are Togo Yamamoto, the Chinaman in the part of Shan Tung, a thankless part, and yet a characterization that will demand the respect of every one who sees the picture. J. Barney Sherry, as McDowell, head of the Royal Mounted Police, and Charles West, as the real murderer of the story and the dope fiend.

It is quite apparent that in staging this film Marshall Neilan has selected his players to fit the parts, rather than the reverse, as is often done in the movies. Each player is obviously adapted to the particular kind of a part he or she is called upon to portray, and the result is a well balanced cast and an exceptional performance.

Mr. Neilan, whose policy it is to give credit to each important member of his producing staff, has pointed out that he is proud of the results attained in "The River's End," by Marion Fairfax, the scenario writer; Henry Croninger and Sam Landers, the camera men; Ben Carre, the art director, and Howard Ewing, electrical expert in charge of lighting effects.

Among the big thrills of the play is the situation where Keith, the outlaw, who is impersonating Conniston, the police officer, faces Chief McDowell for the first time. Knowing that he will "win or lose when he meets the Chief," Keith, after months of hardship in the frozen North, meets his supposedly superior officer. The manner in which Mr. Neilan reaches this climax offers a series of thrilling episodes which hold one spellbound. Many other situations of a similar degree of dramatic tensity are offered throughout the film, and with the big fight scene toward the end, when Keith whips a gang of Chinamen right before your eyes, as the building in which the Chinamen's den is located blazes and finally burns to the ground, the audience is given one of the most startling thrills ever offered in pictures.

Taken from every angle, "The River's End" is indeed one of the best photoplays Broadway has seen in months and Marshall Neilan is to be congratulated on his first offering produced by his own organization and released through the First National exchanges throughout the country.

The Mystery Is Highly Sustained

Despite an inept title, "The River's End," Marshall Neilan's first independent production shown at the Strand Theatre, is unusual enough to be worthy of its aurora borealis setting. The story by James Oliver Curwood deals with John Keith, arrested in the frozen North for a murder by Derwent Conniston, of the Northwest Mounted Police, whose place Keith takes when Conniston dies through one of those close resemblances that not only lead to remarkable trick photography but also to some trick complications. The atmosphere of mystery is highly sustained throughout and the tale ends with a very stirring fight in which Shan Tung—in this case a Chinese prince—gets the worst of it, as usual.

Strand Presents Neilan Special

By Gordon Trent

"The River's End," Marshall Neilan's first independent production, is the box office magnet of the Strand Theatre's program for this week. James Oliver Curwood's absorbing story of the great Northwest is the basis of Mr. Neilan's new picture, which was produced under his personal direction with the assistance of Victor Herman.

"The River's End" is so full of adventure it fairly intrigues the mind while the clock spins merrily on without giving an inkling of the passing time. Marshall Neilan has not only kept all this intact, but he has actually increased the value of the dramatic situations. His touches are so delicate, so sure and so pleasing that the highlights are emphasized without any clumsy obvious detail of the sort that so often makes a good tale go wrong.

The story, which centers about the Northwestern mounted police, is full of surprises. It concerns the efforts of one John Keith, suspected of murder, to hide his identity under the mask of Derwent Conniston, a member of the Canadian mounted police force. It further involves a Chinese, whose memory of faces is unfailing and who knows the game Keith is playing. He does not turn Keith over to the police because he wishes to use him to further the interest he has in Miriam Kirkstone, a white girl, and the woman McDowell, head of the mounted police, loves.

To give in minute detail the unwinding of Keith's identity, his final acquittal, the mystery of the Chinaman's part in Miriam Kirkstone's life, would spoil the picture for those who haven't seen it. There is Mary Josephine, a sister of Conniston, who arrives from England and is one reason why Keith wants back his own identity. Margery Daw's Mary Josephine makes her claim as the logical successor to Mary Pickford stronger than in any preceding appearance. Whether it is Marshall Neilan or the young lady herself who is responsible for this exceptional piece of work remains to be seen. Lewis Stone does one of the finest bits of dual impersonation ever seen on the screen. He gives an excellent performance as the two men—Keith and Conniston.

The Chinese devil, Shan Tung, does some creditable work, as does Jane Novak as Miriam Kirkstone, daughter of the murdered man, and J. Barney Sherry as McDowell.

The story lapses into moments of serial resemblance during the fight in the Chinese den, when, single-handed, Keith cleans out a whole room full of Chinamen. While this has a thrill for some, it will seem a bit unnecessary to others and to give a Nick Carterish effect to one of the most absorbing pictures seen on the screen in many a day. The comedy, too, could be eliminated without being detrimental to the picture—the goose and Japanese scene adds footage without cause. Mr. Neilan may have felt a little comedy relief necessary, and since personally I have great respect for Marshall Neilan's judgment, it may be these scenes are only a part of the general excellence of "The River's End."

The snow scenes, the northern lights, et cetera, deserve special mention. Perhaps we shall like them even better when snow is not so prevalent a scenic addition in New York. The northern lights were cleverly faked and, despite their tendency to imitate an overdone egg now and then, were really very good.

"The River's End" Proves Skill of Director Neilan

By McElliott

Do you all remember Marshall Neilan, the curly headed young man who bustled his way through so many pictures? His last appearance, I think, was as one of Judy's suitors, with Mary Pickford, in "Daddy Long-Legs." Anyhow, he's forsaken the business of acting to play director instead, and the first fruit of his venturng is shown in "The River's End," at the Strand this week.

Adapted from the story of that name by James Oliver Curwood, it has all of the earmarks of a best seller. A rattling good yarn, too, it must have made, with the colorful trappings of Northwest "mounties" against the rugged background of the town; with the slap-bang, blood-and-thunder happenings of that sinister upper chamber in the house of Shan Tung, where glowering Chinamen popped out of doors like hideous jacks-in-boxes. And Marshall Neilan has made an interesting and clean-cut screen drama from it, using Marjorie Daw as the girl and Lewis Stone as the rugged, conscience-tortoured lover.

As for Marjorie Daw, she is utterly charming, with a wide-eyed and wholesome prettiness that grows on one. Lewis Stone plays Keith with virility, and Jane Novak, a favorite with many discriminating fans, has a more or less "heavy" role.

Mr. Neilan's practiced hand is evident in the last scene, where in place of the final romantic "fadeout"—the "clutch," as bored observers usually describe it—the heroine clumps funnily away on snowshoes, with the hero in grotesque pursuit. It's a master stroke of comedy!

"River's End" Is Film of Thrills

Picture at the Strand That Depicts Adventure, Romance and Intrigue in the Frozen Northwest Is a Realistic Portrayal

By Alan Dale

The dual role, beloved of stage and screen artists, is unusually and flambuoyantly fascinating in the picture at the Strand called "The River's End." And the duality is so odd, and so differentiated, that no sooner is it announced than the pleasurable anticipation of "thrills" pervades you.

Imagine one actor playing the part of an outlaw accused of a cold-blooded murder, and also enacting the role of the relentless officer pursuing him! That struck me as being so out of the ordinary groove that at the very start I sat up and took notice. The two met in the frozen Northland and the officer of the law, with a frost-bitten lung, was tended by the man whose life he sought.

On the spoken stage, of course, such an incident might be imagined but not shown. In "The River's End" we are permitted, by clever screen tricks, to see the two men played by the one actor at the same time. Every time I view this feat it amazes me. Of course, it doesn't astonish the average movie fan, who accepts everything as his inalienable right and asks no questions. You see in this little shack in the frozen North the dying officer of the Royal Mounted Police and the Discovered outlaw.

Can you imagine what happens? The officer, realizing that his death is approaching and convinced of the innocence of his victim, offers his own name and belongings to the outlaw. The resemblance between the two is very marked. Why shouldn't the outlaw assume the entity of the officer, return to civilization as that dignitary and live happily ever afterward?

Every detail is capitally worked out. For instance, the officer has a scar on his temple. It is necessary that the outlaw possess such a mark. So he is branded with an iron by the moribund officer, who further coaches him in the incidents of his life and gives him instructions how to meet the Chief of the Royal Mounted Police without giving himself away.

I mention these details in order to show how carefully the picture is worked up. Usually this sort of thing is illogical and unplausible. It wouldn't deceive a babe in arms. But in "The River's End" the story is so scrupulously put together that when the "thrills" take place—or set in—you haven't the least excuse for not feeling them.

I don't know if it was the "frozen North" that set me tingling, but I confess that when the masquerading outlaw reached civilization and was up against the terrors of possible recognition I was "all wrought up." And this not too usual condition prevailed throughout the rest of the story. Of course, he WAS recognized by a wily Chinese, whose genius enabled him to detect and memorize the photographic details of any face.

This Chinese personage gave the story its "villain"—and never was there a more sinister villain! Shan Tung put it all over the conventional stage villain, and did it in that furtive, stealthy and dramatic way peculiar to his race. I think that Chinese and Japanese villains are the only really plausible ones that the stage or screen knows. I can't pin my faith to a villain who wears tan kid gloves, creased trousers and a colored necktie. He seems so absurd. Worse, you often prefer him to the hero! But in "The River's End" Shan ung is a masterpiece of villainy, and the later scenes in the Chinese home would give any one the creeps. This is the cue for the "love" interest, which is extremely strong. The masquerading outlaw discovers that his "double" had some girl to whom he was closely attached. The scene in which the girl rushes up to him and takes him in her arms is decidedly original. Who is the girl? What must he say to her? It is a comic situation in a tragic setting.

She turns out to be the officer's sister, and, naturally, the outlaw cannot feel any brotherly interest in her. He does experience a stronger interest, and this grips him and influences his life.

However, I have said enough about the "plot" of "The River's End." Never for one moment does its thrill lessen. There is not one single dull episode in the picture. There is not one solitary excursion into those realms that are sometimes assigned exclusively to movie improbability. It is the best instance of persistently sustained excitement that I have seen.

It is a long picture, but it seems ridiculously short. I felt like Oliver Twist when it was over. I wanted a "second serving"—and I have outlived greediness. Lewis Stone was ideal for the dual role. He neither posed nor preened. He was the typical hero of dashing adventure. Marjorie Daw was a cunning little heroine, and Togo Yamamoto made the Chinese villain exceedingly realistic.

If you can't get a whole batch of thrills from "The River's End" make up your mind that your liver's sluggish—nothing more romantic than that.

Neilan Uses His Independence Well

What Marshall Neilan calls his "first independent production," meaning that it is the first picture he has made entirely as his own boss, is at the Strand this week. It is a screen adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's novel "The River's End," and is an out and out melodrama of the Canadian Northwest, employing such familiar expedients as the physical identity of two men, a hero wrongly accused of crime, a woman in distress, a diabolical villain (Chinese this time), and a brisk fight between the hero and a roomful of enemies. But, with all this, it is not the usual melodrama. In the first place, Mr. Neilan is undoubtedly a skilful cinematician. He has made many moving pictures of scenic beauty and melodramatic force, and seems to have spared no pains in staging his production. Also, his knack of modifying intense action with touches of humor is more effectively evident in "The River's End" than in some of his other works, and the continuity of the picture is better than that of any of its predecessors that come to mind. Mr. Neilan has used his "independence" well.

Considerable credit, however, must go to the cast. As the hero and also in another role, Lewis Stone is as convincing as any one in such a melodrama may be, and Jane Novak, as the woman in distress, plays up to her own high standard. Yama Mata, as the Chinese villain, is not only thoroughly Chinese but accurately villainous, and Marjorie Daw never fails to be attractive as the heroine.

"The River's End" is interesting. That's all that a frank melodrama tries to be, and relatively few of them succeed.

Marjorie Daw Pleasing in "The River's End", This Week's Strand Picture

By Edwin H. Blanchard

A New York that has been so recently at the mercies of the Weather Bureau and the Street Cleaning Department should be interested in "The River's End," the feature picture at the Strand this week, for the scenes are laid in the great white North. But the picture has much more to it than lies in its temporary appeal to recently beleaguered picture-goers, for there is told a moving story, rich in beautiful scenes and well acted.

The first scenes of the film, which was adapted from the story by James Oliver Curwood, show John Keith, hunted for several years for the murder of Judge Kirkstone, a victim of the long arm of the Canadian Mounted Police, through the efforts of Derwent Conniston. But on the long trip back from the far North with his prisoner Conniston is stricken with disease, and it is then, when Keith refuses to leave the sick man to save his own life, that friendship comes between the two men who were hunter and hunted. In a log cabin in that frozen country Keith watches over Conniston, and when the latter grows certain that he is to die he suggests, because of a remarkable resemblance between them, that Keith take his name at his death and return to the post. Keith is carefully coached for the part he is to play, and when Conniston dies the hunted man turns south with a new name.

At the post of the mounted police Keith reports under his assumed name the death of himself, and passes successfully the scrutiny of his new sister, Mary Conniston, and McDowell, of the mounted police, neither of whom had seen Conniston for more than three years. But Shan Tung, a wily Oriental attached to the post because of his uncanny memory for faces, had seen Keith at the time of the Kirkstone murder and was not deceived.

From this point complications come thick and fast. Shan Tung is madly in love with Miriam Kirkstone, the daughter of the murdered man, and has already a secret with which to menace her, for he and she alone know that it was Peter Kirkstone, and not Keith, who killed Judge Kirkstone. With this secret he forces the girl nearly to the point of surrender, but he goes too far, for when he threatens to disclose Keith's identity unless the masquerader aids in the plans against Miriam, Keith defies him. Hard upon the heels of the defiance comes a fight in which Shan Tung is killed and Keith lays some dozen Chinamen low; the building catches fire, and Miriam's brother dies from burns just after he has confessed to the murder of his father.

Miriam and McDowell come to understand each other very well then, and at "the river's end" Keith and Mary Josephine, his erstwhile sister, meet in a new and ever old relation. Mary Josephine, let it be said, in the person of Marjorie Daw, has very ingenuous and irresistible interpretation, and Lewis Stone gave dignity and strength to the part of John Keith.

Capacity House Watches Picture

"The River's End," a melodrama of the great Northwest, is the feature picture at the Strand this week, and a capacity house watched it yesterday afternoon. It is a First National production, and Lewis Stone, J. Barney Sherry, Marjorie Daw and Jane Novak play the leading roles. A fight against heavy odds in a Chinese "joint" is a spectacular feature. The two pairs of lovers find happiness in the end, of course, but only after much bloodshed and suffering.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Censorship Partisans Have a Hard Week

IN this issue of the Moving Picture World opponents of official censorship will find matter for congratulation. They will find it in the action of the New York State Conference of Mayors and they will find it in the proceedings of the censorship hearing in Boston before the Committee on Mercantile Affairs of the Massachusetts Legislature.

While the second of the two incidents enumerated does not represent—as yet—a victory for the partisans of a free screen, the first, the opinion of the New York Mayors as expressed in the long awaited report of its special committee, distinctly does represent a victory. This carefully selected commission, comprising a dozen or more persons chosen for their ability impartially to examine the situation in New York State, has decided after deliberation that there is no need for further censorship of motion pictures in this commonwealth. It is believed the decision if it does not discourage will at least have the effect of nullifying any attempt on the part of ambitious reformers to jam through a censorship measure in the present session of the Legislature.

As our Albany correspondent points out, the conference represents the consensus of the chief executives of sixty cities of the Empire State—a body of no small influence. Had the report been on the side of censorship the entire official weight of these men would have been behind a bill embodying their views. Consequently all the more significance is there in the declaration that "Legalized censorship of the film is a dangerous departure in a free country. It places a ban upon ideas."

Motion picture showmen in states other than New York will find satisfaction in reading the committee's assertion that the experiments in this particular line that have been tried in other sections of the country do not justify New York making such a radical departure from the principles upon which our government is founded.

If in New York there are on the statute books measures designed to handle any situation that may arise from showing pictures that would tend to corrupt morals it is reasonable to assume similar laws are in force in other states.

The committee does suggest that in every community there should be passed two ordinances, one relating to motion picture advertising and the other to the regulation of films. The one is designed to make punishable the display of "pictures such as show the female form in one-piece bathing suits or in other suggestive costumes," and the other to give the locality the right of censorship to meet its own requirements.

The recommendations concerning the National Board of Review are worthy of serious consideration. One of these suggests enlarging the influence of the board and another urges that that body establish official relations with municipal administrations in the larger centers.

The hearing before the committee of the Massachusetts Legislature was notable for several things. Among these was the number of the opponents of the censorship measure under discussion and dissection and their authority to speak with first-hand knowledge of what the plain people of the state want in a motion picture way. An unusual feature of the occasion was the fact that a thousand persons followed with intense interest the telling points made by the respective partisans.

Judge Brackett summed up the case of the opponents when he pointed out that any person showing an improper picture can be imprisoned for a year or fined $500, or be given both fine and imprisonment. When he insisted that the proposed measure be considered from the Massachusetts viewpoint and not from that of Pennsylvania or Ohio he was on solid ground. "There is nothing in the bill," went on the judge, "that allows a clean, decent appeal. The people have an inherent right to see, read or discuss what they want; that is their inalienable right."

Mrs. Ayer, manager of the Exeter Theatre, situated in the Back Bay of Boston, a well-to-do district, declared the measure was "a menace to business, an insult to intelligence and an unjust discrimination." She told of the complaint on the part of a few—a precious few—that in "Little Women" there had been too much kissing. "Women want to have all evil remedied," she said, "but censorship is not the way to do it."

The speaker for the American Federation of Musicians declared the "wave of reform" sweeping the country had become a mania, and added: "Pretty soon about all you can do is to go to work and then go home to bed."

All in all it has been a hard week for the proponents of censorship. The two stories of which we are writing contain an abundance of meat for those who now are fighting efforts to inflict this burden on the industry in other states or who never know what moment they may be called upon to defend the screens of their communities. The new enthusiasm developing against censorship marks the rebound from the indifference of the past. It means that the people at large are tired of the fast growing tendency to fasten upon the large majority of broad-minded men and women the narrow views of the vociferous and frequently well organized—and incidentally well paid—minority. National Educators Promote Separate Association for Visual Instruction

Cleveland, February 24.

THE semi-centennial meeting of the National Education Association opened in Cleveland, on Monday, February 23, with hurry, bustle and much confusion. Trains were hours late and belated individuals rushed to the hotels for accommodations, only to find thousands of reservations ahead of them, dating back to last September.

It was estimated that Cleveland had to put ten thousand extra people to bed that night, with the result that her private citizens were forced to lend a hand. But in spite of it all the question of visual instruction had its inning in the first round.

The plan to call a meeting for an informal discussion on the subject of visual instruction seems to have originated at the University of Wisconsin. With the wise object in view of gaining the cooperation and advice of persons connected with the motion picture industry, invitations were sent out, many of which were accepted.

Changes Cause Confusion.

This meeting scheduled to be held at the Hotel Hollenden was switched to the Hotel Cleveland, with the result that late comers were unable to gain information as to its whereabouts.

The important outcome of the meeting at the Hotel Cleveland included the laying of plans for the formation of a national association on visual education; the disclosure that the work of the National University Extension Association has progressed so far that it has no less than forty-three motion picture distributing centers throughout the country at the present time, covering practically every section of the Union; and last, but not least, that in the event of the failure of the motion picture producer to manufacture suitable films, the University of Wisconsin and the State College of Iowa will undertake the manufacture of films for distribution through the University Extension Centers, which they are already equipped to do.

Forming National Association.

The formation of a National Association on Visual Education, as it is intended to function, is the most important move which has yet been made toward stimulating the manufacture of films for the schools and colleges. It would be the duty of this association to find out the actual requirements of the schools, and to carry the message to the producer, thereby bringing about the personal contact between educator and producer, which in the past has been lacking.

The decision given by such an association would be authoritative, and would help to relieve the uncertainty regarding the non-theatrical market, which has been the cause of the producer's hesitancy in entering the field.

Much Interest Manifested.

This meeting was not intended for the carrying out of final arrangements, but merely as a "get-together" for the interchange of opinions and to form a committee to carry the plan as outlined before the parent association, of which the University Extension is merely a branch. W. H. Dudley, of the University of Wisconsin, was appointed chairman of the committee to present the plan at the regular visual instruction program arranged for Wednesday afternoon.

By MARGARET I. MacDONALD.

Staff Representative, Moving Picture World, at Cleveland N. E. A. Convention

Among those present at the meeting were Don Carlos Ellis, Universal Industrial and Educational Department; George Pearce, Kaneto Company of America; Arthur J. Klein, executive secretary of the National University Extension Association; Carl Carson; Dolph Eastman, Educational Film Magazine; Charles Roach, State College of Iowa; S. G. Reinertsen, Alta, Iowa; J. P. Brandt, Moving Picture Age; J. B. Ankeney, University of Minnesota.

In addition to the many programs on various phases of education given in the hotels and other places in the vicinity of the Public Square, Cleveland, a commercial exhibit was held at Ninth and Bolivar streets, at which the moving picture industry was fairly well represented. Here was formed a rendezvous for those from the industry who were present, as well as many other interested ones.

Booths were established by the Pathescope Company, the Moving Picture Age, the Argus Enterprises, Inc.; Bausch and Lamb Optical Company, Acme Motion Picture Projector Company, American Projecting Company, Community Motion Picture Bureau, De Vry Corporation, Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, Ford Educational Weekly and McIntosh Stereopticon Company. The Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal shared the D. Appleton and Co. booth and exhibited films on commercial geography and animal forms.

Pictures for Main Association.

The motion picture was used quite generously throughout the programs of the week. The four-reel biological feature, "How Life Begins" (owned by the Carter Cinema Company) was one of these.

The Ford Educational Weeklies projected at the exhibit hall were "Sacred Silence," a film on teaching the blind; "From Mug to Mug," a study of pottery, and "Genuine Panama," a travel film.

Among motion picture people present, not already mentioned, were Bernard De Vry, Harry Levey, Universal; T. M. Alexander, Universal; Mr. Brooks, Educational Films Corporation; J. Millan with De Vry and M. Schonberger, Universal.

Wednesday's Session

Cleveland, February 25.

The visualization program Wednesday afternoon in the ballroom of the Hotel Hollenden included: L. N. Hines, State Superintendent Public Instruction, Indianapolis, "Visual Education in Community Center Work." Chas. Roach, Iowa State College, "Concreteness of Education." John H. Francis, Superintendent of Schools, Columbus, "Economic Side of Visual Education." J. Paul Goode, University of Chicago, "Round Table Discussion." Led by Frank A. Gause, Superintendent of Schools, Bay City, Mich.

Formation of new organization was carried over until the Wednesday night session. One resolution by W. H. Dudley, University of Wisconsin, to appoint a committee of three to investigate standardization of equipment was adopted.

Decide Upon Organization.

After dinner at the Hollenden for those interested in visual education (W. H. Dudley, chairman), a proposal was made by A. J. Klein, Secretary National University Extension Association, was put as a motion by J. H. Wilson, Detroit Public Schools, with amendments by Don Carlos Ellis and Carl Carson that the chairman appoint a committee of nine educators to call a conference to which would be invited commercial men, to be held two months later.

If possible the conference is to prepare platform of action for national organization on visual education to be entirely separate from the N. E. A. Present were thirty to forty educators and commercial men.

Discussions at cross purposes lasted some time, after which the meeting adjourned leaving the chairman to appoint committee at his leisure. The commercial interests present were De Voy, Atlas Educational Film Co., Educational Film Corporation, Universal, Ford, and others.

Eastman Kodak Company Wins in Court from Julius Lewis

THE suit instituted against the Eastman Kodak Company by Julius L. Lewis, dealer in photographic supplies at 522 Sixth avenue, New York City, to recover triple damages of $3,000,000 under the Sherman Law, was dismissed by Judge Mayer in the United States District Court on February 24.

In dismissing the suit at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case, Judge Mayer held that the plaintiff had failed to establish a basis for damages which, at the best, are purely speculative and might or might not have been sustained by the plaintiff in the conduct of his business as the result of the acts of the defendant, of which he complained.

Mr. Lewis alleged that since 1904 the defendant had created a monopoly by means of what he described as a restrictive rebate agreement under which he alleged dealers handling Eastman products were prohibited from handling the products of its competitors. He also charged discrimination on the part of the defendant corporation in the distribution of its products. The plaintiff sought to establish that he had sustained a loss of $1,000,000 in profits as the result of the alleged illegal acts of the defendant.

Anita Loos Back From Palm Beach.

Beck and Garrett Going to Coast.

Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, and Sidney Garrett, president of Frank Brockliss, Inc., will leave in a few days for Los Angeles, where they will look over studio properties with the intention of buying or leasing a production plant for Gibraltar.

Beck also will investigate several propositions now under consideration for an extension of the interests of Gibraltar, the probability being that at least one new producing unit and perhaps two will be added to the four already in operation.

Congressman Dallinger Is Industry's Friend, Not Foe

DENIAL of any knowledge of censorship activities in Masachusetts was made by Congresman Dallinger, of that state, when it was brought to his attention that rumors had him sponsoring the proposed censorship law there.

"You may deny the truth of that rumor very emphatically. I did not know that there was any move for censorship in Massachusetts until I was informed of that fact by Jack S. Connolly, national representative of the motion picture industry," was the brief statement made by Mr. Dallinger to the Moving Picture World correspondent.

During his service in Congress it may be said that Mr. Dallinger has consistently fought censorship as a national proposition, believing it to be wholly un-American. When it looked as though a law would be passed by the House of Representatives, it was the report drafted by Mr. Dallinger that was responsible for its being shelved. He has proven to be one of the best friends the industry has. The rumors afloat in Boston have been spread either out of a desire to injure him politically or because of a lack of knowledge of Mr. Dallinger's activities.

CLEVELAND will have a second theatre operated by the Allens of Canada. A deal was consummated last week whereby they take the lease on a new house to be bult by the Gordon Square Company at East Sixth street and Detroit avenue. The theatre will be a part of a group building which includes a market, store and office structure.

It is reported that the Allens took a forty-year lease on the theatre, which will seat about 1,800 people. Most of the seats will be on the ground floor. There will be a balcony, which will start at the last row of the ground floor seats.

The Allens have already started work on a big new theatre on Euclid avenue at East Twelfth street, which they hope to open before the year is over. They also announce that their plans for theatre development in Cleveland include several other locations.

Cleveland Association Warns Against Screen Advertising

"DON'T run 'The Gift from Heaven' during National Coffee Week unless you are paid for it," is the advice which has been sent out to its members by the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association.

This action was taken after a member read at a meeting of the league an article from a trade paper to the effect that "a feature of the celebration of National Coffee Week" would be the exhibition of a motion picture of the above name in theatres throughout the country. The coffee week is really two weeks, from March 20 to April 4, and is under the auspices of the National Coffee Trade Associations of America.

The notice from the association reads: "If you have paid for your coffee and sugar at war rates, simply refer the film agent to us and we will get you some free coffee and sugar at theatre owners' rates. Of course, if you have had free coffee since the armistice was signed, why just run the picture."

Congress May Provide Fund for Propaganda on Screen

THE use of motion pictures for advertising American products abroad through the medium of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the Department of Commerce may secure the attention of Congress in the near future, a fund of $69,000 having been asked by the bureau to be used for that purpose during the fiscal year which begins July 1 next.

Hearings were recently held by a subcommittee of the House committee on appropriations on the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, at which Philip B. Kennedy, director of the bureau, and Roy S. MacElwee, assistant director, appeared to urge that the United States follow the example set by other countries nad resort to motion pictures as a means of acquainting the people of foreign lands with our products.

Maryland Exhibitors Suggest Censor Board Appointments

THE holding of an annual moving picture ball is now being considered by the Exhibitors League of Maryland. The matter was taken up at a meeting of the board of directors on Tuesday, February 10, at which President Eugene B. McCurdy presided.

Albert C. Ritchie, governor of Maryland, wrote that he had received a list of the names suggested by the Exhibitors League of Maryland as desirable for appointment on the Board of Motion Picture Censors and on the Motion Picture Examining Board.

"I believe there is no vacancy in the male membership of the former board until next June," wrote the governor, "but am not quite sure when the latter board is appointed. I thank you, however, for sending me your view and I will see you about the matter before the appointments are made."

The members of the league are still neutral as to whether the Iverson bill for Sunday moving pictures should be passed. An inquiry from Operators Uuion, Local 181, of Baltimore, of which G. Kingston Howard is president, was received at the meeting on February 10. It asked how the league stood on the matter. This letter was referred to Secretary Wm. E. Stumpf, who was directed to send a copy of the resolution on the neutral attitude of the league to the union.

Mr. Stumpf has also been instructed to get in touch with the various state leagues throughout the United States to find out their attitude on percentage booking.

Women Attack Character of Fort Wayne Pictures

A GENERAL complaint against the character of some of the motion pictures shown in theatres of Fort Wayne, Ind., has been registered before the board of public safety there by a committee of women from the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Parent-Teachers' clubs and juvenile court.

In addition to the complaint, the delegation also asked that a board of censorship be named to pass on films shown, especially those exhibited on Friday and Saturdays when children fill the theatres. Speaking for the board of safety, Dayton F. Abbott, chief of police, declared that any picture believed to be harmful to children would be stopped by the police department.

Many of the films shown on the screens in Fort Wayne are not suitable for the school children to see, the women argued. They proposed a schedule which will permit children to attend the theatres only on Friday afternoons and evenings, and they insisted that a board of censorship be appointed. The board of safety, however, took no action on the matter.

Dog Comedy Banned by Manitoba Censor Board

THE Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors recently aroused unusual attention because of the decision to condemn a one-reel comedy, "The Eternal Triangle," in which there is not one human actor. The film is an out-and-out dog picture in which the various roles are portrayed by various dogs. The picture is the age-old story of a faithless husband and a final reconciliation and there is no trace of vulgarity in the whole picture.

The comedy had been passed and shown in Ontario before it was presented to the Manitoba Board of Censors and the rejection of the picture created a furore of amusement and comment among moving picture men. The banning of the comedy was also given due notice in the several Winnipeg newspapers. One paper followed up the condemnation by publishing the synopsis of the picture in full.

Warn Exhibitors Against Music Royalty.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association has sent out another warning to its members to beware of the music royalty levied by the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Attorneys have notified the league that they will prosecute about a dozen Cleveland theatres for playing the association's music without paying the "tax."

The league urges all members to play only "tax-free" music and to absolutely refrain from using song pluggers whose employers are members of the society.

Washington Managers Oppose Use of Double Feature Shows

THE use of double feature shows to attract patronage, resorted to by two or three motion picture exhibitors scattered through the Washington, D. C., territory, is not being looked upon with any degree of approval by exhibitors generally or by the heads of the various motion picture exchanges.

"The public will become 'fed up' on pictures if we all adopt such practices," was the remark of one exhibitor. "I consider that the worst kind of competition, and if it once gets a start it will mean the destruction of a large part of our business.

"We are having enough trouble now with the competition that has come up via our orchestras. I remember how in the old days the people were satisfied with music pumped out on an automatic piano. The next step was a piano and violin, then came the drums and the horns and the other stringed instruments, until today a thirty-piece orchestra in a motion picture theatre is far from being a novelty. And the worst of it is there is no telling where it will end—perhaps we will have to take out a few more chairs in the front rows and prepare to accommodate an orchestra as big as the one Sousa takes out on tours."

Similar sentiments were expressed by other exhibitors. No one wants to see a film war start up in this territory. If it does, the result will be that the public will get the benefit and will not appreciate it because a three-hour motion picture show gets monotonous, especially if the pictures are not as good as they might be, and some of the exhibitors will be driven out of business. The Washington Exchange Managers Association adopted a resolution to this effect.

Salt Lake Showmen and Operators Reach Agreement

DIFFERENCES between the moving picture theatre managers and members of the operators' union in Salt Lake City have been adjusted and the union men are returning to the booths in practically all of the theatres. The non-union men who have substituted during the strike, however, will be allowed to join the union provided they pass the required examination.

The theatre managers finally have agreed to pay the men the union scale, which in most instances represents a slight increase over their former wages. The theatres will not, however, grant the six-hour-day demand for which the men struck a month ago. At that time the increase of wages was agreed to, but the theatres stood firm against a reduction of hours.

Fox Enterprises Will Built Theatre-Hotel in St. Louis

ANNOUNCEMENT of the intended erection of a $1,000,00 motion picture theatre and apartment building by William Fox in St. Louis is made by John Zanft, general manager for the Fox theatre enterprises, and H. J. Fields, also representing the Fox interests. The theatre-hotel will be the largest of its kind in the United States and will be located in the West End section of the city.

Lehmann & Lehmann, of Newark, N. J., have already drawn up the plans and conferred with A. M. Frumberg, an attorney in St. Louis and general counsel in the West for the Fox corporation. Announcement also is made that William Fox will make St. Louis the headquarters for the entire West, including Chicago, Denver, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles.

Construction will start this spring on the structure, which will also house a roof garden, where pictures will be shown during the summer in addition to the main theatre on the ground floor.

Messrs. Zanft and Fields came to St. Louis from Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Denver, where negotiations for new houses were completed, three addditional theatres being acquired in Denver. One theatre now is being constructed in Salt Lake City. Mr. Zanft stated that Mr. Fox is planning the largest chain of theatres in the United States.

New Poster Rental Exchange Is Planned for Minneapolis

PLANS for the establishment of a poster rental exchange in Minneapolis for the use of motion picture exhibitors of the Northwest, are announced. The organization is proceeding rapidly and is expected to be ready for work soon, exhibitors behind the move said.

The exchange is working in close harmony with the Exhibitors Protective League, and H. L. Mitchell, league secretary, will supervise its activities, according to the announcement. Its organization was necessitated by the high price of paper and other materials entering into the advertising and exploitation of films, and the possibility of passage by Congress of legislation restricting lithographers to from 25 to 50 per cent. of their present output, Mr. Mitchell said.

All material sent out to members of the exchange organization will be mounted, to insure its permanency, according to the announcement. The rental is expected to be on a basis of about 50 per cent. of the present sale price of the material. The exchange, which will have temporary headquarters in the Loeb Arcade, is being rapidly organized and the personnel of the sponsors will be ready for announcement soon.

Ministers Base Their Opinions on Film Scraps

AT the annual convention of the Ottawa Teachers' Institute at Ottawa, Ontario, on February 19, the proposal was made by Dr. F. A. Jones, of the Ottawa Normal School to have moving picture projection machines as permanent equipment in all schools for the teaching of geography and other subjects to pupils.

At the meeting of the National Educational Council held at Ottawa on the same day, a Winnipeg clergyman told of having seen a private exhibition of condemned portions of moving picture features which had been saved by the Manitoba Board of Censors. He referred to the exhibition as nauseating and he made a plea for better pictures for the theatres, basing his opinions on the presentation of banned scraps that he had seen.

A few weeks before, the exhibitors of Winnipeg, Manitoba, had protested against the screening of condemned scenes before the local ministers on the ground that such scenes would only tend to make the preachers biased and such films, shown without continuity or proper context, could not help but convey a poor impression.

George Loane Tucker Scores Temporary Success in Court

JUSTICE PLATZEK, in a decision just handed down in the New York Supreme Court, has denied temporary injunctions asked by both George Loane Tucker, producer of "The Miracle Man," plaintiff, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, defendants, in Mr. Tucker's suit, alleging that his interests were not lived up to according to contract, but subsidized to the interests of the defendants. The practical effect of the decision is to give Mr. Tucker freedom of action so that he may produce motion pictures as he sees fit, pending the final trial of the action.

Mr. Tucker had brought a bill for an injunction and prayed for a temporary injunction, among other things, restraining Mayflower and Famous Players from exploiting "The Miracle Man" contrary to paragraph ten of the distribution contract, and restraining the defendants from interfering with his securing other directorial engagements.

The defendants sought a preliminary injunction restraining Mr. Tucker from rendering his services except to them until he had completed five motion pictures for them.

Introduces Bill to Prevent Standees in Picture Houses

A BILL to prohibit the sale of tickets of admission to moving picture theatres of Washington, D. C., when there are no seats to accommodate the holders thereof, has been introduced in Congress by Representative Loren E. Wheeler, of Illinois. Provision is made for the revocation of theatre licenses when the offense occurs on three separate days. A fine of $10 is to be assessed for each ticket sold in violation of the proposed law. All the theatres and other entertainments in the district of Columbia would be affected. Tickets could not be sold or given away unless seats were available for each.

Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read, Jr., are Welcomed at Luncheon in New York

THOMAS H. INCE arrived in New York from Los Angeles, Saturday, February 21, accompanied by J. Parker Read, Jr. They were guests of honor at a luncheon arranged by prominent film folk at the Hotel Claridge, at which Mr. Ince, as president and general manager of the newly formed Associated Producers, accompanied by his associate, Allen Dwan, had vital things to say of the plans of the organization.

"While we cannot at present announce it as a certainty," said Mr. Ince in response to an introduction from Tom Moore, of Washington, who presided at the after-luncheon talkfest, "I am safe in predicting that the Associated Producers will have their own distributing organization. This means that our productions will be sold with no hampering restrictions—that the pictures will be sold on their own merits. Our productions will come to the exhibitor free from the dictation of any other organization than the one making them. It is obvious that for this we shall need our own company. It is rather premature to announce the precise means by which this will be accomplished, but within a week or so everything will be settled."

Tells Artistic Advantages.

In outlining the artistic advantage of a combination of six of the leading makers of pictures in the country, Mr. Ince expressed himself succinctly. "We shall be rivals," he said. "In our business plans we shall work together, helping and advising each other. It stands to reason, however, that we shall vie with each other in surpassing the work of our associates. We shall work as we never have before, now that we are one family, to exceed the efforts of our brother producers. I mention this because it means better pictures.

"We will gamble with every means at our command to outstrip our previous achievements and from this the exhibitor —and the public—will gain. The Associated Producers are in it for all the profits they can legitimately make and with this spirit it means that we shall stake our highest endeavors against the merely commercial picture."

Mr. Dwan, in a brief speech following, said that the encroachments of Wall street capital in the motion picture business had something to do with the formation of the Associated Producers.

"Capital is not interested in the advancement of the art so much as it realizes the power of the screen for world propaganda," he said. "It is to keep the door open to exhibitors and to maintain the freedom and democracy of motion pictures that we aim to achieve success. We shall make precisely the sort of pictures our experience has taught us that the public wants and shall not make those pictures which financial backers might, for their own ends, force us to make. In a word, we shall be free. And I think we have earned it."

Speeches also were made by, among others, Louise Glaum, J. Parker Read, Jr., Harry Crandall, Walter Irwin, Louis Blumenthal and William Brandt. Exhibitors of New York and other cities were present, and included Messrs. Bock, Landau, Steiner, Schwartz, Branden, Wolf, Bracher, Picker, Goldreyer and Yost as well as a full representation from the press. Fred Warren efficiently aided Toastmaster Moore in picking those to pick on for short talks.

Exhibitors Entertain Associated Chiefs.

The Motion Picture Chamber of Commerce entertained on February 24 Messrs. Ince, Dwan and Read at its weekly luncheon at the Astor. President Brandt introduced the guests of honor, who spoke briefly along the lines of their talks the preceding Saturday.

Baltimore Efficiency Office Will Aid Censorship Board

THE Washington, D. C., Exchange Managers Association has notified its members and their home offices of the establishment at 412 East Baltimore street, Baltimore, of a branch office for the handling of films for presentation to the Maryland Board of Censors and for the making of such eliminations as the board may order.

A report of the action taken was made to the association at its February meeting by R. E. Smeltzer, who, with Jack S. Connolly, representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, had made the necessary arrangements. The office will be in charge of Edward Fowler, former Washington theatre manager, who has had much experience with road shows and who has a good knowledge of the film business.

The Baltimore quarters will be equipped for receiving and shipping, inspecting and presenting the films to the censor board. "It is equipped," said Mr. Smeltzer, "to give as nearly as possible 100 per cent. of efficiency. The national association wanted to control its work in Baltimore and directed that this office be opened. It feels that its problems can better be handled in this way.

H. A. Wales Succeeds P. J. Swift.

"There are many things that can be accomplished by this office as time goes on. Space can be set aside for the different exchanges that may desire desk room in these quarters. Later it is probable that films coming in from one Baltimore theatre destined to go to another on the following day can be subjected to inspection in this office. All screening will be confidential."

Herbert A. Wales, manager of the Universal office, was selected as secretary-treasurer to fill the vacancy caused by the transfer of P. J. Swift of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He formerly held this office.

A. Lincoln Hart Becomes Production Head for Read

ONE of the most important figures in the old world of the stage has joined his fortunes with the motion picture industry. He is A. Lincoln Hart and some of the most prominent men in the realm of the silent drama were tutored by him before they reached their present eminence in films. Among them were D. W. Griffith, Howard Hickman and a host of others.

In his new capacity with the J. Parker Read, Jr., Productions, Mr. Hart will be connected with the special productions of Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth. In a short period of observation under J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, supervision Hart developed a remarkable appreciation of the business as well as the artistic angles of photoproduction. He is acting as production manager for Read, and it is predicted that he soon will direct for the producer.

The trade press helped greet these members of Associated Producers, as did many prominent exhibitors of New York and other cities.

Massachusetts Censorship Battle Opens with Industry Presenting United Front

Amid Scenes of Intense Excitement, President William A. Brady, Mayor Peters, of Boston, and Representatives of Women Lawyers, Women Clubs, Film Clubs and Many Others Score Heavily in Exchange of Arguments

THE battle against censorship of motion pictures in Massachusetts is under way. William A. Brady, president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, arrived in Boston on February 23 to lead in the fight. In a statement issued upon his arrival Mr. Brady opened the first broadside against the measure now before the Massachusetts legislature. Perils of censorship officially imposed were pointed out by Mr. Brady, who declared the National Board of Review already is eliminating undesirable pictures. Censorship for children is a matter for parents, said Mr. Brady.

R. K. Fuller, executive secretary of the association's censorship committee, in a letter to the newspapers, furnished illustrations of how films have been mangled in Pennsylvania by the state censorship board there. Mr. Fuller told of the grave political and religious dangers in censorship.

Michael Leydon, motion picture man, fired a shot at censorship. Speaking before the Boston League of Women Voters, Mr. Leydon said censorship would be a matter of the taste of a few persons.

Mayor Opposes Censorship.

Announcing his opposition to state censorship, Mayor Andrew J. Peters, of Boston, former assistant secretary of the United States Treasury, declared that it would conflict with the city censorship, which has maintained a high standard of films in Boston. Incidentally, the mayor announced that Boston is to have a miniature "movie theatre" in the City Hall for city censorship purposes.

On the ground that consorship of motion pictures would mean an additional expense to producers and then to the public, that it would bring about political corruption and that it would ultimately cause censorship of speech, newspapers and thought, the Massachusetts Association of Women Lawyers, the Professional Women's Club and the Boston Films Club all joined in the fight against the censorship bill.

The battle against censorship in Massachusetts was opened on the eve of a hearing before a legislative committee at the State House, Boston. The censorship bill, introduced by a committee of citizens, is almost identical with measures defeated last year in twenty-four states and already beaten in four legislatures this year.

Excitement Attends Hearing.

Intense excitement marked the hearing on the proposed censorship bill on Tuesday, February 4, before the legislative committee on mercantile affairs. Time and again there were demonstrations by the more than 1,000 persons present, many of whom were women. A warning that censorship of motion pictures is only another step in taking away personal liberties and that ultimately the people will rise up in social revolution, emphatic denial by legislators that money is being poured into Massachusetts by the motion picture industry to defeat the bill, and denial of charges that "immoral and indecent" pictures are being shown in the state featured the addresses. That the opponents of the bill may be given an opportunity to finish their case, the hearing was adjourned until March 2 at 3 p. m. Interesting developments are expected, as it is rumored that several well-known producers are to be on hand to speak.

Pleads for Freedom of Expression.

Sounding the keynote of all the opponents of the bill—that it is a violation of free speech—Charles Fleischer, of Boston, former rabbi, social worker known throughout the United States, said: "I represent only myself and a principle—that of freedom of expression. I tell you people are resenting this legislating away of their personal liberties, and if we don't look out they will rise up in social revolution. Prohibition was brought about whether people wanted it or not, whether they were ready for it or not. Now it is proposed to take away another liberty.

"How dare we enact legislation that will prevent the people from getting knowledge. We have had enough of government by personal opinion, even that to which the President treats us. There is more involved than this bill—liberty itself is involved. Motion pictures do not put a premium on vice; virtue always is triumphant. Let freedom of expression alone."

Indignantly Deny Rumored Bribes.

Rumors that the motion picture industry had sent large amounts of money to Massachusetts to "buy up" legislators were vigorously denied by Senator Joseph O. Know, of Somerville, chairman of the committee hearing the bill. Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, of the Ohio Board of Motion Picture Censors, was explaining that a state censorship bill in that state was passed at the request of the "movie men" themselves.

"Money was sent from New York the following year," she said, "to bring about a repeal of the law. I am glad to say that they could not buy up the Ohio legislature and I do not believe they can buy up the Massachusetts legislature."

Senator Knox interrupted, saying: "I wish you would not make such statements as that. The story has been widely circulated that a lot of money is being sent into Massachusetts against this bill. I want to say here and now, for the benefit of the people here and of the public in general, that I have heard nothing of this money. I want it distinctly understood that this committee is too big and too broad to be bought up by anyone."

Mrs. Miller hastened to explain: "I only said I did not think they could buy up the Massachusetts legislature. I was defending your legislature and my own."

Threaten to Eject Demonstrators.

Frequent threats were made by members of the committee to eject demonstrators from the hall, many of the demonstrators being women. Tension was at high pitch when proponents of the bill hit a snag as Senator F. Tarbell, of Brookfield, scored a number of defects in the measure, the senator becoming involved in a verbal duel with Nathaniel F. Forsythe, Lincoln House worker and chairman of the State Committee on Motion Pictures, petitioners for the legislation.

"Do you believe that pictures now shown in Boston are detrimental to the morals of the people?" inquired Senator Tarbell.

"I certainly do," said Mr. Forsythe.

"Are they more detrimental than articles appearing from time to time in the public press?" demanded the Senator.

"I believe so," was the reply.

"Do you mean to say that these pictures are worse than such articles as those relative to the Spiker case or the Freeman divorce case?" continued Senator Tarbell.

"Getting Their Money's Worth."

"Such articles are not so harmful to children under thirteen years of age as the pictures I mentioned, because the children are not so apt to get a vivid impression from a printed paper," retorted Mr. Forsythe.

"Would parents take their children to indecent shows?," asked the senator.

"They do not know that the pictures are indecent until they see them," answered Mr. Forsythe.

"Do they get up and leave the show?," insisted the chairman.

"No, they had paid their admission," replied Mr. Forsythe.

"Yes," admitted Mr. Forsythe.

"But you did not know that there is a law in this state that a child under 14 years cannot go to the movies unless accompanied by an adult, parent or guardian?" asked the senator.

"I did not know it, but I do know that parents take their children in large numbers," said Mr. Forsythe.

Frequently, as one remark or another was applauded, Senator Know, chairman of the legislative committee, was obliged to rap for order, threatening to eject the disturbers.

Another demonstration occurred when Mrs. Miller said that when she arrived in Boston she heard that children of Massachusetts are writing compositions on "Why we should not have state censorship of motion pictures."

Judge Brackett Outlines Case.

"Can you prove that statement?" demanded Senator Knox. "I do not want to hear any such talk as that unless you can prove it. I, for one, have received no such composition of such a nature from any child in this commonwealth."

"I said I had been told that such was the case," explained the Ohio woman. "If I am wrong I am sorry."

Outlining the case of the opponents of the measure, Judge J. Albert Brackett, of Boston, said there were 575 motion picture theatres in Massachusetts; that $200,000,000 was invested; that 15,000 persons were employed by the theatres; that the weekly payroll was $250,000, and that 700,000 were entertained daily in the motion picture houses of the state. Judge Brackett pointed out that laws on the Massachusetts statute books already cover the point involved.

"No form of public entertainment can be given without a license," he said. Another law provides that any person showing an improper picture can be imprisoned for a year or fined $500 or be given both fine and imprisonment. Let us approach this subject from a Massachusetts standpoint. Let us not look at it from the standpoint of Pennsylvania or Ohio.

Composition of Board.

He explained that the bill under discussion provides for a board of nine to establish a standard of motion pictures and for a board of three to inspect all films to see that the standard dictated by the first board is maintained.

"There is nothing in the bill," he said, "that allows a clean, decent appeal. The people have an inherent right to see, read or discuss what they want; that is their inalienable right."

Judge Brackett said that letters sent to heads of reformatory institutions all over the country brought back the answer that the motion picture had but a small influence upon juvenile crimes. Censorship already in practice shows its folly, continued the judge. Censors in one state allow a film to be shown, where in another state it is forbidden.

"People have the right," he continued, "to see and read and witness what they want without having their democracy taken away."

Woman Exhibitor Condemns Bill.

Mrs. Marcellus, owner and manager of the Exeter Theatre in Boston, catering to residents of the fashionable Back Bay district, told the legislators that the bill was "a menace to business and an insult to intelligence and an unjust discrimination." Mrs. Ayer said it was necessary for her to run clean pictures, for she caters to a class of people of intelligence. If it were possible to eliminate bad pictures from the industry she would welcome the plan, she said, for it would relieve her of a great responsibility and effort and expense.

"Head and Shoulders."

But this bill, she continued, does not propose to do that. Citing the differences of people regarding pictures, she pointed out that the picture, "Little Women," endorsed by hundreds of thousands, met with opposition from a few in Boston because there was too much kissing in the picture.

A "Ridiculous" Propostion.

"If you are going to allow the restriction of pictures to a few persons," she said, "you are going to have great difficulties. Women want to have all the evil remedied, but censorship is not the way to do it."

Mrs. Ayer says she sees thousands of pictures every year and that very few are evil.

"They are in the minority," she said, "and I know. Manufacturers are trying to give the public the clean pictures that it wants. It would be ridiculous to have to go to the public library to get books only fit for children to read. It is the mother's part to look out that her children do not see pictures intended for grown-ups. No legislation must pass that must govern the home influence."

During the past year, Mrs. Ayer declared, she had come across only two improper films.

Labor Men Oppose Action.

A great array of labor men appeared against the bill. Fred Dempsey, business agent of the Boston Stage Employes' Union, said that the expense which would result from the bill would throw thousands of labor men out of employment—teamsters, electricians, firemen, engineers, machine operators, stagehands, scrubwomen and many other trades.

"We don't want outsiders from Pennsylvania and Ohio to come here and tell us in Massachusetts what to do," he said. "This bill is devised to create a few positions for a select few. Get after the newspapers and the magazines if you are going to censor motion pictures. They are more corrupt than the screen. No manager wants to show immoral pictures. It hurts his business, and he doesn't do it."

Camouflaging a Bird of Paradise.

Tod Barrows, of the Boston Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union, said that during the steel strike in Pennsylvania newspapers were allowed to carry pictures of the strike districts, but the censorship board cut them out of the motion pictures. Censors make a bird of paradise look like a bat in the dark, he said. Since the inauguration of censorship in Pennsylvania, there has been a decrease in the number of films shown, Barrows said.

"Let us have a land of the free," he cried. "Some people are looking for soft jobs as censors. They want to look after the welfare of other people's children."

Harry Jennings, of the Boston Central Labor Union, said the 100,000 members of that body are on record as opposed to the bill. Jennings said he was a father, adding: "I believe a father and mother should have control of the thoughts of their own children." As for children seeing cigarette advertisements and bathtub scenes, all they have to do is to look at the advertisements in the street cars, he said.

Reform Becomes a "Mania."

Mr. Jennings told how Boston policemen arrested a man with drawn revolvers with only three children looking on. "There is gun play for the children to see on the streets," he said. He scored dresses worn by many women as indecent and the boys and girls don't have to go to the motion pictures to see them.

Representing the American Federation of Musicians' Union, with a membership of 100,000 members, William D. Dodge, of Worcester, said it was folly for western cities to send representatives to Boston to preach morality. "There is a wave of reform sweeping this country," he declared. "It's got to be a regular mania. Pretty soon about all you can do is to go to work and go home to bed."

Difficulties of Censorship.

Mrs. Alice Marsh, of the Worcester Board of Film Censors, declared that the present regulation of motion pictures in Massachusetts was adequate. She described the difficulties of state censorship. Resolutions advocating censorship passed by many women's clubs, she felt, were done without hearing the opponents' side of the question. The thing for mothers to do, she said, is to go to the theatres with their children, as she does, and to pick the sort of pictures they want the children to see. She lauded the managers of the theatres in Worcester. When she went to Philadelphia, she said, she found just as many dime novel pictures being shown as in Massachusetts.

"But in Pennsylvania," she continued, "They have to cover their limbs in the movies. We hear a lot about the bad influence from pictures, but nothing is said about the good that comes from them. What is needed is not a movie censor law but a law requiring parents to take more interest in their children. It is unjust to say that motion pictures are bad, as stated here today."

Woman Lawyer Fears Autocracy.

Miss Sybil H. Holmes, president of the Massachusetts Association of Women Lawyers, said that the bill if enacted would create an autocracy which should have no place in America. Miss Holmes flatly contradicted the statement of Mrs. Herbert Gurney that the Federation of Women's Clubs favored the bill.

"That is a mistake," she said, "While a large number of the women's clubs favor the measure, there is also a number who oppose it. The women lawyers, for instance, oppose it, although they are members of the federation which went on record as endorsing the bill. I hope that on this anniversary of our freedom you won't begin to give us autocratic government. Existing laws are sufficient to handle the problem."

Mystery in Action by Women's Clubs.

That the state federation of women's clubs gave its approval to the bill "because the National Federation had so willed it," was the statement of Mrs. Walter Hartsone, of the Professional Women's Clubs. She declared that the legislative committee of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs had reported unfavorably on the bill, but that by some mysterious manner the bill was taken from the legislative committee's hands. The proposition was turned over to the executive committee. That committee, she charged, put the measure through at its mid-winter meeting.

Speaking as a showman, Representative Walter Hayes, of Hingham, said that in his experience not a single objection had been made against films shown in his theatre. Better films were coming out than ever, he declared.

Film Club Charges Unfair Tactics.

"I book on the star system," he continued. "I am at the mercy of the distributor. But always if a film happens to come that I don't like, a substitute is given me. Never have I had a complaint on moral grounds. This shows that clean pictures are being shown, and the people as a whole have no complaint."

Mrs. J. Wentworth Brackett and Miss Edith Haynes, respectively president and chairman of the legislative committee of the Boston Film Club, came out in opposition to the bill. The film club is a body of women who recommend pictures that are good and condemn those that are bad. Mrs. Brackett charged that the group conducting the campaign for the bill had used unfair tactics in soliciting postcard appeals in its favor. She read from one of the cards: "I wish to go on record for examining and licensing of films shown in this state."

"Anyone would think from that, that moving picture shows were not licensed," she said. "Any kind of a public entertainment in Massachusetts has to have a license."

Boston Censors Tell Situation.

"Parts cut out here," he said, "are not returned to the film men, but are kept right in my office. So when the show goes outside Boston it is minus the censored part." Many pictures are distributed over the state after an early showing in Boston, Mr. Casey explained.

Judge Brackett said that newspapers throughout the state had expressed opposition to the bill and that the editorials were to be presented to the committee; also, various petitions against the bill and a brief giving the opponent's side.

One of the films which was objected to by the advocates of censorship in their list of suggestive titles, it was brought out by Louis A. Herman, of Boston, has been shown in Pennsylvania, where there is a censorship board, but has not been permitted in Boston.

Calls Bill Unconstitutional.

Senator George E. Curran declared that the legislation was aimed at the entertainment of the masses and that it should be handled with care. Representative John P. Carey had heard no complaints about motion pictures being bad.

Philip Davis, Boston lawyer, now head of the Community Motion Picture Bureau handling educational and religious films, said that the bill was unconstitutional.

"I don't believe," he said, "that three or nine persons can legally dictate to the rest of the population what they shall or shall not see."

The good resulting from motion pictures outbalances the bad, he said, characterizing as unsound and unintelligent the argument that a state censorship board would relieve parents of the responsibility of deciding what pictures their children should see.

"Why pick out this one industry to censor," he said. "Attack all free speech and free press and free thought if you attack the pictures. Look out or you will legislate the state out of existence."

Would Bar Children from Harmful Films.

Former Representative M. J. Coyle, now manager of a theatre in Dorchester, came out against the bill. If films are considered harmful for children, the proper thing, he said, is to pass a law forbidding children under sixteen years from entering the theatres.

Mr. Loyden declared that children, under the law are not allowed in the theatres during school hours or after 6 o'clock at night unless accompanied by their parents. The principal argument is that pictures are harmful to children, he said, but the law protects them and the parents should help.

John Houser, of the motion picture operators union of Worcester, declared that Worcester was against the bill.

Further interesting testimony is expected next Tuesday. It is rumored that a number of well-known motion picture producers will be on hand to speak.

Proponents Claim Past Success.

Proponents of the bill opened the session. They outlined the provisions of the measure. They claimed that the method had been tried in Pennsylvania, Kansas, Maryland and Ohio with success.

The proponents were B. Preston Clark, former member of the Massachusetts Committee on Public Safety; Former State Senator William J. Sullivan, representing the St. Vincent de Paul Society; Mrs. Fannie Slattery, representing the League of Catholic Women; Mrs. Herbert F. Gurney, of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Leslie L. Smith, representing the Massachusetts State Grange; Mrs. John L. Grandin, representing the Y. W. C. A.; Maude Murray Miller, of the Ohio Board of Censorship; Mr. Lincoln, of the Educational Motion Picture Bureau; J. S. P. Oberholtzer, secretary of the Pennsylvania State Censorship Board; and representatives of the Massachusetts Federated Churches, the Society of Social Hygiene, the Association of Chief's of Police, the Catholic Women's Council of the Civic League, the Girl Scouts, the League of Women Workers, the Parent-Teachers Association, the W. C. T. U., the Women's Suffrage Association, the Catholic Charitable Bureau and the National Civic Federation and Parents' League.

Would Supervise Studio Output.

Mr. Oberholtzer declared such pictures as "The Amazing Woman," "12.10," "The Woman in Room 13" and others dealing with the sex matters were not fit for dramatic use. There was no financial disadvantage in censorship, he said. In Pennsylvania the industry is adjusting itself. There was an income there of $80,000 last year, more than meeting the expenses of the censors. On one-third of the films sent to that state in a year eliminations were made. Twenty-three, he said were condemned and seventy-one were reconstructed.

"But we must get into the studios," he exclaimed. "We must get at the source, and the way to get clean pictures is to have all the states keeping the bad pictures out."

Evades Press Censorship Question.

He said that censorship in Pennsylvania came about through the desire of a Philadelphia politician with a large family of children desiring to have them see clean pictures. Secretary Oberholtzer charged the National Board of Censorship with being "deceivers" and "not being honest." Being a voluntary board it cannot hope to make the pictures much better. Freedom of the press was another matter than censorship of films, he said.

A member of the committee inquired: "If you are going to censor films you've got to censor magazine articles, haven't you?"

"It's a different question," was the reply.

"Have you any statistics to show that the children of Pennsylvania are any better under censorship?" asked the legislator.

"I fancy that statistics of that nature would be hard to obtain," the speaker replied. "We all like to think so but have no actual knowledge on that line."

"Boston Wants Home Rule."

Corporation Counsel Hill, of Boston, speaking for Mayor Peters, said Boston was against state censorship which interfered with Boston censorship as now practiced. Boston wants home rule. There is no complaint in Boston now, he added.

If it is deemed necessary to safeguard workingmen and women with safety appliances for their bodily protection, it is also necessary that the public be safeguarded in matters pertaining to their normal welfare, declared H. Preston Clark. He expressed the opinion that the motion picture was shortsighted in opposing the bill in that the industry had grown in states that have censorship. He believed any public board would have judgment and knowledge enough to reject bad pictures. He charged that the industry in which some $700,000,000 is involved has strangled legislation in twenty-three states already.

Attacks National Board of Review.

Charging that the National Board of Review is controlled by the industry, Mr. Forsythe said it was not unbiased. Of the 1,100 pictures examined by the Pennsylvania Board, said the speaker, 178 were toned down in comparison with 41 eliminations by the national board. He decried the film "Auction of Souls," but later a speaker pointed out that this film was put out by the Armenian Relief Committee with the approval of the national government.

Legislation forbidding children under fourteen to go to the theatres has fallen down, Mr. Forsythe said, because people take them in, desiring to please the youngsters. Mr. Forsythe charged that efforts are being made by certain motion picture managers around Boston and in Boston to enlist the aid of their patrons in defeating the bill. He characterized as foolish the suggestion that the screen if left alone would purify itself. "It would seem," he said, "as if they were saying, 'Let us alone and we will grow out of our filth.'"

Bad Boy Burglars.

Former State Senator Sullivan told of instances where boys after coming from theatres emulated some of the things they saw by breaking into houses. Girls under sixteen years he described as being haled into court on immoral charges and in defense cited the examples of some screen stars.

Mrs. Slattery, of the Catholic Women's League, denied that the present laws protect the public.

Since the establishment of a censorship board in Malden, the class of pictures shown has improved, said Mrs. Kirkland, member of the Malden censorship board.

Points to Spiker Case.

Mrs. Miller, of Ohio, had a small tilt with Representative Andrew P. Doyle, of New Bedford. The legislator asked if censorship of pictures would not lead to censorship of newspapers, the drama and possibly women's dress. Mrs. Miller replied that she did not believe censorship would ever apply to the press because it would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

"If the Spiker case had been put in a film for use in Ohio it would never have been passed by the Ohio board of motion picture censorship," she declared.

Softly Cooing As the Cradle Rocks

We Glance at the Infant Industry Ten Years Ago

JUST about this time, ten years ago, matters were beginning to get "peppy" in the Infant Industry and things were starting to pop. In March, 1910, the General Film Company was getting under way and the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company was starting. Spring was coming and prognostications were in order.

One of those who was then reading the tea-leaves for filmdom was W. W. Hodkinson, of Ogden, Utah, an exhibitor of motion pictures on an advanced scale. Since then Mr. Hodkinson has moved his goods and chattels several times, going first to Chicago and later to New York, where he now resides and may, possibly, read here how his prognostications have come true—and then some.

Introducing Showman Hodkinson.

First let us speak of Hodkinson the showman before referring to Hodkinson the fortune-teller. In the days when "circuit wide bookings" in Ogden meant the Hodkinson Chain we read in cold type the Hodkinson self-told biography:

"From all trades and vocations came the first exhibitors. The butcher laid down his cleaver, spent a few hundred dollars remodeling his shop and behold: 'A Picture Palace.'

"Likewise the banker, small merchants and recruits from every source who imagined they could see large returns from a small investment."

Mr. Hodkinson was none of these—he was just "fond of pictures" and that bulge on his hip was some currency he had assembled in commercial pursuits. When he couldn't take a lady to pictures, because the "Nickelodeon" in Ogden was conducted "off-hand," to put it mildly, Mr. Hodkinson put the bulge on his hip behind the ideas in his head and—presto!

He Bought the Darned Nickelodeon!

This was in 1907. Two years later "his friend and partner, H. A. Sims and Mrs. Sims" were running four theatres and the admission had gone from a nickel to a dime. Each ran three to four thousand feet of film and two illustrated songs for an entire week!

Each house was "equipped with orchestra chairs, and had a three piece orchestra of skilled union musicians who carefully selected the music to accompany the pictures and after the first day the accompaniment was perfect." And that was ten years ago, mind you!

On May 21, 1908, the New Lincoln Park Theatre, 845 North Clark Street opened with W. W. Hodkinson trying out his ideas on residents of a big city. He wanted to see if human nature in Ogden ran any different in form than the folks in a million-or-more settlement. The Hodkinson idea cleaned up!

Reading the Infant's Horoscope.

It was in March, 1910, that Mr. Hodkinson made this prediction: "You will see picture theatres, showing pictures only, running all evening performances, programs changed weekly, pictures accompanied by orchestras, lecturers, effects and attended by people in evening dress—no, not yet for a while—the baby must learn to creep before it walks."

.Just read that paragraph over again, and see how far Mr. Hodkinson missed his prediction? Along in 1914—four years later—Roxy Rothapfel had "sold" his idea (the Rothapfel idea?) and New York Strand was running on the Hodkinson prediction and "attended by people in evening dress." How's that for reading tea-leaves?

Giving Hodkinson Credit.

More was written by Mr. Hodkinson ten years ago, but space vanishes under the hammering of an Underwood, hence suffice it: Hodkinson predicted the Bigger Picture, the Longer Runs, the Better Theatres, the Orchestra Accompaniments, the Higher Admission Price. It's all down in black on white. Wonder if he can predict just when we will have a Peace Treaty and how soon thereafter the Hunzollerns again will don the Spiked Hat and start Goose Stepping?

Imperfections in detail were disclosed in moving pictures ten years ago—just as they still are, sad to relate! A Canadian exhibitor ripped to pieces a list of Patents Company presentations that had English military tactics all balled up. And he found other mistakes—just as he could find now.

City Hall Theatre, 93 Park Row, was just opening and Bridge Theatre, 118 Park Row, was going full blast. Very likely newspaper men then and there got the hunch that a photoplay editor might, eventually, become a necessary factor in printing a successful daily.

Selig was putting Opie Reade's books into pictures. The first story to be filmed was "A Kentucky Colonel." Joe Brandt might look this up, as it seems Selig beat the National Film Corporation to it by some ten years. And they could photograph real mint juleps ten years ago!

Getting Players' Names in Print.

The veil of secrecy was being drawn aside. The world was being told who was who in films. Fred J. Balshofer, stage director of the Bison Stock Company (New York Motion Picture Company), let it be known that his players were: Jewell Darrell, Evelyn Graham, J. Barney Sherry, Charles Avery. Frank Montgomery, Major McGuire, William Gibbons and Charles K. French.

"Old Mamma Ten Per Cent Has the Pip," said R. H. Cochrane in top-lining a Laemmle advertisement. "A new scheme is being ribbed up to take her place. As soon as I find out what it is I'll expose it," said Mr. Laemmle. And he could do it!

Personalities were scarce in Moving Picture World of March 5, 1910. Read the "box" that goes with this—and "kick in." Filmfolk had the "reverse English" on willingness to have their names printed ten years ago. It's different now.

Albany, February 23.

As predicted in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World, the New York State Conference of Mayors, through a report of a special committee that has been at work for the past month, disclaims the need of further censorship of motion pictures in this state. The report of the special committee, made at a meeting in this city today, and which will be adopted at the mid-winter conference of mayors here tomorrow, will no doubt kill any attempt on the part of the individual or organization to introduce any bill or bills in the state legislature this session along censorship lines.

Today's meeting and the adoption of the report tomorrow are of paramount importance to the motion picture industry of New York State. The State Conference of Mayors is a powerful body in which every city is represented. It was for the purpose of ascertaining if there was any real need of censorship that the state body of mayors named a special committee of a dozen or more persons to investigate the situation in an impartial way and report. Had this report recommended censorship, the State Conference of Mayors would have been behind any bill introduced along that line, and carrying with it the influence that it does, the bill would in all likelihood have been passed by the legislature.

"Places a Ban Upon Ideas."

The attitude of the New York State Conference of Mayors on the question of censorship to a greater extent than at present is clearly outlined in the report rendered today, and which says in part:

"Legalized censorship of the film is a dangerous departure in a free country. It is no less dangerous than a censorship of the press or the stage, for it places a ban upon ideas. The indecent, improper and immoral film can be eradicated by the same methods as are used against indecent, improper and immoral books or plays. It may make the passing of films a matter of political influence and result in consequent abuses of power.

Undesirable in Any Form.

"It does not reflect public opinion, but merely the personal views of the censors themselves. The experiment, which has been tried in other states, does not warrant New York making such a radical departure from the principles upon which our government is founded. Nor does there appear to be the necessity for that departure. Great as has been the improvement in recent years, it would be greater and more rapid were the menace of censorship eliminated and the art allowed to develop along its natural lines, governed by common sense and the good taste of the American people.

"This committee finds that owing to the nature of the motion picture art, state censorship in any form is undesirable, and that the only promising method of regulating the production and exhibition of motion pictures so that the public shall receive the greatest possible good from this art is now in operation in the form of the National Board of Review.

Would Give Review Board More Power.

"The committee is firm in its belief that because art has always been attended by general, self-sacrificing patrons and critics, the National Board of Review will never cease to function and function wisely in its attempt to advance the interests of all concerned.

"The committee believes that the two suggestions concerning ordinances will give all the added power desirable to the National Board of Review, and further urges that the mayors of New York State recommend such legislation. The only difficult situation is in handling the one per cent. of films which do not come under the supervision of the National Board of Review. The mayors should consider which would be the greater evil, to leave this one per cent. utterly unreviewed and so liable to do continual harm, or to throw the supervision of this one per cent. to the licensing agencies of the communities themselves."

Present Laws Are Ample.

The report of the sub-committee today followed a long session at which nine of the committee were present. The report itself is a matter of a dozen or more typewritten pages, the fore part being devoted to reviewing the activities of the committee since its formation.

In connection with the report today, attention is called to the fact that there is a law in New York State which is designed to handle any situation that might arise from showing pictures that would tend to corrupt the morals. This provision, known as Section 1140-a of the Penal Code, was in effect when the late Mayor William J. Gaynor wrote in 1912 a veto message to an ordinance which attempted to set up a censorship of motion pictures in New York City.

Committee Makes Comparative Study.

"We have the evidence of this great jurist," said the committee today, "and yet despite this ecidence there are those who say the law cannot be enforced. It should be remembered that no penal law is self-enforcing, but this can be and has been. The violator becomes guilty of a misdemeanor, and any person can make a complaint and the party charged with the offense can be brought into court."

The committee in the course of its report said that it had compared the laws relating to motion pictures in New York State with other states to see if there was room for improvement. The New York law, according to the committee, is stronger than that of Vermont, the committee stating in conclusion that it does not recommend any change in the present law, as it is believed that the situation can be clearly handled by laws as they now exist.

For Closer Relations with Review Board.

"There should be passed, however, in every community, two ordinances, one relative to motion picture advertising and the other to the regulation of motion picture film," says the report. "In the one, proprietors or managers of motion picture houses shall not be allowed to use suggestive advertising either in the press or in front of their places of business. This shall include such display pictures as show the female form in one-piece bathing suits or in other suggestive costumes. The other ordinance gives the locality the right of censorship to meet its own requirements."

"The committee believes that a wider use should be made of the facilities and services of the National Board of Review and that there should be a more general co-operation on the part of municipal officials with the National Board and with local exhibitors, and that this would meet all the necessities of the so-called moving picture problem, becoming more effective and far-reaching in ultimate results than any other official method.

"The committee further advises that producers be required to resume the practice of displaying the shield of the National Board on all films passed by that body.

"It further recommends the adoption of means to increase the influence of the National Board of Review by an extension of the advisory committee membership and the working out of some plan to secure greater activity on the part of members of such.

"It is further recommended that the National Board of Review establish official connections with municipal administrations throughout the State and establish also representative advisory boards or committees in all the states in the larger centers of population."

Report Settles Long Dispute.

Today's report will settle a wrangle which started several years ago and which has been revived with every subsequent session of the legislature. Up until today there has been talk through the corridors of the Capitol of possible censorship legislation, although it is a safe guess that 99 per cent. of the senators and assemblymen are of the opinion that pictures now being shown are well censored and with rare exceptions suitable to both young and old.

Whether or not there will be any attempt on the part of the New York State Civic League to bring about a repeal of the present law which permits municipalities to settle for themselves the question of Sunday movies is a matter which the league itself will answer during the weeks to come.

The Rev. O. R. Miller and his associate, George H. West, are in favor of a greater censorship as well as a law which would close every motion picture theatre in New York State on Sundays. Today's report and the predicted adoption by the State Conference of Mayors tomorrow is generally admitted as a stunning defeat of the league's propaganda, and one which cannot be reviewed with even the shadow of success. To all appearances censorship of the motion picture in New York State is a dead letter, as the result of the investigation of an unbiased committee representing the educational as well as the religious side, not forgetting labor and kindred organizations, each and every one of which is in some way identified with the pleasure and profit accruing from the motion picture.

When the State Conference of Mayors adopts the report of today sixty cities express themselves against further censorship of the motion picture in New York State. GRANT.

Many Big Pictures Completed or Nearing Completion at Lasky's Western Studios

THE past month or two have witnessed the production of a large number of big productions from the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast Studios, and a list of the forthcoming releases by Paramount Artcraft will prove illuminating to those who follow the trend of screen production.

William De Mille has just completed his first individual production, "The Prince Chap," adapted by Olga Printzlau from Edward Peple's stage drama. While this picture has not been in the nature of an experiment, inasmuch as Mr. De Mille's experience and the character of the play alike insure its success at the outset, there are certain features about the production which are said to make it distinctive.

Thomas Meighan plays the leading role and in the cast are Lila Lee, Kathlyn Williams, Casson Ferguson, Ann Forrest, Theodore Kosloff, Charles Ogle, C. H. Geldart, Lillian Leighton, Bertie Johns, May Giracci, little Peaches Jackson and Agnes Marc. Florence Hart, a new face to the screen, has a brief role.

"The Fighting Chance."

Not content to rest upon the laurels he had gained by his direction of "The Copperhead" and other Paramount Artcraft Pictures, Charles Maigne has plunged into the production of Robert W. Chambers' society novel, "The Fighting Chance." Will M. Ritchey is responsible for the adaptation.

Conrad Nagel, Anna Q. Nilsson, Clarence Burton, Dorothy Davenport, Bertram Grassby, Ruth Helms, Maude Wayne, Herbert Prior, Frederick Stanton and William H. Brown make up a strong cast. Faxon M. Dean was the photographer.

"Held by the Enemy."

William Gillette, creator of "Sherlock Holmes" upon the stage and author of other popular plays in which he himself starred, wrote "Held by the Enemy," which Beulah Marie Dix has recently translated into screen terms and which Donald Crisp has under direction at the Lasky studio. This will be a Paramount Artcraft Special. The play deals with the Civil War, and the cast includes Jack Holt, Agnes Ayres, Wanda Hawley, Lewis Stone, Robert Cain, Walter Hiers, C. H. Geldart, Clarence Burton, Robert Brower, Lillian Leighton and Josephine Crowell. The production is nearing completion.

Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Round-Up."

George Melford is practically through with his production for Paramount Artcraft, "The Round-Up," in which Roscoe Arbuckle stars in the role of Slim Hoover, the fat sheriff. Mr. Melford is enthusiastic over the work of the star in this play by Edmund Day, the scenario for which was written by Tom Forman who plays Jack Payson in the cast.

Two New Reid Picures.

The dancing craze which is almost perennial in this country receives added impetus in "The Dancin' Fool," a new Wallace Reid picture, directed by Sam Wood and scenarized by Clara G. Kennedy from Henry Payson Dowst's Saturday Evening Post story. Reid's leading woman is Babe Daniels. The cast includes Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, Sylvia Ashton, Ernest Joy and a number of others.

No Respite for Washburn.

Bryant Washburn has completed "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" directed by James Cruze and adapted by Elmer Harris from the play by Frank Wyatt and William Morris. In this picture Wanda Hawley is leading woman, with Carmen Phillips playing an important role.

Mr. Washburn is now finishing "The Sins of St. Anthony," from the Saturday Evening Post story by Charles Collins, scenarized by Elmer Harris and directed by James Cruze. Lorenza Lazzarini plays the role of the girl who throws him over. He then seeks advice from a dancer, interpreted by Margaret Loomis, whereupon he gains the necessary "pep," but also falls in love with his teacher.

Ethel Clayton Making "The Ladder."

Under the direction of Walter Edwards, Ethel Clayton has completed "A Lady in Love" from the play by Harriet Ford and Carolyn Duer, with scenario by Alice Eyton. In this picture Miss Clayton had as her leading man, Harrison Ford.

Work has just been started by Miss Clayton on "The Ladder," concerning which there are few particulars available, but which is notable for the fact that Tom Forman is to be the director. Edith Kennedy wrote the scenario.

Although Houdini, the famous escape artist, is already in England appearing on the stage in his remarkable act, his second Paramount Artcraft thriller, "Terror Island," remains to be released, and from all accounts will be superior to "The Grim Game," which has proved so enthralling to all who have seen it. James Cruze directed. Lila Lee has the leading feminine role, while Rosemary Theby the heavy part.

Cecil B. De Mille is at work on another production which follows "Why Change Your Wife?" his recently completed special, but there are no facts obtainable concerning the picture.

Thomas Meighan, Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels and others appear in this photoplay, which was scenarized by Sada Cowan and Olga Printzlau from an original story by William De Mille.

Says Percentage for Exhibitors Means Throwing Spotlight On Business Secrets

By LEWIS J. SELZNICK

THERE is a lot of talk going on about playing pictures on percentage. I have been asked by numerous exhibitors what I think about it. Let's look at it as a general business proposition.

Every business has its important secrets. The man who divulges these secrets about his business places himself at the mercy of his opposition. If a clothing dealer lets his competitor know how much he pays for his stock and what percentage of profit he makes he gives the other fellow a dangerous weapon.

Spotlight on Business Secrets.

Again, a clothing dealer laying in his summer goods would never agree to let the manufacturer go through his books and take his payment on a percentage basis. The retailer knows his business, and half his success lies in keeping every one else from knowing it and cutting into it. So he buys his goods at the best price he can and keeps his secrets to himself.

The successful exhibitor must be a business man. He knows his town, knows his house, knows his patrons. His inside information in the hands of outsiders will be used to boost prices on his service or to start an opposition house. The percentage system throws a spotlight on his gross receipts and other secrets and offers them as a tempting bait to competitors.

When he plays percentage the exhibitor shows his whole cards and plays the game with his entire hand exposed. And the man who does this may win a little ante money now and then, but he never pulls in a big pot.

So, if you don't know what your patrons want, play percentage. If you don't know a good picture from a bad one, play percentage. If you haven't any confidence in your own judgment, by all means play percentage.

Not a Fifty-Fifty Proposition.

Use your brains. Buy your service at a fair price. Then you have a chance to clean up when you pick a big winner. But don't be a piker. Don't try to buy gold at brass prices, or you will force the percentage system upon yourself. Be fair to the producer as you expect fairness in return.

"Heads I Win."

I want to go on playing the game under present league rules, because they have been the rules under which live exhibitors have made big money. There is more money under the percentage system for the producer and distributor of high class pictures, but I would rather forego this than discourage enterprising exhibitors. I want them to make as much money as possible because their success is the basis of mine.

But percentage is not a fifty-fifty proposition and wise exhibitors are bound to see through it. It's "heads I win, tails you lose," and if I thought I could get away with it I think I would try it myself.

Why Percentage Booking Is Best for Every Branch of the Picture Industry

By HARRY RAVER

PERCENTAGE booking is a proposition for showmen. To any other type of exhibitor the idea will have little appeal, for the showman, by nature, is a speculator and does not thrive on a sure thing. Deprive him of an outlet for his imagination by price-tagging the value of his attraction and you muzzle his initiative. Apply the same rule to the employment of men. The man who draws a regular, week-in-and-week-out salary will never deliver as much as the man who receives a percentage of the business he produces.

And the show business—dating back as far as you care to go—has been operated upon a sharing foundation. Imagine the opera house manager renting a theatrical attraction for so much a day and see what would happen. The theatrical business would have been stifled long ago. No producer would risk $100,000 in a production, with a heavy salary list, weekly, if his possible receipts were limited to a fixed daily or weekly rental. Besides, the local manager would be obliged to do all the work of exploitation because the producer would have no interest in the receipts of the theatre.

Has Been Done for Ten Years.

Since everybody concedes that the motion picture has always been an imitation of the legitimate theatre, except in point of dividing receipts with the attraction, does it not follow that the fundamental principal upon which the latter operates should also apply to its young imitator?

For as much as ten years the motion picture theatre has been playing pictures on a percentage basis with more or less success depending on the picture itself and the degree of intelligence displayed in exploiting it. The writer booked America's first important production for more than a year on either a straight percentage or a rental with percentage of the gross added. This was in 1914 after sixteen companies had completed engagements in legitimate theatres throughout the United States. It was not difficult to convince Keith, Proctor, Poli and other showmen who played the picture that a percentage policy was all right. A mutual desire to create big revenue and to break box-office records was equally strong in both parties to the agreement.

Neither is it uncommon for big-time vaudeville houses to give a percentage of the gross to an important act. In fact, percentage is a fixed and permanent factor in amusements, and should be.

Blames First-Run Houses and Circuits.

Opponents of the percentage plan may be found among those who control important first-run houses, or circuits of houses dominating certain localities. Percentage is not an advantage to these managers, nor is it an inducement. They hold the whip hand to force low rentals. You play your picture for what they offer you or you don't play. The theatre owned by a stock company of local "business men" is also opposed to a sharing basis. Instances have been known where such exhibitors have actually paid in cash for a year's service, in advance, because they were allowed a 10 per cent. discount.

Bayard Veiller.

Well-known playwright who has signed to write four scripts yearly for Metro.

Then there is the exhibitor who lacks initiative and is inclined to be "tired." He usually opposes any plan entailing mental or physical exertion. He runs his theatre as easily as possible but is always the "wise crackin' guy" when he breaks into print in a tirade against the producer who happens to own an automobile.

Percentage will elevate the standard of showmanship in the industry and in consequence a more intelligent appeal will be directed towards the public. At the same time, overproduction of mediocre pictures will be reduced and many electric-sign-stars will be forced to deliver acting ability or drop back into the niche in life where they belong.

Would Show Producers Types Wanted.

Percentage booking will serve to educate and inform producers, for they will learn what class of picture to make and what to avoid. Under the present plan of fixing a gross schedule of rentals and dividing territories into quotas, each rental office of the distributor must calculate accordingly, upon a basis of fixed rentals.

Suppose the picture were "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The South would not play the picture at any price, while in sections of the North such a picture would prove immensely popular; yet the established quota would prevail in all sections of the country. Many productions have gone over big in certain sections of the country and have fallen flat in others. At the same time, many productions have proved profitable for the producer and distributor when the exhibitor has lost money, simply because the pictures lacked public appeal.

Indiana Clergy Prefers Blue Laws to Free Screen Advertising of Services

RESIDENTS of Kokomo, one of the principal cities in central Indiana, are all agog over the question of Sunday shows, and as a result of the activity manifested by those in favor of the movement, public sentiment is just about ready to rise above the law.

The agitation for the Sunday shows, which has been smoldering for some time, burst forth rather spontaneously a few days ago and since then has been the main topic of conversation. The daily newspapers of the city have carried column after column of communications for and against the movement.

That there is a great amount of sentiment in Kokomo in favor of the Sunday shows no one will deny. That there is considerable sentiment against them also is evident. However, as the case now stands the "ayes" seem to be in the majority.

Labor Wants Liberal Sabbath.

The agitation has reached the stage where polls are being taken in factories and business houses to ascertain the views of the employes. In the plant of the Apperson Brothers Company, automobile manufacturers, which employs 232 persons, 203 voted in favor of Sunday shows, 18 against them and 11 did not vote. Polls taken in other factories and business places express the same sentiment in about the same proportion.

All of the motion picture exhibitors of the city are in favor of giving the Sunday show a try, but there is said to be some difference of opinion as to just what step should be made. They have not definitely decided as to whether all theatres should try the Sunday operation out together or whether just one theatre should undertake it for the purpose of making a test case of the question. These and other problems confronting the exhibitors are to be worked out at an early date.

Offer Clergy Real Co-operation.

At a conference last week the motion picture exhibitors, represented by J. E. Whitley, John Shirk and Fred J. Byers, made a proposition to the ministerial association's representatives but it was not acepted.

The proposition was about as follows:

--That the theatres be operated on Sunday from 1 to 7 p. m., that only pictures of good moral character or educational value be exhibited, that ministers be invited to the theatres to speak for five minutes on religious subjects, that the exhibitors carry on their screens without charge programs of evening church services and an urgent suggestion that all persons attending the theatre in the afternoon attend religious services at some church in the evening.

This proposition was submitted by the theatre men as evidence of their willingness to work in harmony with the churches and to promote the general welfare of the community.

One Solution Suggested.

The Kokomo Ministerial Association announced that it can not compromise on the proposition so long as the law in its present form remains on the Indiana statute books. They said a compromise would practically brand them as countenancing a violation of the law.

It has been suggested as a possible way out of the difficulty, that after polls have been taken in all the factories and other business houses of the city, in event the majority are to favor Sunday shows, a bill legalizing Sunday exhibitions be drafted and placed in the hands of the senator and representatives from Howard County and introduced at the special session of the state legislature, which is to be called in a few weeks to transact other matters.

The Offer of Co-operation

That the theatres be operated on Sunday from 1 to 7 p. m., that only pictures of good moral character or educational value be exhibited, that ministers be invited to the theatres to speak for five minutes on religious subjects, that the exhibitors carry on their screens, without charge, programs of evening church services and an urgent suggestion that all persons attending the theatre in the afternoon attend religious services at some church in the evening.

PEARL WHITE has begun work on her second feature under the Fox standard, "Tiger's Cub," a visualization of the novel by George Goodchild. The staging of the story, now in full swing at New Port Henry, N. Y., where an Alaskan village has been constructed on the shore of Lake Champlain for the exteriors, is under direction of Charles Giblyn.

Mr. Goodchild's novel, a story of the country north of 53, is one of the strongest Northern tales of love and struggle ever transcribed to the screen. The action is high-pitched and sweeps to its climax with a stirring directness and power calculated to whip the spectators' blood to a frenzy of tense interest. The location for the exteriors, upper New York State, was chosen after the director and his staff had explored a wide territory. Mr. Giblyn feels that the spot used is so thoroughly true to Alaska in atmosphere that the sacrifice of comfort attending the sojourn in that part of the state at this season is well worth it.

Joseph Ruttenberg, cameraman, has informed the Fox executive offices that he is wholly satisfied with the photographic effects attainable on the location.

The Pearl White company includes Thomas Carrigan as the leading man and J. Thornton Paston as the heavy.

Charlie Tyson Wins Promotion.

Charlie Tyson, city salesman with the Philadelphia Robertson-Cole Exchange, has been appointed branch manager of the Washington branch. Tyson is only twenty-one years of age, and probably the youngest exchange manager in the country.

Special Publicity for London Stories.

Sam W. B. Cohn, formerly Realart exploitation agent, has been engaged by C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., as company publicist for "Burning Daylight" and the other Jack London stories Metro is producing with Mitchell Lewis as the star. Mr. Cohn was a newspaper man for many years, and more recently has managed motion picture theatres on the Pacific Coast and has handled film exploitation.

Stars, Directors and Stories Must All Be in Sympathy, Says George D. Baker

"GIVE the stars only such stories as fit them and only such directors as are in sympathy with the star and the story and you will have gone a long way toward eliminating the mediocre motion picture."

Thus did George D. Baker, director of Cosmopolitan Productions, "The Cinema Murder," a Paramount Artcraft picture starring Marion Davies, epitomize his idea for the improvement of the screen.

"Producers are beginning to realize that it is well nigh impossible to cut, trim and rebuild a story to suit any star's limitations without losing some of the spirit and heart of the original story. They are learning that a star should not be obliged to do a story which doesn't fit her or him as it is originally, and that a director should not handle a production with which he has no sympathy. In the past too many producers were prone to take a story that called for an ingenue role and rehash it to suit the dramatic star. In the rehashing the story suffered, and in the final result the star suffered. The treatment was unfair not only to the original author but also to the star.

Miss Davies' Stories Suit Her.

"But all that is becoming more and more a thing of the past. The company with which I am so happily associated, Cosmopolitan Productions, is far in advance of the field. It has access to some of the greatest stories ever written. It numbers among its exclusive writers some of the most famous of contemporary English and American authors. But no story is changed to suit its leading players. If the story doesn't fit as it stands originally, it is discarded or given to some one else.

"In the case of Miss Marion Davies, whom I am directing, she is given only such stories as suit her capabilities. She is required to do no story which she doesn't like and I am required to direct no story which I don't like. We were all agreed that 'The Cinema Murder' as E. Phillips Oppenheim had written it originally was perfectly suited to Miss Davies, and the result of our system speaks for itself."

A strong defender of the motion picture, Mr. Baker takes issue with the prominent New York legitimate manager who recently blamed the motion picture for the decline of the stage.

"Motion pictures have not hurt the stage," said Mr. Baker. "It is the speculators, the utter indifference at the box office, and the number three casts on the roads. When the citizen of Podunk can see the same high class cast in the motion picture that the Broadwayite sees at the first-run houses, he isn't going to be satisfied with a third rate cast in the traveling show. He wants a good show and he's willing to pay for it. When the legitimate managers realize this the theatre will return to its own, but not before."

Hiram Abrams Celebrates Birthday; His Philosophy

HIRAM ABRAMS, general manager of United Artists Corporation, who, his historian says, "put purity into milk when a kid, pep in the New England silk business, system in the illustrating slide song trade, the par-excellence into Paramount and the percentage in the motion picture industry," celebrated a birthday on Sunday, February 22. Mr. Abrams spent the day at home with his wife and daughter, Grace. The following day he entertained his "Big Four" associates.

Mr. Abrams' philosophy is interesting. He's not a moralist, but any man who has had organizations of such size as he, and has never found the necessity for discharging a single employe, must have something in the back of his head. He was asked what is his "trick of the trade."

"Success in any kind of business was never attained by 'tricks of trade'," said Mr. Abrams. "If there are tricks, never use them. Know them if you will, but keep away from them. Follow but one rule: let the other fellow make a profit.

"Everybody is in business for himself. He has his assets, his stock in trade, his whole business contained within himself. And it is that 'business' which he must keep selling every day in the year, selling it always so that the other fellow makes a profit.

"Profit is not always money. Most profit is service—service to your business superiors and customers. Service is always compensative wherever it is rendered. My success has been due to a single fact: I have let the other fellow make a profit. To me it is the best rule of business."

Goldwynner Reappears to Serve the Small Exhibitor

AFTER a temporary suspension of publication, the Goldwynner, the official exhibitor organ of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, makes its reappearance this month. More elaborate than its predecessors and embodying a four-page colored insert announcing forthcoming Goldwyn attractions, in addition to twelve pages of news matter, the new Goldwynner will be on its way to exhibitors within the ensuing week.

Aside from a marked alteration in its physical aspects, the forthcoming issues of the Goldwynner, it is stated, will be based on a policy catering more definitely than ever to the requirements of second and subsequent run exhibitors. The reflection of current methods of presentation and promotion successfully used by the country's largest exhibitors, together with suggestions for the adaptation of these methods to the requirements of the smaller exhibitor, will constitute a major portion of the Goldwynner's service.

A steady and dependable source of live news for the forthcoming issues of the Goldwynner is assured by the designation of Goldwyn's twenty-two press and service representatives, located in each Goldwyn exchange, as contributing editors. In addition, many prominent exhibitors will contribute exclusive articles.

First of Chester Comedies Is Booked by the Rivoli Theatre

THE first of a series of Chester Comedies, produced by C. L. Chester, of Chester-Outing fame, is being shown at the Rivoli Theatre this week. It is entitled "Four Times Foiled," the principal parts being played by a monkey, a horse and a dog who outwit a band of kidnappers and rescue the infant heir to a fortune in many a thrilling escapade. The picture was directed by William S. Campbell. The picture was titled by Katharine Hilliker, whose wit is familiar to those acquainted with Chester-Outing scenics.

The showing at the Rivoli is a pre-release. Twenty-six Chester Comedies are being planned for the next two years, thirteen releases a wear. C. L. Chester will leave New York within a few weeks for Los Angeles, where he will be permanently located and will exercise direct supervision over the new comedies. He has a menagerie of trained animals already assembled at Los Angeles.

Make Scenes in Theatre for "Memento."

Corinne Griffith, motion picture star, will appear as Rosalie Ray, vaudeville star, in a Brooklyn, N. Y., theatre during the coming week. True, the big audience that will greet her act, and she will be the whole show, will be paid by Vitagraph, as Miss Griffith will be making scenes for her next feature, "Memento." It will, however, be the star's first appearance before an audience in person, but she is assured that her act will "go over big"—it has to—it is in the script.

N. H. Gordon Details Policy to Govern Associated First National Theatres

Chairman of Exhibitors' Defense Committee Outlines It as Industrial Equivalent of Nationally Known Building and Loan Plan, Which Will Obviate Need of Exhibitors Calling on Outside Financial Interests

A CO-OPERATIVE theatres company in which membership and the extent of interest held is strictly voluntary, as an industrial equivalent to the nationally known building and loan plan, and which will function in defense of individual sources when they need funds for increasing capacity, general remodeling or the erection of a new house to keep pace with local conditions, is the general outline made public this week by N. H. Gordon, of Boston, of the policy which will govern Associated First National Theatres, Inc.

This is one of the two new companies created by exhibitor franchise owners of First National Exhibitors Circuit. It will have officers and an executive personnel entirely separate from that already elected to administer the affairs of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and while it will be conducted as an independent enterprise, its resources will be at the disposal of exhibitors who are subscribing to sub-franchises for First National attractions now being granted as an extension to smaller exhibitors of the same co-operative and protective booking and production-supply systems which have been the privilege of the larger theatre owners who own original franchises in First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Mr. Gordon Describes the Plan.

Mr. Gordon, who is chairman of the Exhibitors Defense Committee of First National, and a member of the Board of Voting Trustees for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was in New York last week to attend a meeting of the board of directors of the latter concern. In his statement Mr. Gordon placed special emphasis on the separate and distinct identities of the two new organizations.

"They will not operate as one enterprise," he declared. "There has been a considerable speculation among exhibitors about this. To clarify this confusion and to give the industry an official and accurate explanation of the purposes in the minds of the exhibitors who are united in a co-operative undertaking in First National, I want to make the distinction a very definite one.

"Associated First National Pictures is solely an exhibiting body, with branch offices owned, controlled and operated by exhibitors to perform the mechanical functions of distribution. Each exhibitor who is, or will be, a member of this organization by franchise, is guaranteed the exclusive rights in his zone or locality of all First National attractions, for which he will not pay a variable rental, but a fixed and abiding percentage of the total exhibition value of every production purchased and released by the company.

The Distinction Between the Two.

"Independent of this, and as an individual enterprise, with entirely different aims in mind, the exhibitor members of First National have organized the Associated First National Theatres, Inc. Exhibitors who are awarded franchises in the pictures company are at liberty to subscribe to the collateral of the theatres company, but this is not obligatory. The theatres enterprise is the crystallization of one phase of the exhibitor defense measures we adopted last fall as an absolute essential to meeting the proposed theatre activities of certain of the big producing and distributing concerns.

"A theatrical example will serve to illustrate just how the theatres company will help the material interests of the exhibitors who hold sub-franchises in the pictures company. First, it is necessary to interpolate here one of the principles of fair dealing between the picture company and the independent stars and producers whose pictures it will exhibit. As exhibitors and franchise owners, we must be capable of realizing from the public in any zone or locality the maximum of patronage for each and every release. Not to do this would be neither fair nor progressive.

Several Things to Be Considered.

"As in the past, we will continue to encourage production talent to strive for greater results. And to support them in their efforts, we, as individuals and as a co-operative group of theatre operators, must be equipped to attract the greatest possible number of people. To do this exhibitors owning franchises must possess the physical theatre assets which are so important a factor in public estimation.

"There must be house capacity up to the highest point which any zone or community can support with a profit to the exhibitor. There is no justice to the independent star and director, and none to the individual exhibitor, in a limited capacity which automatically restricts public support of productions.

"Moreover, if a First National franchise house is in competition with a theatre controlled by a producing or distributing organization, and the latter has a greater capacity, it has a psychological effect on theatregoers which inclines them to the subconscious belief that if First National's releases were the equal, if not the superior of other studio effort, they would justify presentation in the first-class house in any locality. Then there is the matter of box office receipts which require the maximum of house capacity to bring up to a gross that will permit a franchise owner to pay his pro rata percentage of the cost of exceptional pictures, and leave an encouraging profit for the exhibitor.

Fellow Exhibitors Provide the Assistance.

"This, in brief, is the crux of the general thought which prompted the formation of Associated First National Theatres, Inc., as a company which will have the funds, voluntarily invested by franchise owners, to enable other exhibitors who may now lack the necessary theatre facilities to enable First National to be represented by a house the equal, if not the superior, in every respect, of any competing theatre in each enfranchised zone, to obtain the money needed for enlargement and improvement without seeking the aid of financial interests outside the industry. There is a considerable hazard in this for the average exhibitor, and it is an obvious one.

"It is the purpose of Associated First National Theatres to provide that financial assistance as coming from fellow exhibitors, with their own interests pledged to the same organization and supply sources as the owners who require money for improvement. Funds of the theatres company, invested in the erection of new theatres for franchise owners, or in the enlargement and remodeling of their respective properties, so that they will give First National attractions theatre facilities second to none, will be disbursed in much the same way as is the money voluntarily subscribed by stock purchasers in the hundreds of building and loan, or home and loan, associations throughout the country.

A Plan Familiar to All.

"Every one, especially the residents of small towns, is acquainted with this method of home making. And it is but a short step, and a comparatively simple one, to adapt it to the maintenance of exhibitor independence in the motion picture industry, by rallying to the support of smaller theatre owners needing financial assistance for the purposes I have explained, the resources of the larger and, perhaps, more successful exhibitors.

"Exhibitors who have led the way to theatre and studio independence as First National franchise owners, are seeking a practical approach to something that will have the semblance of stabilization and permanency in the exhibitor and producer branches of the business. The theatre company is a great contributing factor. It gives exhibitors financial assistance, wherever it is needed, on and under conditions which the benefactors could not obtain from institutions outside the industry. And it is a business proposition for the exhibitors who subscribe to the theatres company stock, thereby providing the funds, because they will receive a nominal interest return for their investments."

"Romance" Will Shortly Be Released by United Artists; Doris Keane Is Featured

William Fox Says New Film Will Show the True Alaska

MANY strange screen pictures of Alaska have been flashed upon the silversheet, and the usual Alaskan picture, no matter how dramatic the story, generally becomes a comedy—or rather a burlesque—in that northern territory, as well as in the Pacific Northwest, because of its absolute disregard for details. William Fox purchased the film rights of George Goodchild's novel, "Tiger's Cub," a story of the country north of "53," and then determined to give it a truly Alaskan atmosphere.

Mr. Fox felt that the details of the picture should be correct, that the atmosphere should be typically Alaskan, not so much because the average person would profit by knowing the truth as because Alaska, much maligned by the spread of false impressions, was entitled to have its life faithfully represented. Accordingly, every scene in "Tiger's Cub," in which Pearl White is being starred, will be a copy of some spot in Alaska that fits the story, Charles Giblyn, who is directing Miss White, has made a determined effort to carry out the idea of Mr. Fox to make every detail perfect.

Nothing has been left out in the picture, it is said, and while "Tiger's Cub" was not actually made in Alaska, it should be more typically Alaskan than some pictures which have been made there, for the latter usually show the glaciers and the bald rocks of that country, and these are by no means typical of it. Without stinting in the least, the true atmosphere of Alaska has been put into "Tiger's Cub," and with Pearl White in one of the best roles she has had, should prove a great drawing card for the exhibitor.

West Virginia Likes "Lost Battalion."

W. H. Production Company reports "The Lost Battalion," the seven-reel feature now being distributed on the state rights market, is making good in every section.

From M. E. Morgan, who controls the West Virginia territory, the reports received are indicative of successful showings in that part of the country. He says "The Lost Battalion" is a human, living document of history, re-enacted by the actual survivors of that momentous page in American life. It is a picture that grips the interest, attention and hearts of every audience.

THERE has probably never been a single story that was ever written for the stage or screen that has caused so high comment, as has that of "Romance," by Edward Sheldon, one of America's greatest writers, which is now being screened by United Artists Corporation, and in which Doris Keane, one of America's most famous emotional actresses, is playing the leading role of an operatic primadonna, the same as she has on the stage in New York, Chicago, Boston, and London, during the past seven years.

Edward Sheldon, who wrote the play, first offered it to Charles Frohman for production. After reading it he passed it on with the comment that he did not think it was particularly suited for production for any of his stars, despite the fact that it was written with Miss Keane in mind. Miss Keane then came under the management of the Shuberts and the play was accepted and produced with big success. So great was it popularity that Miss Keane desired to own the play outright and it passed into Miss Keane's and her manager, Charles Dillingham's hands, from Winthrop Ames and Lee Shubert for the largest money consideration that any American or foreign play had ever demanded.

For that sum Miss Keane or Mr. Dillingham did not, by any means, own the play outright. They merely acquired the production rights and Mr. Sheldon was still paid a ten per cent. royalty on the gross the play produced each week.

Many managers contended that in view of this success Messrs. Ames and Shubert should have made very much more money by keeping the rights for the play in their own hands, but the cold cash was tempting and the deal consummated, with the proviso that when Miss Keane appeared in the play it was to always be in Shubert theatres.

As a matter of fact, Miss Keane could have had the exclusive rights for "Romance" for exactly nothing two years before, when Mr. Sheldon wrote the play, for he wrote it especially for her and at the time stipulated that whoever bought it would have to have her in the leading role.

At that time "Romance" was worth only its author's estimation, and in fact until after its first performance in Albany there were only one or two persons who had any great faith in its drawing value for they did not know then how the amusement public's pulse was beating. Miss Keane believed in it; so did Mr. Sheldon, and when it came to New York it was the season's greatest success; it followed with two seasons in Chicago, one in Boston and nearly four straight years in London.

"Romance" will be released shortly by United Artists and the announcement that comes from Hiram Abrams says that it will undoubtedly be among the greatest emotional love pictures ever produced.

Rush of St. Patrick's Day Bookings for Realart Film

INDICATIONS point to March 17 being unusually well observed, says J. S. Ragland, Realart's general sales manager, after receiving reports from the field. All of which has caused Mr. Ragland to turn to thought of Allan Dwan and "The Luck of the Irish."

"The men in the field were the ones who directed attention to the suitability of 'The Luck of the Irish' for St. Patrick's Day programs. They called attention to it by sending in bookings.

"From Boston the number of demands has been heavy. Over twenty contracts have been closed within the week for showings in Boston territory for St. Patrick's Day and immediately before or after.

"In California, also, as a result of the showing at Grauman's, a number of contracts have been closed. From our Atlanta office twenty-six contracts were received.

"The Minneapolis office announces the Eltinge Theatre in Bismarck, N. D., the Opera House in Marquette, Mich., and the Delft in Escanaba, Mich. Of course some exhibitors have been disappointed because we have not been able to accommodate them. The number of prints is limited, and naturally it's a case of first come, first served."

Cast of "The Third Woman" Is Announced for First Time

ROBERTSON-COLE, in securing for distribution "The Third Woman" which it will release as a superior picture with an all-star cast, was impressed particularly with the exploitation strength of this production. Coupled to this were the possibilities to be found in the names of half a dozen people who themselves often have been starred.

The cast of "The Third Woman," now announced for the first time, contains the names of Louise Lovely, Carlyle Blackwell, Gloria Hope, Myrtle Kelso, George Hernandez, Walter Long, Winter Hall and Frank Lanning.

The contrast which is drawn between the East and the great outdoors of the desert country makes the picture an attractive one from a box office standponit. The lives of society people in the East are contrasted with the simple, primitive fashion among the plainsmen and the Pueblo Indians with telling effect. From the palatial homes of rich Easterners, the action shifts to a large Pueblo village where a remarkable picture of the life and customs of this interesting Indian tribe is given. Also there is a vivid picture of a small desert town. There takes place a fight in which Blackwell and Walter Long are the principals.

Author of "Honey Bee" to See Film.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, has invited Samuel Merwin and members of his family to a private showing of "The Honey Bee" in his home in the suburbs of Chicago, desiring to share with the author his own satisfaction with the picturization of this product of his fancy. While the novel met with instant success on publication, and was one of the seven best sellers of the year, Mr. Hutchinson believes it has been immortalized by the screen production.

"In 'The Honey Bee' we have a record breaker—the finest of the 'Flying A' Specials to date," said Mr. Hutchinson. "The name and reputation of Madame Marguerita Sylva is a big drawing card. This is the prima donna's first appearance in pictures in this country."

FLAMES OF THE FLESH (Fox)

N.—Continuity is well arranged to emphasize the high lights. Its daring conclusion may shock some sensitive patrons.

T. R.—"Flames of the Flesh" lurid melodrama . . . The story is not far different from all the other stories of this sort ever written.

T. R.—Gives every indication of proving a popular program attraction.

E. H.—Has foreign flavor . . . that may not be wholly conducive to success during its American presentation.

THE SAGEBRUSHER (Hodkinson)

N.—The sequences, replete with thrilling incidents, are skillfully sewed together by a silver thread of sweet sentiment.

T. R.—Might be exploited successfully because of its reputation as a novel. As screen entertainment it lacks sparkle and life.

W.—Lacks conviction for the most part but will make satisfactory program offering.

WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY (United Artists)

N.—Sure-fire winner with any audience.

T. R.—The play ought to prove entertaining to the majority of the public.

THE WEB OF DECEIT (Pathe)

The settings and situations in this production have been designed for a strong appeal to the masses.

N.—The story is not the kind of material that is being turned out in this modern day.

T. R.—There isn't a moment in the entire picture that is real or suspenseful.

HEART STRINGS (Fox)

N.—Hodge podge of sentiment and melodrama here.

ROUGE AND RICHES (Universal)

The production as a whole is a brilliant one.

N.—Often told tale makes obvious picture.

BEHIND THE DOOR (Paramount)

N.—This Thos. H. Ince special is tremendous drama, but it cannot hope to find universal favor because it is so vividly brutal and cruel

THE WILLOW TREE (Metro)

T. R.—Dazzled by the well maintained atmosphere. An audience can well overlook the lack of action and suspense in the story.

OTHER MEN'S SHOES (Pathe)

It is interesting and enjoyable. The closing scenes are quite melodramatic.

N.—This picture should register favorably with an audience not too critical of the requirements of dramatic construction.

Made intensely interesting by a talented star and a highly intelligent director.

N.—A wealth of melodramatic incident.

T. R.—There is lots of action to this picture, not a dragging moment in it, and no denying its melodramatic punch and the emotional intensity of the cleverly outlined situations.

AN ADVENTURE IN HEARTS (Paramount)

Cheerful, spring-time comedy, made up of pretty sentiment, some quick action, a wetter-than-wet rainstorm and the romantic back-ground of an old Italian castle.

N.—The majority of any audience will call it first-class entertainment and go home perfectly satisfied.

T. R.—Is exciting, amusing and entertaining to a high degree.

THE CORSICAN BROTHERS (United)

While the production contains many points of merit, it has not the earmarks of a finished production.

W.—Moderately attractive picturization of Dumas classic.

N.—Famous story and play makes a success.

N.—Excellent entertainment for majority.

T. R.—"Out Yonder" is a highly effective love romance.

E. H.—Should be welcomed as the best Olive Thomas production under the Selznick trademark.

N.—An amazing photoplay of death-defying stunts in the air, patrons are sure to make a beaten path to its door.

T. R.—The picture is a real "whopper," a masterpiece of originality, splendidly photographed.

W.—Spectacular air stunts will get this through.

E. H.—Was evidently made to order after O. S. Locklear, a flyer whose exploits have gained considerable fame, had been engaged for picture purposes. It is surprisingly good, under the circumstances.

First Robert W. Service Verse-Story to Be Filmed Will be "Law of Yukon"

As first of the series of productions he is to make for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Charles Miller has selected "The Law of the Yukon," one of Robert W. Service's popular verse-stories of the frozen North. Work on the picture has already been started along the Canadian frontier in New York State.

Realart officials have received a number of congratulatory messages on the new contract with Mr. Miller. A number of exhibitors stated the new series would fill a big need for red-blooded, virile, American pictures.

Several admirers of Robert W. Service's works expressed appreciation of the picturizing of the famous poetry of the Northwest.

The colored insert prepared to announce the Charles Miller production also came in for a big share of favorable comment. It was accorded the honor of being selected for publication in the March number of "Printing Art," a de luxe journal of the printing trade, as illustrative of the high class of advertising in the motion picture business.

Director Miller has built a village of the type on the Yukon when Cheechako and Sour Dough alike made a mad rush for gold. Dog teams and sleds have been brought from western Canada as well as a former officer of the Royal Mounted Police who will be seen in the picture.

Locations have been chosen both on the American and the Canadian side of the frontier, and Mayflower reports it is the plan to go out to Banff, in the Canadian Rockies, with a view of transferring the beauty of the mountains to the screen to round out the pictorial qualities.

The same policy that was followed in casting "The Miracle Man" and "Soldiers of Fortune" has been followed in "The Law of the Yukon." No actor will be starred, but Director Miller has selected players whom he considers best suited to the several roles.

The adaptation of the Service poem was made by Harry Chandler.

Pantages Circuit Gives Long Bookings to Dooley Comedies

Following the announcement that the Pantages Circuit had booked the John Dooley Comedies for twenty weeks on each release comes word from the Tyrad Pictures, Inc., that it is all to be given an early showing in the territories where a Pantages theatre happens to be located. "Some Mind Reader," the first of the Dooley releases, will be given a premier showing this week at Denver, San Francisco, Oakland, Seattle and Salt Lake City.

"Remember, Polly, It's a Secret."

The comedies will occupy a prominent place on the program and will be featured as specials in all the advertising done by the theatre management. This arrangement was made by Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad and Alexander Pantages, head of the Pantages Circuit, during Mr. Radin's trip through the West and Middle West.

Territory on these comedies is fast being disposed of. The latest to be sold has been purchased by the Arrow Photoplays of Denver, that has secured the rights on Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah and the southern portion of Idaho.

Moe Kerman, general sales manager of Tyrad's New York Exchange, just closed contracts on the Dooley Comedies with the Yost, S. R. S., Steiner, M. & S. and Picker Circuits, all of whom control from four to ten houses.

Garsson Gets Favorable Reports on "The Blindness of Youth"

Favorable reports on "The Blindness of Youth," the initial release of M. W. Garsson of the Foundation Film Corporation, are being received from State Right Buyers throughout the country, according to an announcement.

Reports received from coast to coast and from border to border indicate that the picture is proving a success from the point of view of the State Right buyers, as well as the exhibitor, Mr. Garsson says.

The plan of the Foundation Film Corporation is to continue to exploit its productions even after all territory is disposed of, and is proving popular with the independent distributors, it is announced, and is proving a great help in making the production a financial success.

Nearly all territory has been disposed of and many offers have been received for what little remains unsold.

What is believed to be a record on quick sales is claimed by Mr. Garsson in disposing of the territory of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Harry Lande, of the Quality Film Corporation of Pittsburgh made a special trip to New York to secure the rights of his territory.

Kann, Big "U" Export Head, Off to Europe to Study Conditions

George Kann, manager of the export department of Universal, sailed for London on February 21. This is the sixth time Mr. Kann has crossed the ocean in the interests of Universal foreign business. He will make his first stop in London where he will visit the Universal office and close some new contracts. A tour of Europe will follow and as Mr. Kann expects to be gone several months he intends visiting all the important film centers on the continent.

From London he will go to Paris, and from there to Berlin, Vienna, Rome and other European key cities. He will study conditions wherever he goes with a view to bettering the Universal export service.

By talking to foreign motion picture men at first hand he expects to evolve a scheme whereby it will be unnecessary to make any changes in the films when they are exported. In other words Mr. Kann is working on the idea that a happy medium can be determined which will be beneficial to the production of films for this country and abroad. As a rule American films are "out" a good deal when they are shown in foreign houses. Mr. Kann expects to find a way out of this difficulty by starting of propaganda for longer films abroad. The title question will also be carefully studied no doubt.

Actors in "Invisible Ray" Are Injured by Explosion

The reason for the Frohman Amusement Corporation temporarily suspending production on the "Invisible Ray" serial, is announced as being due to an explosion in a chemical laboratory set in the studio, during which Jack Sherrill and Miss Uzzell were burned, while Ruth Clifford was hurled a considerable distance and rendered unconscious.

The script called for the demonstration of the power of a shot of light operating on certain chemicals, a premature and intense explosion occurred which demolished the set, and an electrical and laboratory employed by the company has been unable to determine just what caused the explosion, but the circumstances are said to be strikingly similar to the action called for in the fiction script.

This serial, however, though dealing with science, has been produced so that it may be easily comprehended. The story deals with a powerful ray, supposed to be strong enough to destroy the world, discovered by a man supposedly dead, and the secret of which a band is attempting to secure.

Eight episodes had been completed before the explosion.

W. C. C. S. Acknowledges Publicity

Moving Picture World is in receipt of a pamphlet from the War Camp Community Service, containing a summary of all the publicity its activities received up until December, 1919.

Over 300 periodicals are listed in the pamphlet, showing that the journalistic fraternity of America did what was in its power toward assisting the W. C. C. S. Moving Picture World is pleased to see that under its name are listed more articles than under any other moving picture trade publication.

Lotz Visits Realart Home Offices.

In a serious motor car accident February 19 the parents of Harry Taylor, manager of Pathe for Kansas City, his sister and brother were seriously injured. The motor in which they were riding was struck by a street car. The brother and father, who were the most seriously hurt, were taken to a hospital.

A. E. F. Veteran on the Job.

He is one of the most popular film executives in the territory, is constantly being selected by his fellow exchange managers for various offices in their association, and has recently completed a very successful term as president.

His territory will include the Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Washington districts, with his headquarters in Washington. He has appointed LeRoy Breitbarth, who has been connected with the organization for about two years, as a salesman, assistant manager of the Washington branch.

William Honing, for many years on the staff of the Cincinnati Enquirer, and later exploitation manager of the Cincinnati district for Selznick, is now publicity manager for the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation in Cincinnati.

Jake Flax Joins Liberty Films.

Jake Flax, who for the past six months has been general manager for Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Films Attractions, Inc., has resigned to join his brother, Sam Flax, who operates the Liberty Film Corporation in Washington. Jake Flax started in as an errand boy with the General Film Company and was manager of the Washington office when the business was discontinued. He had nearly eight years' service with that company.

W. C. Barnes, former Fox manager in Minneapolis, has been appointed Detroit manager for Fox, succeeding Harry Fox, who has returned to New York to do special work for Select.

Moritz Transferred to Buffalo.

Allan S. Moritz, well-known in the Washington, D. C., territory where he was for some time a salesman traveling out of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, is followed by the congratulations and well wishes of his many friends to Buffalo, where he has been appointed manager of the branch exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky organization. He succeeds Richard C. Fox, who has resigned. Prior to his connection with Famous Players, Mr. Moritz was a traveling representative for the Fox Film Corporation, and spent considerable time in the South.

Another promotion from Washington is that of Paul J. Swift, branch manager, who assumes the management of the Omaha branch. He will be succeeded here by Lester Rosenthal, former sales manager of the Washington office.

W. W. Rowland was elected president and Jack Kendall vice-president of the Cincinnati Associated Film Exchanges at their meeting at the Chamber of Commerce February 21. Mr. Rowland, who was vice-president of the organization, succeeds Harris P. Wolfberg, who recently has been transferred to New York. Mr. Kendall succeeds Mr. Rowland as vice-president.

Robertson-Cole Signs Albert Capellani to Make Extra Specials for Next Two Years

ALBERT CAPELLANI has been signed by Robertson-Cole to give that company the exclusive rights to his features for a period of two years. This announcement is made after a series of conferences between the French producer and officials of Robertson-Cole. The contract which was signed this week provides that Capellani shall produce four specials a year for Robertson-Cole and that the pictures shall be of extra special calibre.

After he finished work on "The Fortune Teller," starring Marjorie Rambeau, Mr. Capellani decided that he would devote his time and energy to the making of extra special productions which would outdo his former attempts. Robertson-Cole officials were so impressed with "The Fortune Teller," which will soon be released as an extra special, that they immediately decided to get the best pictures obtainable by making Capellani a producing ally.

The contract which gives Robertson-Cole the exclusive rights to the Capellani productions goes into effect at once. After affixing his signature, the director set about securing a story which would be in keeping with the Robertson-Cole policy of giving the exhibitor the best obtainable.

Have Big Stories in Mind.

"I have in mind several stories which are bigger and carry more intense interest than ever before filmed," said Mr. Capellani. "These stories I hold options on and if they are approved by the executives of Robertson-Cole, I shall go to work at once.

"It is indeed a pleasure to produce pictures which have a box office value and the finish of elaborateness, but it is more pleasing to know that your product is to be given to the trade in a manner in keeping with the class of the production. I have followed the rapid strides of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation for many months and an indeed happy that they shall be the distributors of the Capellani specials for the next two years.

"The demand of the motion picture world today is for pictures which unfold a story that grips; a cast capable of portraying the characters, a finished product, beautiful photography and detailed direction, which brings the details to the front. To do this it is necessary to have plenty of time to produce the picture and sufficient money with which to carry out the wishes of the director.

"Robertson-Cole are out after the best pictures money and time can produce. They are in full accord with my plans and I promise that the Capellani productions, which will be given to the trade world via Robertson-Cole, will set a standard hard to hit."

Goldwyn Company Departs to Film "North Wind's Malice"

CARL HARBAUGH and Paul Bern have been made co-directors by the Goldwyn Company for the next Rex Beach picture, "The North Wind's Malice." The directors and Rex Beach have gone with the actors to location at Port Henry, N. Y., where the cabins and store buildings provide the right layout for this Beach photoplay.

Jane Thomas, a beautiful and talented young actress from Chicago, has arrived to play the leading role. This is her first picture in the East. Tom Santschi has been sent east from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City to play the part of Roger Folsom. Joe King will play Henry Carter and Edward Abeles will play Tom Folsom. Vera Gordon has a fine acting opportunity as Rachel Guth, Edna Murphy is Dorothy Guth and Bessie Wheeler will impersonate the spirit of the north wind's malice. The company left for location on Sunday, February 22, and expects to be at Port Henry five weeks.

Press Book Suggests Stunts for Revived "Tillie" Film

THE sixteen page press book for "Tillie's Punctured Romance," for exhibitors is now complete for the Mack Sennett six reel super comedy being revived and distributed on the independent market by Tower Film Corporation. This book contains interesting and newsy press stores specially prepared for newspaper use.

A hand painted, colored lobby display is illustrated, and there are also reproductions of lobby photographs as well as the posters, with hints for their distribution and display to the best advantage.

A varied selection of newspaper cuts with suggestions for copy is also shown. They represent a strong contrast of black and white, with a punch in each, no matter how small the space.

A valuable section is devoted to exploitation suggestions and hints, including advertising and catch phrases. These exploitation ideas are practical and inexpensive and the exhibitor does not require an elaborate staff or crew to carry out the stunts as the ideas are adaptable for any theatre.

In addition, special service and help will be furnished direct by the Service Department of the Tower Film Corporation.

Fox News Cameraman Induces Russian Soviet Head to Pose

NICOLAI LENINE, the sombre figure at the head of the Russian Soviet government, has bowed to motion pictures. For the first time the dictator of the Bolsheviki has been recorded on the film. Victor O. Kubes, Fox News cameraman, succeeded in inducing Lenine to pose for him.

Kubes, a New Yorker, recently made his way out of Russia, after having disappeared into that country about November 1 last. The absence of any word from him for months caused considerable anxiety, and the State Department at Washington was requested to help in the search for him. The cameraman, formerly a lieutenant in the signal corps of the United States army, accompanied Lincoln Eyre, New York World correspondent, into Russia, and the pair left the country at the same time, making their way to Berlin by way of Riga. They are now in Berlin.

An interesting account of the reception accorded the Americans was published in the New York World in the form of a dispatch from Mr. Eyre, filed at Riga and sent by courier to Berlin.

Do Farmerettes Have Reputations?
We'll believe so in Dolores Cassinelli's Pathe, "Tarnished Reputations."

Harold Lloyd Comedy Promised for March 21

WITH the arrival of the negative of "Haunted Spooks," the fifth of Harold Lloyd's series of two-reel comedies from the Rolin studios in California, Pathe announces the picture for release on March 21. Lloyd's popularity will be greatly enhanced with the issue of "Haunted Spooks," according to a Pathe report, which asserts the comedy is the funniest ever made by the comedian.

Following the policy pursued with the four previous Lloyd two reelers, there is a real plot in "Haunted Spooks." The story is not so deep, however, as to rob the comedy of any of the numerous ludicrous "gags," and the film provoked roars of laughter when shown to the reviewing committee of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"Jitney Elopement" for March 1.

The second of the short length Essanay Chaplin productions handled by Victor Kremer, "The Jitney Elopement," will be released March 1. The initial release, "The Champion," was issued on February 1.

"The Jitney Elopement" has been reedited and re-titled, and the titles have been provided with pictorial backgrounds. The advertising accessories are all new and are said to be of a more elaborate character than usually expected of reissued films. They comprise lobby photos, two styles of slides, one's, three's and sixes, an eight-page booklet illustrated with drawings in colors, a four-page press sheet, cuts, mats, etc.

"The Jitney Elopement" is in two parts. It will be followed by the release on April 1 of "Work" and on May 1 of "By the Sea," both starring Charlie Chaplin.

"Sporting Duchess" in Seven Reels.

"The Sporting Duchess," Vitagraph's new Alice Joyce special production, will be presented in seven reels. Lucien Hubbard, who made the screen version of this Drury Lane success of a score of years ago, found such a wealth of material in the original script, so much splendid action referred to in the spoken drama but which, in visual form, added greatly to the strength of the story, that he made no attempt to keep the action down to the formal five reels. As a matter of fact, Miss Joyce's special productions usually run more than five reels. George Terwilliger, who directed the picture, has obtained excellent results and so engrossing is the story that few will realize that the feature has the maximum footage.

Rothman Made Assistant Secretary.

Joseph Rothman, formerly chief accountant for Pathe, has been appointed assistant secretary and assistant treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Mr. Rothman immediately will begin the installation of an accounting system that will meet fully the needs of the recently-formed organization.

Mr. Rothman has been with Pathe for more than five years, beginning as the assistant to the auditor of the New York branch.

Latest Dope on Weather, Press Agents, Dummies and Persuasive Publicity

By Giebler

I'M a punk prognostigator. Last week, after a careful study of the rain charts for previous years and a consultation with Jimmy Tynan, who's almost as good a goose-bone weather prophet as he is a publicist, (Jimmy gets away with a lot of murder in the P. A. line) I made the positive assertion that we would have considerable precipitation from now on until dry weather sets in—and the very next day things cleared up and the sun has been shining like the tresses of an ingenue after a visit to a peroxide parlor ever since.

Skies Smile at Predictions.

Of course, there is no one who likes to see our sunny southland live up to its reputation any more than I do, but I do hate to have the weather make me out a liar that way. It's gotta rain some time, though, and I'll bet one of Ham Beall's cream doughnuts that by the time this is in print the skies are weeping like an emotional lead with onion juice in her eyes. If this doesn't happen, I'm off the weather for life. It can precipitate all over the place and never get a line out of me.

There is always considerable coming and going in the colony, but this week it has been mostly going.

Even the P. A.'s Are Traveling.

Marcus Loew, who came out here to look over his Metro interests, went away and took Maxwell Karger and Richard Rowland with him. Tom Ince, Allan Dwan, Mickey Neilan, J. Parker Read, Jr., Mary Roberts Rinehart and Jesse Lasky also have shaken the dust of our fair city from their feet.

If the hegira keeps up, pretty soon there won't be anyone of any consequence out here but Bull Montana and myself.

Even the press agents have got the go-away bug in their systems. Pat Dowling, of Christie's, has been in New York a month; Carlyle Robinson, of the Doug Fairbanks organization, is rattling around on the rattlers somewhere between coast and coast; and Sig Schlager, of the J. Parker Read Company, and Mark Larkin, of Mayflower, stepped on an east-bound train this week.

I hope New York will be kind to Sig and Mark. They are both nice boys, and neither of them "mean any harm" no matter what they may do while away from the restraining influence of the old home town.

Weather Means Little to Mark.

Mark is a native son, but no one holds it against him out here. He is not the kind of native son that goes east with an orange, an English walnut and a prune in his pocket and a loud song of the sunny southland on his lips. You can cuss out our climate right in front of him and make scathing remarks about how the apartment houses and the hotels skin the tourists, and old Mark doesn't care a cent.

I toddled around the studios as usual this week, and in spite of the fact that everybody is trying to grab off as much location stuff as possible before the rains set in, I found quite a few film folks working in the studios.

Out at Metro, Ted Taylor, who has the portfolio of publicity, told me I was just in time to see some big stuff, and as "big stuff" is my particular dish, I said, "Lead me to it." And we went over on the lot across the street from the studio where William C. Dowlan was staging a big scene for Viola Dana's new film, "Eliza Comes to Stay."

The scene was intended to show how Eliza lost her father. It will be only a little bit in the story, but it was a big bit there on that lot.

"We will stop here," said Ted Taylor, selecting a nice place that had been churned into nice squashy mud by the two or three hundred horses that were being used in the action.

"The scene before you," said Ted, "represents a town in India. The men inside the walls of the town, on horses, are native soldiers. The English cavalry will attack them; there will be a sharp fight; the natives will be defeated; they will ride out through this end of the town hotly pursued by the British. You will see the natives riding like mad, their long cloaks swinging in the wind, their swords, knives and spears gleaming in the bright California sunshine. It will be a grand—an unforgettable sight."

I was so impressed with the burst of press agent eloquence that I stood rooted in the mud, and Mr. Taylor, not wishing to disturb me, thoughtfully withdrew to the side lines, where, I am informed, he watched the subsequent events through a knot hole in a fence.

Things started. Bang! Bang! Bang! A sentry was shot from a wall and fell in the street—and the horses walked on him and broke every straw in his body. The British soldiers began pouring into the town. More bangs! A perfect fusilade of bangs! Other dummies lost their lives. It was a grand sight. The native soldiers began to flee, and at that moment a tall and graceful "dummy" that had been standing in rapt attention and a muddy spot lost a look of intellectual calm and a loose-leaf note book and started to go away from there.

"Sure, You Can Go to Dinty's."

It was too late. He was hemmed in on all sides by wild horses and wild riders. Why every horse on the lot should have an ambition to soil its feet in that particular mud hole is quite beyond me, but that seemed to be the idea. I had the greatest trouble in the world to keep one steed from putting its front feet in my pockets.

As soon as things calmed down I sought Mr. Taylor and asked him if there was anything of a less strenuous nature going on, and he took me over the stages to watch Ted Sloman shooting "Burning Daylight," the first of the Jack London stories being made for C. E. Shurtleff, at Metro.

Immune to the Publicity Germ.

Mitchell Lewis was playing the lead in the film, and I never saw an actor so enthusiastic over a role. They were working on the part of the story where Mitch, as "Burning Daylight," after cleaning up a set of crooks in Alaska, comes down to New York, bucks the stock market and gets laundried himself.

Helen Ferguson is supporting Mr. Lewis, and the two of them were making scenes in a stock broker's office—and after it was all done, I had the pleasure of being introduced to Miss Ferguson, who turned out to be one of the small number of players who do not believe in press-agenting themselves. Mr. Sloman told Miss Ferguson that this was a good time to say a few kind things about herself, insomuch as the testimonial might find its way into print, but in spite of the fact that I stood there with one of my most encouraging smiles "irritating" my countenance, and with my nice new gold-plated pencil poised in air, the young lady would not throw any bouquets at herself.

An Agreeable Solution.

Mitch Lewis and Tel Sloman then volunteered to put on a praise record in her behalf if she would do the same for them—so what could the poor girl do? At any rate, I have to report that according to the testimony of Miss Helen Ferguson, Mitch Lewis is "some" actor, and that Ted Sloman is ditto in the directing line; and according to the combined reports of the above mentioned gentlemen, Miss Ferguson is a capable, conscientious and charming leading lady, and as documentary proof of her devotion to realism, I was shown the stenographer's note book she was using in the part in "Burning Daylight," and the leaves were covered with real Ike Pittman pothooks.

I also dropped in at Christie's this week, not for long, but long enough to meet Chic Sale, who is going to make Irvin Cobb's "The Smart Aleck" into a five-reel comedy.

Right Out of a McManus Strip.

Al Christie has arranged to use the Wortham Carnival Shows, that are booked for a date in Los Angeles, as a background for "The Smart Aleck." As soon as the Wortham's public engagement is over, the whole outfit will move out to the Christie lot and camp until the comedy is finished.

I also picked up a good laugh looking at a scene that Al Christie was making for a "Bringing Up Father" comedy. Al Cohn, who is handling a special exploitation campaign on the "Father" comedies, told me I would laugh before we got to the set.

"That pair," meaning Johnny Ray, who plays Father, and Margaret Fitzroy, who is Maggie, "are screams," he said. "It's the only stuff I ever saw that was funny in the making."

I took this statement like I do many press agent announcements, with a grain of salt. But Al was right. Jiggs and Maggie are screams. Their make-up and characterizations are perfect. They are as natural as though they had stepped right out of a George McManus strip.

Grimm Becomes Associated Exhibitors Advertising Head

BEN H. GRIMM has resigned his position as advertising manager of Select Pictures Corporation to become director of advertising and publicity for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., under Fred C. Quimby, general manager.

Although a comparatively young man, Mr. Grimm has a wide knowledge of his work and an extensive acquaintance in the industry.

Coming to the motion picture industry from the field of general newspaper work, Mr. Grimm became connected with Metro, where he wrote publicity and later was sent to California in a similar capacity. Later he joined the staff of Moving Picture World, where his writings won his recognition in the trade.

In 1917, Mr. Grimm enlisted in the Air Service of the U. S. Army, and served as an aerial photographer for eighteen months. On his discharge he went back to Moving Picture World and then to Wid's Daily. From there he went to Select.

Before entering the motion picture field, Mr. Grimm worked on the staff of various newspapers in the country, chief of which was his connection with the New York Evening Journal, of which he was assistant to the city editor when he resigned.

Changes Title of Griffith Film.

With the announcement that the title of D. W. Griffith's second personally directed production for release through First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been changed from "Fires of Love" to "The Idol Dancer," is revealed a remarkable exhibitor exploitation feature in the fact that it was Mr. Griffith's efforts to obtain genuine South Sea settings and outdoor locations for its scenes which led to the narrow escape he and his party had from death aboard the yacht Gray Duck off the Bahamas in December.

A number of special feature stories, especially prepared for exhibitor use, and based on the near-disaster phase of the production, is incorporated in the First National press sheet.

FIGURES have been compiled to show how much money is spent by the people of Ottawa, the Canadian capitol, for moving picture entertainment during the year. With a population of approximately 127,500, including suburban residents, and twelve theatres at which moving pictures are presented regularly, it has been estimated that the sum of $1,170,000 is spent annually for admission tickets—or at least that this was the total amount of the box office receipts during the past twelve months.

It is figured that the daily attendance at the twelve theatres reaches the total of 31,200. This gives a weekly attendance of 187,200. Taking into consideration that patronage at the various houses during the summer months is not quite up to the mark, the statistician estimates the total annual attendance at 4,680,000.

Wide Variance in Prices.

Prices in the various local moving picture houses vary from 10 cents to 50 cents and the average admission price is placed at 25 cents. The total receipts for a year are therefore figured at $1,170,000.

Ottawa has three combination moving picture and vaudeville theatres, nine moving picture theatres and one legitimate theatre. The lone legitimate house presents a road show once in a while, the bookings being irregular. This house is dark probably one-third of the time. All other theatres are running full blast six days in the week. The combination theatres are the Dominion, Casino and Family, but the latter has become practically an exclusive film theatre.

The seating capacities of the various houses are as follows: Regent, 1,300; Francais, 1,300; Imperial, 1,200; Centre, 1,200; Family, 1,200; Dominion, 1,200; Strand, 700; Casino, 700; Fern, 400; Rex, 400, and Cinema, 400.

Ottawa to Have Two New Houses.

The above figures do not take into consideration the moving picture theatres situated in Hull, Quebec, which is located just across the Ottawa River from Ottawa. In Hull, the theatres include the Odeon, Eden and Princess. These are operated seven days in the week, Sunday performances being tolerated in the Province of Quebec. Hull has a population of about 30,000 people, many of whom cross the river to patronize Ottawa theatres, except on Sundays when a considerable number of Ottawa citizens take the trip across the bridge in order to attend a show.

Ottawa will shortly have a new large theatre, a Loew house, which will have a seating capacity of about 2,500. This will be a combination theatre, of course. The Famous Players' Canadian corporation also promises to erect still another large new film palace in the Canadian capital this year and this one will also probably have large capacity. Thus, the total theatre patronage in Ottawa may take a big jump during 1920. Incidentally, Ottawa is a representative Canadian city.

Various Argus Enterprises Consolidate in Cleveland

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made in Cleveland of the consolidation of the various Argus companies in the motion picture and supply and equipment field under the incorporated title of the Argus Enterprises. The combination takes in several companies, which were formerly related to each other, among them the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, the Argus Motion Picture Company, the Argus Theatre Supply Division and the Argus Film Laboratories.

The Argus Lamp and Appliance Company manufactured the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter for the use of Mazda lamps in projection machines. It also distributed nationally the Argus Crystal Bead Screen. The Argus Motion Picture Company made industrial pictures and any other productions on a cost plus basis. The Argus Theatre Supply Division handled the sale of equipment in Ohio. This included the Simplex projector. The Argus Film Laboratories did a general line of work as its name indicates, having a very complete plant.

All of the various activities of these companies will be continued by the new concern, and it was further stated that Argus Enterprises, Inc., now has the sales agency for the entire United States for General Electric motor generator sets.

The company will continue under the management of H. H. Cudmore and H. A. Brereton, the founders, and no changes will be made in the personnel of the executive staff as a result of the combination. It has an efficient corps of salesmen covering the United States and working out of the general headquarters, which are located in the Sloan Building, Cleveland. It is preparing to open branch offices and stores in Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cincinnati, Buffalo and other cities.

Large Spaces and Few Words Typical Features of Coliseum Displays in Seattle

LARGE spaces and few words are the characteristic of many of the western advertisers, but J. W. Sayre, of the Jensen and Von Herberg theatres, Seattle, is a past master in the art of handling white space, although he is not always as happy in his employment of cuts. The two spaces reproduced here are the Sunday advertisements for "Pollyanna," that on the left being the opening announcement, while on the right appears the second week's display when the film had only three days to run. For the first a full fives, less the space for the head, was taken on the front page of the theatrical section, while for the following week an inside four fulls was used to announce the prolongation of the engagement. Super-imposing the cut of "Pollyanna" getting a spanking upon the larger subject has not worked out well. The small cut would have worked better in the lower right-hand corner, but we like very much the silhouette in the O of the name and the placement of the express wagon. The second space is in many ways much the better.

"POLLYANNA"

One of the great stories for which the amusement-loving world has long waited is here, but for only a little longer, until Tuesday night.

Pollyanna is the high priestess of optimism. She is not merely the discoverer, but the 33rd degree exploiter of the silver lining.

The fairies who made sunshine from the cucumbers were insignificant beings to Pollyanna. She is full of action and sparkle and pathos and will help you to turn your sorrows, big and small, into gladness.

MALOTTE on the WURLITZER

A Front Page Fives and an Inside Full Fours for "Pollyanna," from Seattle.

Here the play had been established and cuts were less necessary, and the copy is very well written. If you will notice the border of the left hand cut closely you will find something new in the handling of rule to make a border. The corners are formed of two pices of rule, one within the other, while the sides and bottom are three pieces of one point rule, each shorter than the one next nearer the edge. It looks better on the page than it does in the reproduction, and can be recommended for large spaces, though it will not work well under a ten deep.

Took Two Full Pages to Tell About the Glories of His Double Bill

JUST to get in the comedy swing, the manager of the Liberty, Wenatchee, Wash., let the Pathe salesman rent him "Oh, Boy" and the second of the Harold Lloyd big comedies, "From Hand to Mouth," and he felt so good over the big laugh that was coming to his patrons he went out and hooked up fourteen merchants to come in with him on a double page in the daily World. He took about half the space himself to smear the comedy bill, and every last one of the outside displays got in on the "Oh, Boy" catchline. They had to. You can imagine the grocery store or the butcher shop hooking up with "From Hand to Mouth." It can't be done. The display is unusually good for a double decker and the house end of it was not spoiled by crowding. The only possible comment is that the lines have too nearly the same value throughout.

Two Detroit Advertisements in Which Good Hand Work Is Expertly Utilized

ALTHOUGH hand lettering is never as good as clear type, these two examples from the Kunsky houses, Detroit, are better handled than most. The lettering is fairly clear, the Tom Moore title getting over better than that for Miss Talmadge, partly because there is less of it to the line both in star and title, and also because it more closely approximates actual type, and the real success of hand lettering is to be judged by his similarity to clean cut type. The heart effect in the Madison display has been very well treated. The cupid and the benday both help to kill the bare effect, while not interfering with the value of the white space, and the background does not kill the pose. It does fade in Miss Talmadge's hair, but this helps to make the face more prominent and the high lights on the head of the masculine figure gives a clear outline where this is needed. It will be noted that the Adams is announcing a fashion show. Have you planned yours yet? There is nothing that will bring the same return for your outlay. Think it over. It is easier than it sounds. And that bandbox is our idea of an attractor cut.

Suiting Treatment to the Attraction Helps California Theatre Displays

ART work brings one advantage when intelligently used. It gives an advertisement which matches to some extent the style of attraction. Compare these two announcements of the California Theatre, San Francisco. On the left is the announcement of a Wallace Reid story. It is a story of vivid action and not only does the drawing convey the idea of speed, suggested by the title, but the line cut lends itself better to this style of story than would half tone or benday. On the other hand a line cut for Miss Talmadge would not be as effective as this benday. This story is not of the slam bang type. It is a polite drama and the reserved treatment of the figures is more in harmony with the type of the tale. It is more apt to attract the type of patron who will enjoy this style of play more than the auto story.

It is not unreasonable to argue that some people will be reached by this type of advertisement who would ignore the story were it treated in line and with dash. This may seem to be a far-fetched argument, but if you will take the trouble to study how you are sold on various merchandise you will find that the shoe merchant who advertises like a grocer does not get your business. Not all houses can afford art work, but in a limited way it is possible to do the same thing with type and stock cuts and suit your display to the character of the story with profit to yourself.

How George A. Bleich Plays up Features

ALTHOUGH we have shown many examples of the weekly newspaper program invented by George A. Bleich, this new display for the Empress, Owensboro, Ky., shows something new in the handling of an extra feature in the usual space. This was followed during the week with other strips, but Mr. Bleich trusts much to his Sunday space to get the crowd in through the week, and this cross page 6¾ gives him an ample display at little greater cost than his usual spaces. There is a lot of six-point in this pace, yet it is handled so that every line may be read.

Try Using Stock Cuts for Throwaways

ALTHOUGH it is fashionable to decry the press book cuts as not being what the exhibitor wants, it will be found that the three and four column sizes will make capital throwaways with very little additional work and often will get out a piece of printing far better than a herald or more costly style of work. The United Artists sends in a couple of better than usual throwaways fabricated from press book cuts merely with the addition of the house signature by the Elks' Theatre, Prescott, Arizona.

The two sent in are for Fairbanks and Broken Blossoms and are printed in a green ink on rough wood stock. It is not a costly piece of printing, but it looks many times its cost. For years the Hardwicke Brothers, down in Clovis, have been using this idea for years, as back files will prove, but more and more others seem to be coming to a realization that the much despised press book cut has a real use. Try it some time. You will be pleased with the result if your printer is any good, and it takes a poor printer to spoil most press book cuts.

Steve Farrar Overlooks a Chance

IT IS not often that Steve Farrar, of Harrisburg and Eldorado, Ill., overlooks a bet, but he lost a good chance in his cross-page three for the Orpheum when he offered "Why I Would Not Marry." The nine line "Go Slow" is a good catchline, but in an eighteen point line below he says that there are 341,277 divorced persons in the United States. That would have made a better attractor line and might arouse some speculation as to who got the half divorce. It is good as it stands, but he could have made it stronger. Steve is getting out a very nice looking weekly program, but he gives too much space to his commercial ads and does not take sufficient for the house. It would also pay to date the issues on the front page. The front is sold to a bakery, and as the text is not changed you cannot tell this week's from last week.

Ornamental Frame Gives Good Display Where Art Work Spoils Prominence

ALTHOUGH he is not yet entirely converted to the frame for his three fives, J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal Theatre, Providence, R. I., is using the frame more and more, as against the special art work. He uses both styles and his drawn designs are pleasing, but we think that he gets more from big type than he does from cuts. We reproduce two of the spaces and leave it to the jury. It sometimes happens that a cut will sell better than type, but where Mr. Lovett has to get an entire week over in one display, we think that type is the better. As before explained, he gets on the local Olneyville page without competition of any other theatrical advertising, and he has only a few smaller trade spaces to fight.

There is virtually no fight. The ad carries about a quarter column of announcement in the local news and generally a two-column cut, the only one on the page. We believe that straight type would be the better plan nineteen weeks out of twnty. We are glad to see that Mr. Lovett is at last coming more to the frame. He is so alert in other directions that there is probably some reason for his holding to the drawings, but perhaps he is his own artist, which has explained similar conditions before.

Split His Attractor Fifty-Fifty

THE Strand, Toronto, sends in two displays for "Male and Female" and a combination of the two would be pretty close to a model, but there was only one good attractor cut, apparently, so the best displayed space gets a rather dead figure of Meighan doing something or other with an oar, while the other gets the cut of Miss Swanson and the lion. The lion cut in the six 9½'s would have made a pretty display, though it would have been a little wide for the space.

It works better on a four four fourteens, where it rides at the top of the space, the title getting a single line, which is not as good, in this instance, as the three line of the other. "Male and Female" is one of the few titles which will be better split into three lines, getting over the sex idea by presenting the "male" and "female" on separate lines. Not many titles will ride better split, but now and then there comes an example which will show to better advantage if divided.

Try This Argument to Increase Your Prices

If You Ever Expect Raised Prices Keep This Argument

HERE is one of the best price-raising advertisements we have ever seen. It is an even better argument than Mr. Wilby's famous "phonograph" copy of some years back. It is not merely talk, but argument, and the sort of argument that will appeal to every man and woman. It is all right to make a lot of high-flown remarks about the improvement in pictures and the necessity for charging more, but when you show that eggs have tripled in price, that butter is worth double what it was, that sugar is two and a half times what it used to cost, and potatoes four times what they were in 1915, you can boost the price a little and get away with it to the approval of your patrons.

The copy was written and the layout designed by Howard G. Ramsey, of the Royal, El Dorado, Kans. Mr. Ramsey writes that there are three houses in town. All three were charging twenty cents when two of them decided to go to a quarter. The other house held out for a couple of weeks, but when it found that the other houses suffered no loss in business and that they gained no new patrons by saving them a nickel, the third house swung into line.

A Price Raising Advertisement Which Is All Logical Argument. Written by Howard G. Ramsey.

He gives it as his belief that the pictures can sell for any price under fifty cents and draw, and his own practice is to sell regularly at a quarter and about once a month offer a picture for thirty or thirty-five cents. He sees all pictures personally if he is to run them for more than a day, or if he is to offer them at an increased price, and his personal indorsement is sufficient to sell any picture at the higher price. His patrons have confidence in his statements, and if he says a picture is worth more, they pay it cheerfully and go out in entire agreement with him. He shows Paramount-Artcraft, Goldwyn and First National, with now and then a special, and he has just put over "In Old Kentucky" in great shape.

Full Pages Widely Used to Advertise Comedies

SWINGING from one extreme to the other, the managers now seem to feel that there is nothing they cannot do to exploit comedy subjects. A year ago comedies got a few lines among the also rans below the big space devoted to the five reel feature, but now half pages are common and full page displays are by no means uncommon and presently they, too, will be so common as to excite small comment. Sometimes the exchange splits the cost with the house, for one reason for the new interest in comedy is that the producers have at last come to realize that comedy is not a by-product: merely something to be thrown in free to clinch the booking of a dramatic feature. Two recent pages come from the Pathe office, one of them being from the Roanoke (Va.) Times. The most noteworthy line is that just above the signature of the Isis. It reads in a small eight point, "A five reel feature also showing—'The Gay Lord Quex,' with Tom Moore, Mon. Tue. 'Stepping Out' with Enid Bennett on Wed." The drawing is too general in its make-up to be a good selling proposition and only the size gets it over. We like much better a page from Little Rock, Ark., which holds more nearly to the play and gives some idea of the jazz of the subject. This merely gives the dramatic feature in a panel in the lower right hand corner, almost an afterthought. This display carries the address of the exchange in a panel to balance the dramatic attraction for the benefit of out-of-town exhibitors. It is a much better piece of work because more characteristic of the offering.

Putting "Plan" in the Plan Books

Pleased with the comment on his "The Willow Tree" plan book, J. E. D. Meador sends out several others for differing attractions and even at the risk of necessitating his purchase of a hat of more ample dimensions we are willing to say that J. E. D. Meador, of Metro, is putting plan in the plan books. He does not put the stuff merely to fill up the pages. He runs real schemes to help the exhibitor make money, and he gives about everything needed. They are good because they are practical and not merely fantastic.

Putting Over "Soldiers of Fortune" a Week in Fresno

HARRY J. WENDLAND, who is running the Strand, Fresno, Cal., set out to do something with "Soldiers of Fortune." It is not locally regarded as good booking to try and beat Los Angeles or San Francisco with a picture, the idea being to get the big city notices for publicity work. A run for a full week was still less to be thought of, but Wendland booked in the film for a week and played it before the rest of his territory, and he got away with it.

He had to hustle like a vagrant cat two jumps ahead of a bulldog, but he not only put it over, but he made the going in the face of strong split-week opposition. The Strand, as told lately, is a house with a bad former reputation. It was a second or third rate house in which a hoodlum element had had pretty much its own way. To attempt to get it into the first line was regarded as tempting fate, but for this very reason Wendland decided to try the moral effect of a premiere.

He took few big spaces, but he varied his displays in every way he could think of, running from a four fulls to a K. C. B. style, one of which he managed to get onto the editorial page. He started two weeks in advance with his newspaper work and followed immediately with a bill posting campaign which covered the surrounding territory as well as the city itself. Every book handler was hooked up with the published story even down to the little fellows, and he got out a midnight extra the day before showing with "War Declared" in big type and "in South American Republic" in a smaller letter below. This was distributed by boys and the stuff caused so much excitement that distribution was stopped by the police, though he had taken out a permit.

Another novel stunt was to mail out several thousand fake telegrams in regular

If Eve Wears Clothes, Tell Your Patrons

Western Union envelopes. The next day the post office told him not to do it again, and he promised not to. Once was plenty, but he got it over to a lot of people who probably would not have read a mailed circular or postcard. The envelopes were the real Western Union stock and not in imitation. It was a feverish campaign, but business held up for the week, and now there is a disposition to accept the Strand as a production house instead of a reformed "bad boy" whose reformation has yet to be tested. And the strongest incentive to getting it over was that everyone told him he could not do it. After that he felt he had to, and so he did.

Portraits Best Argument To Sell Miss MacDonald

THIS five tens is one of a number of similar displays from various parts of the country for Katherine MacDonald in her various productions, but it works especially well when used for "The Beauty Market," as shown in this display from William Friedman, of the Loew houses in Cleveland. Miss MacDonald has been widely advertised as the most beautiful woman in pictures, and the screen does not belie her press agent. To capitalize this, the use of portraits is, naturally, the best angle, and while some routine advertisers will bewail the lack of selling talk, it will be found that the pictures speak for themselves.

A Novel Advertisement from Cleveland.

An advertisement is useful in proportion to the number of tickets it will sell over and above the normal business of the house, and if for one time the use of portraits will sell a greater number of tickets than words can dispose of, then the portrait is clearly the best selling angle. But if portraits are used care should be employed that the cut is press proof, for muddy looking pictures will not sell to advantage. The Cleveland press work is only indifferent, but good enough to get the idea over.

Well, and What Would You Do?

STANLEY CHAMBERS, of the Palace, Wichita, Kans., sends in a batch of good stuff, mostly about Lew Cody, which seems to be press book cuts, and excellent ones. But there is a little double five for "Fair and Warmer" with a band up on one corner reading:

If you found your wife under a bear-rug in another man's apartment, and she poked her head out and said, "Wuff! Wuff!"—what would you do?

We don't know whether this is original or press book, but it is a remarkably good line, and if it did not make business it is because Wichita has no imagination. Mr. Chambers makes excellent use of these little all-type ads, and they often sell better than larger spaces with cuts. If you can get one good line like that you do not need cuts. You can sell on the interest you create and sell better than you can on a hundred average cuts. A line like that appeals to thought where a cut will merely reach the eye. They are not easy to write, but they are worth trying for.

Nice Study in Proportion Offered in This Display

NELSON B. BELL, of the Crandall theatres, Washington, writes that he is still unconvinced by our recent comments on his displays. He contends that as long as it is different from the other displays on a two page dramatic department, he is right. To that extent he most assuredly is. Anything different is going to get the money, no matter in what way it differs from the others. That is not the point we are making. We argued that there were other ways than hand lettering, and our position is unchanged. But Mr. Bell sends in a three twelves so well displayed that we give it space even though it does take up more room than any single cut has the right to expect in this department. It is not easy to put your finger upon any one particular point and say that this is what makes the cut a good one. It is rather the general excellence which goes to make an harmonious whole. It does not offer one good point of super excellence which saves the entire space. It is that every component is right. It more closely approximates the standard of excellence than any single display we have shown in a long time. The proportion of color, the placement of the letter press, the choice of cuts and the copy all contribute to this result. Study it carefully. It can be sensed better than it can be dissected. Mr. Bell has gone ahead of his record.

Eve Wears Clothes in Her Exile, So the Ad Misleads

THIS is a very pretty three tens from the Alhambra, Indianapolis, but the attractor does not match the title and we think that Charles M. Olson found that a number of persons who came to see how Charlotte Walker looks when she takes a bath, will go away disappointed when they find that this is not a bathing girl comedy, but a society play. The reader, clipped from the press book, does not clarify the matter, for it does not touch upon the modern theme. The drawing is unusually well handled, particularly in the treatment of the masses of shadow to throw the figure in relief, but it makes the wrong appeal.

Offered merely as the attractor to a story palpably modern, it would get over, but the nude figure, taken in conjunction with the "Eve" in the title, is misleading, and while complaint may not be audible, there is apt to be some resentment at what some will denominate a sting. It is a nice question of psychology, but an attractor should either intimately suggest the film or it should be so remote as to remove all suggestion of connection. The picture does not fit here, but it offers an excellent study in values and should commend itself to those who really study advertising, for it is above the average in art value.

State-wide Hook-up with "Huck Finn" May Become National W. S. S. Scheme

AFTER cleaning up Chillicothe with the premier of "Huckleberry Finn," Oscar A. Doob, the Paramount Cincinnati man, hustled over to Columbus to help James Maddox put it over at his Southern. Between them they cooked up the foundation of a state-wide campaign to hook "Huck" to the War Savings Stamps campaign.

Mr. Maddox started the scheme in collaboration with the Franklin County Committee, and it is possible that the movement will become nation wide. "Huck" and "Tom Sawyer" discover a hidden treasure and each gets about $6,000, the income from which was a dollar a day. This thrift angle is used to connect with the W. S. S.

Any child selling $100 worth of the stamps before a given date was made a member of the "Huckleberry Finn Club," membership in which carries a free ticket to the theatre where the stunt is worked. Small cash prizes were given in addition to the three children disposing of the greatest values. That is all there is to the scheme, but it has rich possibilities, for the W. S. S. literature is posted on the bulletin boards of all schools and elsewhere, so that all children are reached, and each child becomes an unofficial press agent for the film in explaining why he or she is trying to dispose of the required quota.

To Be Widely Worked.

The scheme will be worked all over Ohio wherever the film is booked, the drive being opened well in advance to permit the children to get busy, the quota to be determined by the possibilities of the town. As Washington is always on the lookout for new ideas to push the stamps, it is probable that the scheme will be extended to other states.

Another contest scheme was a double page hook up with nine advertisers. Prizes aggregating 100 tickets were offered for the best fifty-word replies to the question, "What would you do with the money Huck Finn found?" In addition to the reply, each child was required to write out the name, address and business of the nine advertisers. Forty-five prizes were given, a six-seat box, one with four seats and forty-three pairs of seats.

Used a Stamp.

Rubber stamps reading "Huckleberry Finn Apple Pie. See the play at the Southern," and also advertising biscuits were given the hotels and restaurants and were freely used by the eating places because of Mr. Maddox's popularity.

The film was also used to drive on the nursery, where the very small children could be checked during the performance. This stunt is not new, but was worked for an additional angle. Each baby checked is given a tag, half of which is torn off and given the mother. It carries a serial number and reads:

> Dear Mother:
>
> If I need you the nurse will have my number displayed at the west of the stage. I hope you enjoy the show.
>
> (Signed)__BABY.

The check is a straight baggage tag and the numbers displayed in a special panel when a mother is needed.

Plenty of Paper.

Thirty 24-sheets were displayed, in addition to the smaller sizes, and one of these was placed on the ruins of a large department store which had burned the previous week and was still a matter of local interest, about the finest location Mr. Maddox could have found.

And for a week before the engagement a trailer was used on the screen reading, "Oh, Boy! Oh, Joy! Look who's coming! Start thinking about it, Dad! You know you're going to bring the family." This was decorated with Huck's face and this changed expression as the trailer ran.

As a result of all the hustle the opening day was just one dollar shy of $1,500, with six days to run.

Service Man Sees Chance to Clean Up for House

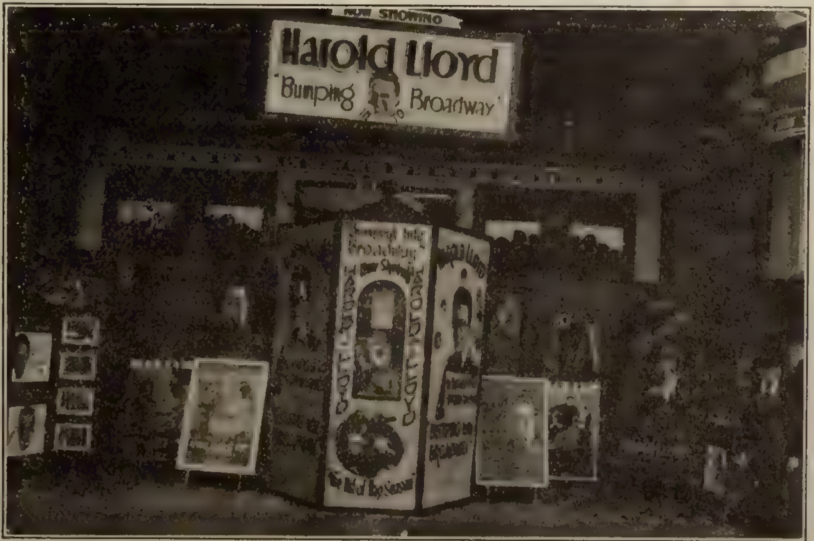
HARRY V. MARTIN, of the Goldwyn service staff, out of the Cincinnati office, saw his chance the other day to clean up for his house, and he certainly did clean up. Recently the Palace, Hamilton, Ohio, a house about to open, booked in its attractions, including the Goldwyn films. Fred S. Meyer, managing director, knew he would be up against it for he had to buck two long-established residents, so he asked for a little help.

Meyer with Harry Turnberg and Harry Silver owned the Palace and he was the only practical theatrical man of the trio. He was busy getting the house ready to open, so Martin shot advance stuff down from Cincinnati and ran over to Hamilton to plant it. He helped book advance orders for seats over the wire, wrote letters, arranged a menu card for the banquet which was to be the opening gun and did a few odd jobs that did not give Meyer any poor opinion of Goldwyn.

He was back for the opening day with another man from the Cincinnati office, Eddie Connolly, a shipping clerk. Connolly was put in charge of the wire ticket sale while Martin had the more congenial task of looking after the banquet. He also helped the local paper get out a four page supplement for the opening, writing the cover story. Nazimova in "The Brat" was the opening attraction and was duly played up, but to read the full story "By Harry V. Martin, Special Staff Correspondent," was to get the idea that the house really did not open until the Goldwyns began to come along. It was a legitimate stunt, but it was a big thing for Goldwyn and gives another angle of the resident publicity man idea. Because the Goldwyn man was on the job the town took on a Goldwyn tinge that should last.

False Box Office Front for Harold Lloyd Comedy

PLAYING up a Harold Lloyd comedy, the first of the new series, the Liberty Theatre, Council Bluffs, Ia., even went to the expense of building a false front for the box office, while most of the lobby was also given to the comedian, almost to the exclusion of the dramatic feature. The two sides of the box office were merely built up three sheets, while the center was enlivened with a cut-out from a one sheet, cut-outs also being pasted on one of the threes. This forms a cheap and flashy special box office and by retaining the frame it can be used repeatedly for different attractions. Wall paper may be used for the backing where the booth is larger than a three sheet.



Bump Broadway, But Not the Screen.

This looks like a special box office, but it is just a three wing screen with a hole cut for the all-important passage of coin.

Try An Explosive Egg to Blow Up Business

Parade and Booze-Cow Stirred All Minneapolis to See "Twilight Baby"

THE exploitation campaign that will stand out above all other local efforts in behalf of comedy attractions in Minneapolis, has just been completed, conceived and steered by Charles C. Perry, manager of the Strand Theatre of that city.

Notable in that it is representative of a strain of originality that is today marking exhibitor exploitation and in the fact that it is a departure from the routine theory that comedies were not meant to be exploited, Mr. Perry's accomplishment with "A Twilight Baby," Henry Lehrman's initial production for First National Exhibitors' Circuit in which Lloyd ("Ham") Hamilton and Virginia Rappe were starred, merits considerable exhibitor attention.

Basing his exploitation campaign upon the most ludicrous features of the film, Mr. Perry found that the explosive egg, the cow that gave 2.75, the "tight"-riders and the chickens and dogs were the most appropriate factors which he might assemble.

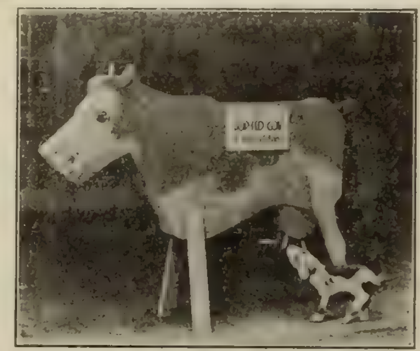
A Sawbuck Cow.

It was far from a simple matter to erect a paper-machine cow to stand in the lobby of the Strand. Yet, it was done after a goodly amount of perspiration, inspiration and earnest cooperation. The cow was built on saw buck lines and its tail was fashioned from an artistically-bent piece of gas pipe. It's legs were two by fours and the milk-bag resembled a small wash-boiler in which clothes-pins had been stuck. However, when the artist had touched up the frame work and when a paper machie dog was located conveniently near the milk-bag the effect was as desired with a sign reading, "The Hop-Fed Cow in "A Twilight Baby."

At long range it was difficult to tell whether or not a real cow was stationed in the lobby of the Strand Theatre. At close range the burlesque was funny and the attention it created and the jests it provoked proved highly profitable from a box office standpoint. As Mr. Perry said: "The first laugh came when they looked at the lobby. The first laugh was a good indication that more were in store for the prospective ticket buyer. If the exhibitor can get a laugh by just one little stunt, it was good reason for the general public to believe that the producer had rolled up many other laughs. "

A Nondescript Parade.

But an even greater aid, and responsible for arousing more interest than the lobby display, was the parade that Mr. Perry devised to cover the streets of Minneapolis at regular intervals during the day and night, creating by its novel and grotesque assemblage wide attention toward the attraction which the Strand was presenting.



The Saw-buck Cow.

This parade was headed by a standard-bearer who proclaimed in large type: "Now at the Strand—Season's Best Comedy Feature—'A Twilight Baby.'" Following the standard was a man bearing a large wax doll mounted on a long pole. Another sign which followed directly in the rear of the doll, stated: "'SOME KID' We say—And you'll Say so Too."

Then came a sturdy employe leading a real, live, honest-to-goodness cow upon which a sign stated: "Hop Fed Cow. This is the real article." Imitations of the disciples of the "wild thirst" as depicted in the picture followed next in line. These men were attired in the garb of night-riders with the exception of the headgear which consisted of huge paper sacks through which holes had been cut for seeing and breathing. "2.75%" was written on each of the robes, and each man carried a stein of something that resembled near-beer. "On trail of 2.75" was the sign that one of the men carried.

With Eggs at Ten Cents!

Next in line was a three foot long by eleven inch in diameter egg, labeled the "explosive egg." A hen was attached to the top of this monster egg. There was considerable speculation as to the exact place during the parade its explosion would take place.

Last followed a collection of five dogs of divers breeds and dispositions, the antics of which created considerable interest in the large sign, that stated: "Warning, People with cracked lips are cautioned to stay away from the Strand."

The fact that an auto show was in Minneapolis at the same time "A Twilight Baby," was scheduled to be shown, made little or no difference to Mr. Perry. He soon found a way, and a rather spectacular way at that, of turning this apparent distraction into an asset. He hired two unusually attractive young ladies to locate themselves in a prominent auto and distribute novel hand-bills calling attention to the showing of "A Twilight Baby," at the Strand.

Cold Spoiled the Tights.

The tights in which these two girls were supposed to have been dressed were not worn except for two days, due to the very cold weather that struck Minneapolis at this time and the fear of the girls that they might catch influenza if they allowed themselves to take colds.

All in all Mr. Perry designed an exploitation campaign that future campaigns will have difficulty in superceding in local favor and interest.

Wuerz Gives the Lowdown on Record-Breaking Sale

WHEN Charles H. Wuerz, of the Rivoli, Denver, Colo., recently broke the box-office records for the three years the picture house had been opened by playing up Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt" most persons imagined that he would feel contented. They guessed wrong, for Mr. Wuerz holds that only a sensational picture can rouse the proper enthusiasm. A society play, even with the most beautiful woman on the screen, cannot make a permanent record.

A few weeks later the Western Livestock Show was held in Denver. Mr. Wuerz papered the town two deep and then set out eight girls, dressed as jockeys and mounted on thoroughbred stock. There was not much of a margin for a new record, but such as it was Mr. Wuerz took it up and now he feels that he has set a permanent mark until he can get a larger house. And he has proved his point that beauty of face and strength of play cannot bring the ultimate results. There must be added a strong sensation to reach the limit of enthusiasm.

Supplies Idea for Production

CARRYING service to its last analysis, the Peacock Productions, Inc., Tulsa, Okla., supplied its patrons with ideas for productions for the more important films it handles. These are supplied on sheets and can be put on at the expense of a couple of dollars. The samples sent in show the production for "Eyes of Youth" and is practicable, inexpensive and effective.

Get in "Loyal Line" with "The Copperhead"

You Can Tie-up the Loyal Legion to "The Copperhead" with Good Results

MOVING over into Indiana for the most recent Paramount first-time-in-the-world premier, "The Copperhead" was given W. C. Meloy, of the Strand, Shelbyville, to see what he could do with it. What he did was ample, but the big angle was to book up the Loyal Legion through the patriotic appeal, and this is to be recommended to all who handle this story when the film is regularly released.

Paul Meloy, son of the manager, is himself a member of Victory Post, No. 7, of the Loyal Legion, and he described the film to such advantage that the Post attended the opening performance in a body in testimonial of their appreciation of the sound patriotism of the story.

But before this Mr. Meloy, with the assistance of Jerome H. Cook, of the Cincinnati Paramount exchange, gave a private showing to the leading people of the town, including educators, professional men and Frank Rembusch, who conducts the opposition house in Shelbyville and yet did not have the least hesitancy in declaring "The Copperhead" to be a great picture.

Showing Brought Results.

One of the results of the private view was a Sunday sermon with the picture as the text, preached by the Rev. A. F. Von Tobel, who recommended the story to his congregation. Another direct result was a powerful endorsement from Prof. J. W. Holton, Superintendent of Schools, who recommended it to the children "and everybody in Shelbyville." Frank Wolfe and Walter J. Myers endorsed the picture on behalf of the Legion and the newspapers took the story over into the news columns.

Mr. Meloy secured a number of advantageous window locations for cards and other displays and got half a dozen 24-sheets right in the heart of the business district, with plenty of paper elsewhere.

In his regular advertising he followed the dignified lines of the plan book, but he preceded this with a teaser campaign asking "Are you a Copperhead?" the questions running both in the newspapers and on snipes. His opening announcement was a five fourteens. In all the advertising a special drive was made on the after-school performances at 3.45 on each of the two days of the run. This took the strain off the night performances and also sent the children home to tell about the film.

Adaptability Contest New Appeal to Local Interest

LOCAL contests bring rich returns to theatres, and where some local paper can be induced to take over the idea for a circulation scheme it brings returns all out of proportion to the time and money invested. One of the newest schemes was worked by Leslie F. Whelan, exploitation man for the Famous Players-Lasky, for the Lynch theatres in Dallas, Tex.

This took the form of an "Adaptability Character Contest" in the Dispatch. Prizes were offered for the photographs of young women who would seem to be best qualified to play the characters of "Youth," "Beauty" and "Modesty" in "Everywoman." Several hundred photographs were received and the judging was done by three representative citizens. The winners were taken on a shopping tour, extensively written up by the Dispatch, with advertisements of the stores visited to square the advertising manager. The stunt sounds simple, but it worked extremely well.

Other Publicity Stunts.

The Journal gave a six-page section to the film, the front page carrying a layout for the play with four pages of advertising hooked up to the title and a page of general matter. It was the first time the Journal had ever gotten out a special section for a theatrical attraction.

The Times Herald came in with a ten-page section with more than forty advertisements of local merchants, each hooking up with the film through some apt reference to "Everywoman."

A hook-up with one newspaper is common enough, but in Dallas all were used.

Hooked up "Loot" and the New Bond Theft Sensations

HOOKING up "Loot" the Universal adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story with the sensational stories of the big bond thefts in the New York financial districts, brought real money to Barney Goodman, of the Frolic, San Francisco.

The Arthur Somers Roche story also deals with a man higher up who directs the operations of a gang and Mr. Goodman was quick to see the advantage of cashing in on the big news story. He posted synopses of the story and the newspaper accounts of the operations of the "Master Mind" on the same easel frames in the lobby and got a lot of people who read the papers and not the weekly.

Just to help along he made an extra electrical display for this showing and between the two angles rang capacity for the week. Mr. Goodman works on the theory that if the picture is worth the trouble of a good production it is worth extra exploitation, and he plays his theory to the marked advantage of his bank account.

So Simple It's Foolish

ANYONE can take an electric motor and get a good moving advertisement, but one exhibitor did better than that. He tied a piece of fishline to the top of the door, running it through a pulley just above the top, over the front of the lobby to another cord fastened to a light card banner. This second line runs over pulleys at either end and terminates in a pair of springs such as are used to hang bird cages from. Each time the entrance door is opened the banner gets a shaking up sufficient to keep it in motion during the entrance hours, and the sign is not heavy enough to tax the strength of the patron.

Another Orphan Outing to Boom Pollyanna

HOOKING UP with the orphans and cripples for "Pollyanna" seems to have been cleaning up all over the country, and if it is approached from the proper angle it is both valuable and inexpensive. Edward L. Hyman, of the Strand, Brooklyn, worked with a newspaper, which is the surest method of getting it over, and Lawrence Beatus, of Loew's Palace, Washington, went it alone because he figured that he could get all of the newspapers to come in with stories—and he did.

But two local auto concerns supplied the transportation in the shape of sight-seeing cars, and a local confectioner saw his chance to kick in with an apple, orange and box of candy to each child, while the War Camp Community Service kept the kiddies in order.

These outside hook-ups are valuable, not alone in that they cut down expense, but because they add to the army of pluggers for the stunt, and this last angle is the more important one.

Cut Newspaper Space for Stunts and Won

Teasers and Contest Got Week Run for "Yellow Room" in Four Day Town

TRYING to get a week run for a four day town, N. E. Bernower, of the Alhambra, Canton, Ohio, not only got his goal, but he played to big business against the worst sort of weather. To do this he used teasers, a contest and a lot of novelty ideas to make everyone know that "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" was there a week because it was worth a week.

Perhaps the best pulling stunt was a contest in which three prizes ranging from $10 to $5, and totaling $30 were offered for the best two hundred word essay on secret marriages, the announcement being made by means of a special two fives running independently of the regular house advertising and reading:

$30.000 In Cash

First Prize, $15; Second Prize, $10; Third Prize, $5.

"Are Secret Marriages Justifiable?"

Do you think that the heroine of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" was right in the course she pursued? Write your answer in less than 100 words and leave it at the Alhambra Theatre. The best answers will receive the cash prizes. Contest open to all. Closed Wednesday Night.

The story was given that all might compete, to comply with the lottery laws, but the interest drew many additional patrons to the house.

Ran Teasers, Too.

At the same time a teaser campaign was run with a hand lettered two fours reading "What the deuce is this mystery of the yellow room?" An outline question mark was in the background and in the lower left hand corner was a drawing of a lamp, the rays from which formed the background of the display. This was run for a full week without hooking into the regular displays. It carried the title and this was trusted to make the connection clear and in this form it was a better draw than with a complete tie-up. People supposed it was in connection with the showing, but it was not quite clear, and there was room for conjecture and they waited to see if it had some other ending.

Pointing the Way.

One thousand tack cards were prepared reading "To the Yellow Room." Five hundred of these carried arrows pointing to the right and the remainder had the arrows pointing in a reverse direction. They were tacked all over town, growing thicker as the vicinity of the theatre was reached. Care was taken to see that the arrows always pointed in the proper direction.

Working a stunt first tried in New York, the police were invited to attend a private showing at which the film was stopped before the end and the crime experts were asked to give their solutions of the mystery. None was able to do so, and this fact was spread broadcast.

The direct newspaper campaign was started with a half page the preceding Saturday, going to three quarters on Sunday and holding at a qaurter page for the remainder of the engagement. This was in addition to the two fours and the two fives for half of the week.

All-Comedy Anniversary Bill

CELEBRATING its tenth anniversary, the Eagle Theatre, Jeanette, Pa., used an almost all comedy bill. The first half of the week was given over to Douglas Fairbanks and Larry Semon, while the second half was topped by Chaplin with Mae Murray in "The A. B. C. of Love," the only part of the offering not strongly comedy. And the Eagle took an entire page to get across its announcement. Light offerings are best for anniversaries, and the Eagle made an excellent selection.

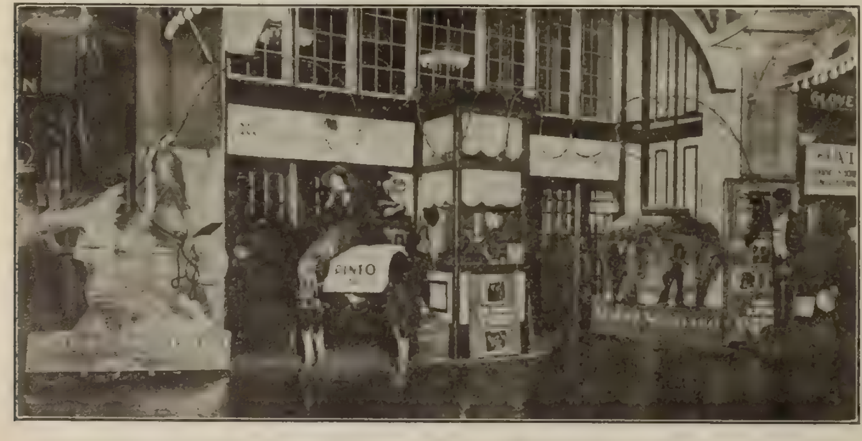
Electrical Lariat Helped Advertise Miss Normand

CUTTING down his newspaper advertising because of the epidemic of influenza, William Kotch, of the New Astor, Minneapolis, went to heralds, a novelty front and a street worker for the exploitation of "Pinto." Twenty thousand heralds were thrown out for the attraction and the streets were worked by a girl dressed in cowboy costume and riding the nearet approach to a painted pony Minneapoli afforded. For the lobby a device not unlike that used by the Columbia, Dayton, for "On With the Dance," was tried only in this case it was an electrically lighted lariat which flashed across the space above the lobby from a cut out of Miss Normand on one side to a cut out of her victim on the other. The lariat was twisted to form the letters of "Pinto" and was flashed on and off, giving the effect of the thrown rope. In spite of the fact that a large portion of the regular clientele did not turn out the turning of the appeal to the transients kept the business up to the mark in an unusually poor week for most houses.



Mabel Normand Roped Them In.

With an electrical lariat and a street worker, not to mention several thousand heralds, Minneapolis got them during the Flu scarce. It's another New Aster stunt.

Try to Get Lieut. Locklear for "Great Air Robbery"

THIS publicity stunt will not be possible to many managers, but when Guy Smith, of the Strand, San Francisco, played the Universal Jewel, "The Great Air Robbery" with Lieut. Locklear, he took advantage of the aviator's presence in San Francisco to arrange for a personal appearance and he dressed up his house like a Christmas tree.

The Strand, San Francisco, as it looks at Night.

Locklear made a semi-appeal for air recruits in his talk instead of the usual "studio stuff" and based this on the safety of the air with the modern aircraft. Few managers will be able to time their engagements to coincide with his schedule, but almost every town can boast an airman or at least a returned soldier who can talk about the air service, and if you cannot get Locklear you can at least do the best you can. Near recruiting stations you can probably get some help from that office—and you do not have to be too close, at that. It's worth trying, in any event.

Frohman Booklet is Both Attractive and Permanent

FROM the Frohman Amusement Corporation comes one of the most attractive publicity booklets ever issued for general distribution to patrons. The sixteen pages contain fourteen full page cuts of stars and authors under the Frohman banner and the work has been exceptionally well done; so well done, indeed that few of them will be thrown away. The books are intended for theatres to distribute to their patrons and are elaborate enough to qualify as real souvenirs, for they will be prized by their possessors and there is no intrusive house advertising to spoil the effect, though each page carries a pertinent paragraph about the star or author pictured which has a distinct advertising value.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Vocational Training for Projectionists

FROM a projectionist correspondent comes this letter:

Mr. Richardson: I as well as other members of our profession are in sore need of advice. We are confronted with what we consider a very real difficulty.

I presume you know that the government has included motion picture projection in the program of vocational training or schooling for soldiers. There can be no question but that many soldiers will avail themselves of what they believe to be the opportunity to become projectionists, not realizing that the instruction offered in these schools is not in any way adequate to encompass that end.

I find that here in camp the men have been told by the school officers that they can learn the basic principles of projection in three months, which may, in a way be true, but that will by no means make of them competent projectionists.

And right there lies the rub. That they will leave the school believing themselves competent to, or at least expecting to enter directly into the projection field as full fledged projectionists is, I think, beyond question, and we believe the encouragement of men in such a belief to be entirely wrong.

To Make Matters Worse.

And to make matters even worse, I find that in this school men who expect to "graduate" in three months are actually attending only two or three sessions of the school per week.

The evil of this procedure is operative in several directions. The foisting of incompetent men on the industry will only add to the already too great abuse of film and projection apparatus, to say nothing of the injurious effect upon screen results. The pushing of incompetent men into a profession already suffering from lack of men of high class competency and overcrowded with the other kind will lead to trouble, in that many short-sighted exhibitors will be ready to use them in emergency to defeat the just demands of projectionists for better conditions.

This is so because we still have with us the "exhibitor" (?) who holds that ability in the projection room need not extend beyond the making of a splice, striking of an arc and threading of a projector.

What would you advise a local union in a city where one of these schools is located to do? What attitude should we take with regard to permitting our members to instruct these men?

This is not intended for publication. Your reply will be considered by the union as coming from a recognized authority and will go far toward governing the action of the local.

Matter Is Important.

This matter is too important to be answered privately, so I have used the letter, concealing even the section from whence it eminates.

First and foremost, I have reason to believe—in fact, to know that you have not yourselves pursued a course very well calculated to impress the exhibitors of your city with your high importance in the scheme of affairs. With some exceptions the men of your city are still regarded merely as operators of machines, and not as projectionists who bring to their profession that high degree of skill and professional ability which demands and receives respect and ample remuneration.

But in this matter you are, nevertheless, entirely in the right. The methods pursued by the government in all the schools of which we have knowledge in which projection is taught are wrong. They pursue methods which result exactly in what you have set forth, and we hold such procedure to constitute a crime against common sense, against the moving picture industry and against the men themselves.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents . United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you ofe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Should Be Fully Fitted.

Wtih the vocational schools for disabled soldiers we have every sympathy, but they should be conducted in such way that the men will be finally fully fitted for the vocation they select, and that, too, before they are dropped by the government.

The Vancouver, British Columbia, men, Local Union 348, worked out the eminently right plan, but it was worked out because the British Columbia officials were ready and willing to take advice from men who knew the profession of projection—willing to cooperate and work with the union, instead of butting ahead regardless of ultimate consequences of evil to all concerned, including the men to be helped.

As nearly as I am able to recall, the plan was as follows: First, the vocational school for projectionists was in the form of a course in one of the provincial colleges. It covered six months minimum—longer if the student was unable to pass examination at the end of that time.

At the end of his college course the student was apprenticed under one of the Vancouver or Victoria (I am not sure about the Victoria end of it) union men for a further period of six months, at the end of which time he was expected to be able to take an examination and secure license as a first class projectionist—a thing only possible through a year of intensive training. This plan was applied to disabled men only.

If the government proposes to foist upon the profession and upon the motion picture industry a lot of incompetents who are able bodied men, then the plan becomes a cold-blooded outrage. For the disabled man we are glad to do every possible service, but we fail to see wherein a soldier who loses his job is entitled to have himself forced into an industry unless he is first given the training and experience necessary to make him thoroughly competent.

Expenses Were Paid.

I might add that the British Columbia government paid all expenses, living and otherwise, of the men until they finally graduated as first class projectionists, and I don't believe that the people of sparsely settled Canada are any better able to do this than are we of these United States.

The plan of our own government looks to me like a "get 'em off our hands" one—a plan to shirk the expense and trouble of making the discharged soldier really competent to enter the field it proposes to place him in.

That the profession is already filled with men who are less than half-way learned is no excuse. We have been fighting the tremendous damage they have done for many years. We cannot afford to have a new crop foisted upon us by society at large.

As to Licenses

The editor of this department has had several conferences with the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity with regard to securing a really competent examination for projectionists in New York City.

He has found the commissioner himself to apparently be inclined to listen to reason, but there has been what amounted at an almost stone wall opposition from his advisers. Mr. Wynkoop, for one, seems very much opposed to any change of any sort, though he did finally agree to recommend to the Commissioner certain minor changes.

But there is need of a regular upheaval in New York examinations. We are compelled to make the bald statement that the examination is nothing less than a farce, insofar as it serves to ascertain the competency of the applicant.

Do Not Blame Board.

We do not blame the examining board for this deplorable state of affairs. It is probably doing all that it is allowed to do. The charge has been repeatedly made to this department that licenses are issued at the behest of politicians after a purely farcical examination.

Of this we have more than amply satisfied ourselves, viz.: that men are given licenses who have no real ability as projectionists and we are quite willing to back up this statement with ample proof.

We here and now challenge the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity to let us select names at random from the list of men the examining board has passed within the last thirty days and examine them before a committee composed of the Mayor, Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, the President of the American Projection Society, the President of the International Projection Society, a representative of the film exchanges and Hugo Reisenfield as representing the exhibitor.

If we do not prove to the satisfaction of the aforenamed committee that at least four out of six of the men so examined are thoroughly incompetent to hold license as projectionists, we will undertake to forfeit one thousand dollars to the Red Cross, if the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity will agree to do the same if he loses the decision.

Tampa Has Improved

Manuel Nosti, projectionist, Tampa, Florida, says in regard to the handbook and Tampa projection:

> Received the handbok and lens chart and, believe me, I am glad to get them. Am as proud as a father of his first boy.
>
> The lens chart certainly is an immense help to the projectionist. I am only wishing you might take another trip down here. You would notice a great difference.
>
> The men here now put on what can be called perfect projection, at least in most of the theatres. We are receiving eighty cents per hour straight time, with time and a half for overtime.

I am sure the Tampa men will make good. They seemed to me to be enterprising, and of the right sort ,though, of course, there was plenty of room for improvement, just as there is, and always will be, everywhere.

My compliments to the men of Tampa.

High Amperage Lens Chart

Again has John Griffiths delivered the goods, this time in the form of a lens chart for high amperage.

It will be observed that this chart, unlike the others, is based upon size of crater as determined by actual measurement.

Taking, for example, a 6.5 and a 9.5 lens combination, we find that with a crater measuring 7/16 of an inch across a spot 1.75 inches in diameter will be had when the condenser center is 19.25 inches from the aperture, whereas if the crater measure ⅝, the center of the condenser would have to be 14⅝ inches from the aperture in order to get a 1.75 inch spot.

Now Suppose.

Now suppose we have a crater measuring ⅝ of an inch across and an objective working at six inches working distance, what would be the logical thing to do? Why just this: Lay off on a drawing board an aperture opening precisely the size of the width of your projector aperture.

At a point six inches away make two marks representing the exact diameter of your objective working diameter, then, using a perfectly true straight edge, draw two lines, one from one edge of the diameter of the lens, at the six-inch mark, to just touch the opposite edge of the aperture and the other from the other edge of the lens at six-inch distance to just touch the other edge of the aperture. Extend these lines out beyond the aperture opening marks a couple of feet.

Measure Condenser Opening.

Next measure the actual condenser opening and mark the point where the spread of the lines just equals the condenser opening, as at A in the sketch. We shall probably find that the point occurs at about 24 inches from the aperture. We then examine the chart and find that we cannot have a ⅝ crater make a 1.75 inch spot at 18 inches, and that a 6.5 and a 17.5 condenser combination, spaced not to exceed 1/16 of an inch apart is the best we can do, unless we increase our objective diameter. We ask reports on results from those who try this out, which should be from every man using high amperage.

It will, of course, be understood that by no possible lens combination can we entirely eliminate waste between aperture and objective where very high amperage is used, but we may, nevertheless, materially reduce it by the use of this chart, always assuming it to work out in practice, as all Griffiths' stunts have done up to date. If any of you are puzzled as to any point in the application of the chart we will be glad to explain.

International Projection Association

The International Projection Association, New York City, is in most excellent condition. Its late election of officers resulted as follows: President, A. Polin; vice-president, R. E. Weiss; treasurer, W. Guth; secretary, P. Finneli.

The new officers announce their intention to continue the social and educational policies of the association. On February 21 a house party was indulged in which, according to all accounts, was one huge success.

Will C. Smith recently lectured before the association, his subject the Power projector mechanism.

Other equally interesting lectures will be scheduled for the near future. Any licensed projectionist is welcome to attend lectures, which are educational in character.

Focal Length of Objective

James Scobie, Colquet, Minnesota, orders a handbook and inquires:

> Our distance of projection is ninety-two feet, with a sixteen-foot picture. What size lens is required?
>
> Have two Simplex projectors, with only one compensarc. Which is the best way to connect up? Will anxiously await arrival of handbook; also your advice on abve.

As to lens size, all the required information is set forth fully on page 105 (last paragraph) and page 106 of your new handbook. It would therefore be useless to set it forth here.

I would advise you to make the connection as per figure 100 of your handbook, which will allow you to operate one arc on the compensarc and at the same time burn crater in new carbon on the other lamp through rheostat.

You could connect as per figure 165, page 354, and then simply connect from the two wires leading to the lamp shown to the machine table switch of the other projector.

You could connect to the wires at any convenient point between the compensarc and projector table switch.

Multiple Connection.

Its disadvantage is that you cannot burn both lamps at one time. The instant you strike one arc the other goes out, hence you cannot burn in craters, or get the idle lamp crater up to normal brilliancy before starting the projector.

I would also, while I am at it, advise you to arrange your projection circuit fuses as per figure 102, so that the blowing of a fuse will not cause a shutdown while a new one is installed.

It Does Not Pay

R. P. Smith, projectionist, Jacksonville, Florida, orders lens charts and says:

I agree with Brother Stringer's correction of method employed by Brother Jardin in the solving of the shutter problem, but think his correction might be greatly simplified; also the trigonometry or geometry. Will write of that, explaining my views, later

My picture overlaps on the screen border several inches, but my employer refuses to get either new lenses of proper focal length, or to get a barrel of different length so that I can alter the distance between lens factors, and thus secure the desired focal length to give proper size picture—a thing I know you are opposed to.

The rings in which the different factors are held do not fit snugly in the jacket, hence will not remain in place when unscrewed in the middle and pulled apart.

Can you suggest some way by which I could pull them apart and have them remain in place.

Do you not think that if I could get a sleeve long enough to separate the rings the desired distance, and which will fit the jacket snugly, I could get the desired results?

I Don't Know.

I don't know, friend Smith, but even though you might make it work, after a fashion, it would be a very, very poor makeshift.

Does your employer quite understand the damage he is doing his own box office receipts by refusing to purchase new lenses?

May we suggest to him that in process of saving the price of a lens he may easily lose the price of ten lenses.

The public buys tickets to his theatre for what? To see what is on his screen. And the more satisfactory the result on the screen the more tickets will be sold.

Is is not so, Mr. Employer?

You neither could nor would undertake to dispute the absolute truth of that proposition, would you? All right, then, let us go a step further. I don't know the seating capacity of your theatre, or how many shows you give a day.

Let us assume 500 seating capacity and four shows. That means 500 x 4 = 2,000 seats you have for sale every day.

Do you sell them all? If you do you certainly are a stem winding wonder. The very best theatres in the country don't do that.

Suppose.

Suppose by getting two new lenses at the cost of $50.00, thus bringing your picture all on the screen and adding to its beauty, while at the same time obtaining a more brilliant screen with the same current, that you sell ten more of those seats per day at ten cents per seat. IN JUST FIFTY DAYS THE LENSES HAVE PAID FOR THEMSELVES, and thereafter you have thirty dollars a month additional revenue—enough to pay your garage bill or buy gasoline and oil.

Pretty good investment, is it not? Do you honestly think it is good business, Mr. Employer, to pay good money for film service and then use a couple of lenses which immediately detract from its box office value by at least ten per cent? Do you?

Remember, YOUR entire income is dependent on what comes through the lens. That is absolutely true, as you, I and every one else knows, and being true, it follows that a lens which does not give the best possible result is a mighty poor thing to use. Think it over, friend employer. A portion of your income depends upon it.

The Angle of Total Reflection

James L. Anderson, San Francisco, California, says:

I have had an argument with a projectionist who claims that what is known as the "angle of total reflection" has no bearing on projection work.

From what he said I suspect he does not really know what the angle of total reflection is. Will you be good enough to explain it, and to decide if it has any bearing on projection.

The angle of total reflecion is the angle at which a polished glass surface acts as a mirror and reflects a high percentage of the light, although the reflection is never complete except in cases where the rays pass from a more to a less dense medium.

In such case if the angle be greater than forty degrees and forty-three minutes, there is total reflection. It, therefore, follows that total reflection cannot be had at the rear surface of the arc condenser, though it might be had at the front, curved, surface when the light attempts to leave the denser medium (glass) and enter the lighter one (air).

Whether your friend knew or did not know, he is right in that the only place total reflection could occur would be at the rear surface of the condenser, and in practice the arc is never brought close enough to the condenser lens of standard diameter to bring the angle of total reflection into operation.

It Does Not Follow.

But it does not follow that the distance of the crater from the condenser has no bearing on loss through reflection, because the closer the crater is to the lens surface the greater will be the angle at which the light rays will meet its outer diameter, hence the more reflection there will be. However I believe it may be said that the item of light loss through rflection is one beyond the control of the projectionist, except that a dirty lens surface reflects more light than a clean one, hence he can keep reflection losses at their lowest possible values by keeping the lenses scrupulously clean.

Flicker

Recently the power company changed our current from 110 volt 60 cycle to 110 volt 25 cycle. We have installed a mercury arc rectifier, with the result that Mr. Flicker is right on the job, doubtless due to low frequency of current supply.

We use a Power's Six-A; plano-convex condensers, one 6.5 and one 7.5, spaced 5/16 of an inch apart. Objective is a 6.5 Bausch and Lomb. Projection distance 85 feet.

Have tried shutters of different designs and the only one that works good has four blades, two four and a half and two two and a quarter inches wide.

Waste Light.

But this shutter wastes a lot of light and picture is not as bright as it should be, although we use 70 amperes at arc, as indicated by ammeter.

Have .5 inch solid lower and 5/8 cored above. Rectifier seems to work all right and arc burns steady at all times.

Can you advise us as to how we can get more screen illumination and less flicker?

Motor Generator the Answer.

Not knowing whether you measured the shutter blades at center of light ray or at periphery, I cannot say what percentage of light is being cut, though it probably is heavy.

As to flicker, it is undoubtedly due to current frequency. A mercury arc rectifier is not suited to projection work where current frequency is very low.

A motor generator is the only right answer, and either of the two companies making mercury arc rectifiers also make excellent good motor generator sets. Get the series type if you do make a change.

If mercury arc rectifier men object to our opinion as above set forth, we will give them all the space required, within reason, to prove us wrong—if they can. Aren't you overloading your rectifier tube? What is its capacity?

Interesting Paper

F. T. Braun will read what should prove to be a most interesting paper on "Design of Theatres from the Standpoint of Safety to the Audience" at the Montreal meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in May.

This paper is induced by the fact that there is lack of proper building ordinances in the smaller cities and towns of the country. "In theatre construction," says Mr. Braun, "there are many things which should be standardized, and theatres without stage should follow the same safeguarding details for the rest of the building as is deemed necessary for those having a stage."

Equipment will be dealt with in detail in this paper and ordinances of ten of the largest cities in the country will be reviewed in their provisions governing theatres.

In discussing safeguarding of the audience from fire panic the following items will be considered:

Type of construction, entrance lobby, foyers, stairways, seats, aisles, exits, passages, projection room, stage design, curtain, ventilation automatic sprinklers, equipment outside the building and buildings in connection with the theatre.

This should be a most valuable paper, as well as one replete with interest. The editor of this department will be right on the job when the projection room end of it is read.

TULLY MARSHALL, who is now at the Goldwyn studio playing in support of Mabel Normand in "The Slim Princess," offers to stake his record for playing varied parts against that of any living actor. Probably he could be persuaded to enlarge the limit and include dead actors as well. He has played blackface and he has played Hamlet—and he has played every conceivable kind of a part between those extremes. He hastens to add that he has not played masculine characters only. He has played old women—negro, Irish and New England.

Paul Bern has been promoted to the rank of co-director of the Goldwyn organization. He had been associate director with Hugo Ballin on the Madge Kennedy picture, "Trimmed with Red," and he is now in Port Henry, N. Y., as co-director with Carl Harbaugh on the Rex Beach picture, "The North Wind's Malice."

In the general record-smashing on New York's Broadway on Washington's Birthday, the Rialto Theatre washed out all its previous marks with 10,060 paid admissions and the Rivoli did likewise with 9,840 who paid to see "Huckleberry Finn."

E. J. Ratcliffe offers a prize to the editor who will see to it that his name is properly spelled. Usually it comes out from the line-o'-type with a "d" where the "t" should be. For years, Mr. Ratcliffe says, he has been pursing his name, as it appears on the printed page, but that "d" is an obstinate letter.

Viola Dana says that hereafter nocturnal husbands, in coming home late with the excuse of a lodge meeting, will have to specify—in view of the recent spiritualistic movement sweeping through the country. For instance, the Metro start remarks, the conversation will go something like this:

"I've been to the lodge meeting, dear."

Whereupon the irate wife will say:

"What kind of lodge meeting: Masonic or Sir Oliver?"

Mary MacLaren's latest Universal will be "The Forged Bride," in which she will be supported by a cast headed by Thomas Jefferson. She will undertake at once the production of "The Road to Divorce."

Frank Mayo is starring in "The Girl in Number Thirty-nine," a photoplay Universal has based on Elizabeth Jordan's popular novel, "The Girl in the Mirror." Claire Anderson and Elinore Faire are his leading women.

Wheeler Oakman and Wallace Berry are cast in prominent roles supporting Priscilla Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul." Tod Browning directed the presentation for Universal.

Christian Scientists will be especially interested in the revival of "Jewel," a photoplay of great popularity when Universal presented it some years ago. Edith Roberts will be star of a new presentation of this adaptation from Clara Louise Burnham's book of the same title.

"Apartment for rent to share woman with improvements," was the way the classified advertisement in a Los Angeles paper read. June Mathis, head of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario department in Hollywood, came across the item, unpuntuated as quoted, in the course of her perusal of the paper.

"It's all very clear," said Miss Mathis, "except one point: what is a woman with improvements?"

Earle Williams is finishing "Captain Swift," his next Vitagraph feature, under the direction of Chester Bennett. The scenes are being made in the Mojave Desert and near San Diego.

Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock have started a new Vitagraph comedy in which both wind up in a hospital, and if they go through with the script as planned they will. Patsy DeForrest again appears with them as leading woman.

Clara Horton, who is appearing in Selznick productions, is now in her tenth year in pictures, although she is not yet sixteen years of age.

R. N. Bradbury made the adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's book, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," which is being made into pictures under the direction of David Smith. Pauline Starke and Niles Welch have the leading roles.

Little Miss Dutch Do-Funny.

Jane Thomas, who arrived in New York from the Tree studios in Chicago a little more than a month ago, has been selected to play the leading woman in Rex Beach's next picture, "The North Wind's Malice." The exteriors for this Alaskan story will be taken at Port Henry, N. Y. Miss Thomas has been acting in pictures for five years in the Chicago studios.

Hoot Gibson, the Richard Mansfield of cowboy actors, is working on a production for Universal to be titled "The Rattler's Kiss," a tale of the sagebrush, villainy and wild western love affairs.

Julian Eltinge, famous stage impersonator of females, comes back to the screen—from whence he once declared he had finally departed—to have circulation as the "heroine" of a photoplay to be titled "The Adventuress." Eltinge, of course, plays both male and female roles during the unreeling of the film tale.

"A Dream of Fair Women" is expected to live up to its screen title in the personalities of its leading players. Out of 75,000 entrants in a nation-wide competition conducted by "fan" magazines five of the prettiest girls were selected to portray the leading roles in the photoplay.

Charles Ray will produce "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" as his first "personally conducted" screen presentation. This George M. Cohan musical piece had Victor Moore playing the role of Kid Burns in the stage production, a part well suited to Ray for screen presentation.

June Caprice will be presented by Pathe in an Albert Capellani production of Oliver D. Bailey's story, "In Walked Mary." George Archinbaud directed this story of "the land of cotton."

Newspaper men will know better than the general public what is meant by the title "Deadline at Eleven" used for Corinne Griffith's latest Vitagraph story. But the plot will be generally appealing and that makes it all right for everybody, regardless of the deadline.

Vivian Martin is to be queen of her own organization and Edward Bowes, director of the Capitol Theatre, New York, is to be her manager. Thomas F. Walker, film editor of the Capitol Theatre, is included in the directorate. All the girls and boys of the screen are stepping out to become their own bosses.

In the case of screen presentations by Olive Tell "Love Without Question" led to "Nothing a Year," photoplays by those titles being presented by Miss Tell in sequence.

Two ways to end "The Right of Way" have been prepared and the public will decide. The logical ending is by no means a happy one, but the public demand for "happy endings" may see "The Right of Way" end the wrong way—according to the original.

Louise Glaum has prepared a problem drama for the screen. "Sex" is the title and it will soon be in general circulation on the world's screen. "Sahara" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" are other recent Louise Glaum pictures.

George McManus will in person supervise for Pathe the screen presentation of his cartoon series, "Bringing Up Father." This will be done under the title of "Mr. and Mrs. Jiggs," introducing his famous characters.

William Farnum has just been presented by William Fox in a romantic drama entitled "The Adventurer," screened from E. Lloyd Sheldon's story. It is classed as a "historical drama without the history."

Finances, as may be judged from the title, figure largely in J. Warren Kerigan's newest photoplay, "$30,000." Nancy Chase, an English stage beauty, makes her first appearance on the screen in this picture.

"Burnt Wings," a screen adaptation of "The Primrose Path," will soon be circulated on the world's screens by Universal. Frank Mayo will star.

Anita Booth, who won the Motion Picture Magazine Beauty Competitions, has been added to the cast of the Selznick special production, "The Prince of Pines."

The scenario of "The Great Shadow," soon to be released by Republic, is the work of Rudolph Berliner, of the Ritz Carlton Hotel, Montreal. The story portrays the effects of a great strike called through the insidious propaganda of Bolshevik agents in this country.

"Harvest Moon" Featuring Doris Kenyon Is Ready; Based on Thomas' Stage Success

THE cutting and editing of Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," the second Deitrich-Beck production starring Doris Kenyon for W. W. Hodkinson distribution was completed this week by Theodore C. Deitrich and Director J. Searle Dawley at the Leah Baird Studios, Cliffside, N. J. "The Harvest Moon" in its screen version bids fair to equal the success achieved by the stage play, which ran for a year on Broadway in the days when a six-month engagement of a production was considered a big achievement.

The new Hodkinson release is another chain in the year's link of successes credited to Doris Kenyon. Her world of picture admirers acclaimed her in her first Deitrich-Beck production, "The Bandbox," which aided by the publicity given the artiste because of her brilliant performance as the stellar player in A. H. Woods' big stage success, "The Girl in the Limousine," is still proving a most profitable picture.

Prominent Players in Cast.

The cast supporting Miss Kenyon in "The Harvest Moon" comprises several of the best-known players in filmdom. As her leading man Miss Kenyon has Wilfred Lytell.

An important role is in the hands of Earl Schenck, former leading man, but now one of the best-known of screen character actors. Peter Lang, formerly a big vaudeville favorite, has a role commensurate with his ability. Another important role is entrusted to Grace Barton, for years a popular musical comedy favorite.

Marie Shotwell, remembered as one of the most popular and talented members of Charles Frohman's famous stock company and one of the leading players in the original production, "Mme. Sans Gene," is Mrs. Winthrop, a role worthy of her talents in "The Harvest Moon." Stuart Robson, son of the popular actor of that name, and for years prominently identified with worth while cinema productions, has a role of big opportunities. George Lessey and Frederick Radcliffe, well-known character artists, complete the roster.

Legion Post Handling "Everybody's Business."

The American Legion, headed by the Chas. A. Learned Post No. 1, of Detroit, is giving publicity to the five-reel feature, "Everybody's Business," now being released by W. H. Productions Co.

This post, which controls the rights for Michigan, find a great popular interest in the picture. Now, when Americanization movements are in progress, this production is said to be focussing attention in every section where it is shown.

Orphans See "Pollyanna."

The Hulsey-Lynch interests entertained the orphans from the different homes in Dallas at the Old Mill to see Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna." Several of the large automobile concerns took upon themselves the job of conveying these kiddies at different times throughout the day to the theatre.

DISTRIBUTION

Crest Announces Its First Six Reeler, "Children Not Wanted," Ready for Release

As the first of his 1920 offerings Carle E. Carlton, president of the Crest Pictures Corporation, announces the most ambitious, special super-production he has thus made. It is a six reeler entitled "Children Not Wanted" adapted from a short story by Stuart Sinclair and directed by Paul Scardon under the personal supervision of Mr. Carlton.

There are many reasons why the production should have an unusual box office value. In the first place, the story, as the title suggests, deals with the most vital subject of humanity and digs at the very roots of modern society. It is a problem to be faced alike by the intellectualist, the sociologist and the shop girl. In addition to the humane qualities there is interwoven in the action a mysterious murder plot which further enhances the sustained interest. Second of importance only to the story itself is the appearance of Edith Day, the star of one of the season's most successful musical comedies "Irene," now in its six month of its Broadway run at the Vanderbilt Theatre.

Miss Edith Day signed an exclusive agreement with the Victor Talking Machine Company to make records of "Irene" and "Alice Blue Gown" for world distribution. A Victor press campaign will begin in March, reaching every city and town where records are sold. A great colored three foot cutout and a number of new advertising novelties will be distributed.

Arrow to Widely Exploit Series of "Tex" Features

Although the Arrow Film Corporation has been advertising its new series of "Tex" pictures less than ten days, about fifty per cent. of the territory has been signed up. Arrow announces that more advertising will be done on these twelve five-reel features than they have ever used to exploit a series. After the first release set for March 15, they will continue to advertise each release during the next twelve months.

The Tex pictures are by well-known authors and deal with detective stories based on circumstantial evidence.

Arthur G. White, formerly New York exchange manager for Paramount Artcraft, has bought these pictures for the New York and Northern New Jersey territory for his exchange, The Modern Feature Photoplays. Mr. White expressed himself as follows:

"I believe the Tex pictures are in a class by themselves when it comes to money-making possibilities for the independent exchanges. The idea of being able to buy a series of twelve five-reel pictures at one time, with the assurance of having these features delivered once a month for the next year, is an excellent one and should prove attractive to all independent exchanges. In contracting for twelve five-reel features at one time, I feel that I have saved myself a lot of worry and time. I believe the Arrow Film Corporation should be congratulated for securing this series of features for the independent exchanges."

It is expected that the entire territory will be sold by the date of the first release, which is March 15.

The Christie studio was the first one visited by young Bushman. Five years ago it was occupied by the elder Bushman's company. Kremer Plans Elaborate Campaign for Film-Revue

For the combination stage and screen attraction, the Carmen Beauties Revue with the Charlie Chaplin film, "A Burlesque on Carmen," a special exploitation department under the direction of Bert Ennis has been created.

Trade Showing of First Jans Feature at Strand, Release Set for March 13

HERMAN F. JANS, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., announces arrangements have been made for a trade showing of "Love Without Question" at the Strand Theatre, New York, in the near future. State rights buyers, exchangemen and exhibitors, as well as members of the press, will be invited.

Mr. Jans has also arranged for a symphony orchestra and special music. The producers place so much confidence in "Love Without Question" that it is their desire to witness it before its actual release to the public.

March 13 has been set as the release date for this production from Jans Pictures, Inc., produced by B. A. Rolfe and starring Olive Tell, adapted from the novel, "The Abandoned Room," by C. Wadsworth Camp.

In the estimation of the producers March 13 will see the advent of an exceptional State Right attraction for the exhibitors. A lot of territory has been sold throughout the United States, and announcement of the buyers will be made at a later date.

The producers announce that owing to the publicity this feature will gain from the syndication of the book to appear serially in daily newspapers in the large cities of the United States and Canada, showmen will be favored with an amount of advance advertising that spells success.

"Love Without Question" is a story with an absorbing mystery. According to B. A. Rolfe the mystery element has been well maintained. But for all it's mystic surprise, the love interest has not been sacrificed.

Grossman Cast in Florida Working on Second Feature

"Face to Face," the first picture of the series, was recently completed and announcement of distribution arrangements will probably be made in a few days. It is said to immediately set a high standard for the Grossman productions. Marguerite Marsh, is the star.

The Grossman company will produce the series of eight features at the rate of one picture every six weeks. Stories for three more of the pictures have been accepted and prepared for production by the scenario department of the company.

New York's Capitol Theatre Books "Hank Mann" Comedies

THE two-reel Hank Mann Comedies, being distributed by Arrow Film Corporation, have "broken into Broadway." The Capitol Theatre has signed the show the entire series. "The Bashful Blacksmith" is being shown during this week.

Another first run theatre which has contracted for this brand of comedies, is the Park Theatre, Boston, which booked these subjects for two weeks run, and reports big attendance despite inclement weather.

"It is a dozen times harder to make a hit as a comedian than in any other line of work in the business" says W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, "but when once an audience has taken a funny man to their hearts they are very loyal. A man must be born a comedian. Hank Mann has established himself with the public, and the Capitol Theatre recognized this. Visitors from all over the United States will be able to see their favorite comedian, and it will be like meeting an old friend from home.

"The management of the Park Theatre believes that the comedy is the thing today. People want to laugh and forget the high cost of living, politics, epidemics, etc.

"The addition of the Capitol and the Park, completes a long roster of prominent theatres that are now showing these two reel comedies, including the Stanley Circuit in Pennsylvania, Reuben and Finkelstein in the northern central states, and the Saenger Amusement Company in the South.

Christie Comedies Praised by W. S. Naval Lieutenant

WE always booked all the Christie Comedies we could because they were clean; we knew there would never be anything offensive in them."

This commendation was given by Lieut. M. J. Hageman, U. S. N. R. F., lately detached from duty aboard the George Washington which took President Wilson and advisors to and from France and also brought King Albert of Belgium to the United States.

Lieutenant Hageman, previous to entering the navy, was employed in motion picture production. He visited the Christie studio soon after his return from active service and it was here that he paid tribute to this brand of comedies. "We had to be careful so that nothing shown would prove offensive to our distinguished passengers" he continued, "and we frequently had to run films and cut them before showing them, but it was never necessary to censor a Christie Comedy."

"I Always Featured Christie Comedies." Line from Lt. M. J. Hageman, who had charge of motion picture entertainment on board George Washington. Seen here with Al Christie. Everybody else write.

Fine Cast Selected for Jan's "Nothing a Year"

A STRONG cast has been announced for "Nothing A Year" the second production for Jans Pictures, Inc., and starring Olive Tell. Adapted from the novel of the same name by Charles Belmont Davis.

Edmund Lowe, leading man for Lenore Ulric in "The Son Daughter," a successful Broadway play has been engaged by B. A. Rolfe to play opposite Miss Tell. Other members of the cast are Lucille Lee Stewart, Donald Hall, Warner Richmond, Stanley Walpole and Annette Bade.

Lucille Lee Stewart has been in motion pictures for a number of years and needs little introduction. She will be seen in a very important role. Donald Hall is also no newcomer to the realm of the photoplay. He will likewise present a characterization that is said to reach a high standard of artistry.

Not being satisfied with just a story with a far reaching appeal, Mr. Rolfe, who has been well known as a producer for years, realized that the selection of a cast was a most important factor, and he considers that the above named artists are such as to bring out the real dramatic worth of the second feature production under the Jans trade mark.

"Down on the Farm" Films Clever Trained Animals

MACK SENNETT'S latest comedy feature "Down on the Farm" is announced as having been made in response to a demand for comedy, possibly not so fast in action, but more pleasing in its realism and environment. It deals with rural life and contains a varied assortment of trained animals, including a mouse, dogs, cats, chickens, turkeys, geese, cows, pigs, etc.

The principal role, that of the farmer's daughter, has been entrusted to Louise Fazenda, while the cast includes such funmakers as Marie Prevost, Ned Finlayson, Bert Roach, Harry Gribbin and others, including John Henry, Jr., a two and a half year old player who is said to do very appealing work with "Teddy" and the other animals.

Leading the animal cast is Teddy, the famous Dane dog, and there is also Pepper, the clever cat, both of which are familiar to lovers of Sennett comedies. The various other animals are also said to play their roles like born actors.

Moranti Leases Half of Balboa Studio.

Moranti Comedies, Inc., of which Milburn Moranti is star and head, have leased one-half of the Balboa studios at Long Beach, Cal., where a series of twelve two-reel "situation" comedies will be made by the company. Helen Williams has the leading feminine role, while Joe Bonner and Albert Huston are playing character parts in support. Al Moranti, brother of the star, is directing. Clark Bond, formerly cameraman for the Hampton Productions, has been engaged by Dick Currier, business manager, to operate the camera.

"A Dream of Fair Women" to Be Distributed by Garsson

THE announcement that Murray W. Garsson is to distribute "A Dream of Fair Women," the fame and fortune contest picture, is arousing much interest throughout the country. The contest was conducted by the Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Picture Classic, and Shadowland, and covered a period of one year.

There were 75,000 photographs received, coming from every city, town and hamlet throughout the country and it was no little task for the judges to select from this total twenty-five of the most beautiful; and in turn were brought to New York to be interviewed and screened; to ascertain their talents, abilities and value.

After the usual tests, five of the contestants were selected for their beauty, ability and talent, and since then these five have been "grabbed" up by various motion picture producing organizations to become future picture stars.

"A Dream of Fair Women" will be one of the most widely exploited pictures of the year, not only in the trade papers and individual sources, but through the various fan magazines which conducted the contest.

Every means of co-operation of putting over the picture will be given to the exhibitor, and the interest aroused from coast to coast during the fame and fortune contest will surely make the picture a big box office attraction.

The exhibitors and state right buyers can realize the big box office value this picture has. As far as exploiting the picture is concerned we are going ahead just as if no one else was rendering any assistance, says Mr. Garsson.

Six Ben Turpin Comedies Now Being State-Righted

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the Cameo Film Company has secured six comedies featuring the famous star of Mack Sennett comedies, Ben Turpin, which it will offer to state rights buyers throughout the United States and Canada. The six comedies are "The Harem," "A Cheerful Liar" and "He Looked Crooked," two reelers, and "The Leading Man," "The Landlubber" and "The Plumber," single reelers.

The comedies are of the knock-out, slapstick type and are typical of the work which has earned for this eccentric comedian such popularity among fans and exhibitors throughout America.

The six comedies offered to state rights buyers in the United States and Canada are now ready at the offices of the Cameo Film Company, 64 West Randolph street, Chicago.

"The Confession" Continues to Establish New Records

JOE BRANDT, eastern representative of the National Film Corporation, continues to receive enthusiastic reports of the showing of "The Confession." William Shirley, of the Palace Theatre, Schenectady, wires as follows: "Played 'Confession' to the largest week in the history of house. This is a wonderful picture and should do the same for every exhibitor."

Just previous to this, Mr. Brandt received the following from Charles L. Dooley of the Garden Theatre, Paterson, N. J.: "We have just finished a record-breaking week with 'The Confession.' I consider it one of the strongest plays we have ever presented. The city, irrespective of race or religion was enthusiastic over the picture. In spite of rainy weather we held them out to the sidewalk every night this week."

Richard C. Travers Signed as Star of "Determination"

The United States Photoplay Corporation has been advertising for some time, offering $1,000 award, and received over 300 applications for this part. Mr. Travers was selected, in the main on account of his past experience as a motion picture actor, being an all-round athlete and qualifying to all conditions and specifically by Captain F. F. Stoll, the author, because of being one of the first motion picture stars to volunteer for foreign service in the World War, where he served with honor for thirty-two months and was commissioned a captain. The award was paid him at the Occidental Hotel in Washington, D. C., in the presence of Senators, Congressmen, officers, and other prominent people.

Mr. Travers will take a special course of training for the sporting events, which include a horse race, an auto race, an aviation meet and a boxing contest.

Pauline in "Mystery Mind" Makes Debut As an Actor

ARTHUR B. REEVE and John W. Grey, authors and producers of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., new psychic serial "The Mystery Mind" state that when they engaged J. Robert Pauline for the star role, they were gambling on his personal fitness for the kind of role rather than his ability as an actor.

While Mr. Pauline had long experience on the lecture platform and vaudeville stage in connection with demonstrations of scientific hypnotism, he had never attempted to act, and he anticipated petty failures in the role of an actor.

The result of the screening of the completed portions of the film are said, however, to show that he is really a gifted actor and registers his effects without theatricalism, and according to the announcement of the producers, particularly in the hypnotic scenes there is a convincingness that could not have been secured by another actor without Pauline's knowledge of the subject.

THE Pioneer will open up its Spring season with four big productions. They are Mary Anderson in "Bubbles," Emily Stevens and Montague Love in "The Place of the Honeymoons," Marie Doro and Godfrey Tearle in "Midnight Frolics" and Jose Collins and Godfrey Tearle in a society drama as yet unnamed.

Pioneer's production will follow the stage version which was one of the plays in the repertoire of the late Richard Mansfield for more than twenty years. Through the aid of trick photography and special lighting effects, this production, however, will have many novel departures.

A complete line of paper made from special sketches is now being painted in the art studio of W. C. Weiss.

Fronzcak, as the opening attraction. The Garden Theatre property is owned by the International railway company and in the last quarter century has housed many theatrical notables.

It is the intention of Manager William F. Graham, under the new policy, to run nothing but special attractions. He will endeavor to appeal to the tastes of the women and children, and it is announced that there will be two shows daily, one at 2 p. m. and the other at 8 o'clock.

At this writing he is well on the way to displaying a normal skull.

Praises Binney Feature.

Manager Henry E. Wilkinson, of the local Realart office, was visited recently by Judge John W. Schatt, manager of the Opera House at Gowanda, N. Y. The judge was enthusiastic in his praise of the Pennsylvania Dutch atmosphere in the Constance Binney production of "Erstwhile Susan."

The judge lived in the Pennsylvania Dutch country for fifteen years and is thoroughly familiar with the customs of the district. Before the picture was projected on the screen in his Gowanda Opera House Judge Schatt gave a brief talk from the stage. He described the quaint customs of the Keystone state Dutch residents and said that the detail in "Erstwhile Susan" was the best he had ever seen. He also said that he owned a house in Pennsylvania that was the exact duplicate of the one in which Barnabetta lives in the picture. He declared that every detail, including the dialect in the subtitles, was absolutely perfect. The patrons, following the talk, greatly enjoyed the feature, said the judge and he complimented Mr. Wilkinson on the production.

Listing Live Exhibitors from Every Town

By Nat Bregstein

Nat Bregstein, Moving Picture World traveling representative and official exhibitor greeter, is swinging on his way from New York City to Everywhere, United States and Canada. The following lively comment from him takes in his string of cities between Atlanta and Denver.

Atlanta

NUMBER 91 is not the number of an auto license; neither is it a house number or telephone number. Guess again. It is a movie house in the colored section in Atlanta run by Manager Roberts, one of the best fellows in the city. If you wish to prove this assertion, tell him you are with Moving Picture World and he will immediately call his juvenile chauffeur and instruct him that his car is at your disposal, at least that is what he did in my case. I paid several visits to Number 91 and I can say that it gathers the money. Several impromptu performances were pulled off in front of this theatre. They had a colored jazz band and several "picks' danced around as all colered boys do.

Roberts is a hard worker. He hasn't had a vacation in years, and certainly knows the game.

Little Rock

Baseball players have their training trips in the spring to get in condition. Pugilists train to get into the movies. Miss Arleen Taylor, manager of the Gem Theatre of the Harris & Kempner interests of Little Rock, is training to be a Rothapfel. She is not going to take a course in the I. C. S. on how to run a theatre. This Miss is going to get her experience watching the productions, paying careful attentions to all details, studying the audiences, and last, but not the least, from what she reads in Moving Picture World A Giebler page will also claim her attention, owing to the fact that Miss Taylor has spent several years on the lot in California. She has played with Charlie Ray; also worked for Thomas Ince in "Americanism." The Gem Theatre seats 740, has an admission price of 10 to 20 cents.

The other houses in town are the Kempner Theatre, seating 1,100; the Crystal, seating 799, and the Royal, seating 600.

Beers & Malone also have a theatre in town, the Victory, seating 400, which will soon increase to 500. The admission prices are ten to twenty-five cents straight. They use Pathe, Fox and all western stuff. Beers & Malone claim the picture business from the exhibiting angle is a good deal like racing; you have to be a good picker to pick a winner.

J. Frank Shay runs the Palace Theatre for the Lynch Enterprises. Mr. Shay has this to say: "I believe a great deal in good music. We have been giving our patrons the right kind of musical entertainment. That is why we get the business. I believe this town needs plenty of publicity in exploiting pictures. When an exhibitor gets to the point where he will do this every one will get business."

Oklahoma City

There are very few towns of any size in Oklahoma. Oklahoma City is the key city for Oklahoma and the largest in the state. Geographically it is situated in a bad spot to get in and get out. The theatres doing business in town are as follows:

The New Folly, admission prices of ten and twenty cents. R. D. Hutchinson is the manager.

The Lyric Theatre, seating 1,200. Mr. Sinopoulo, the proprietor, claims to be the pioneer in the state. "The dramas are better than anything in Oklahoma City," claims Sinopoulo. This theatre will increase seating capacity to 2,000 soon.

The Majestic seats 600. Admission is ten cents. Mr. Lowenstein is the proprietor. This is a second-run house. "Oklahoma City is growing very rapidly for the picture business and we look forward to big things," quotes Mr. Lowenstein.

The Tucker Brothers run the Dreamland, a 600-seater, doing a splendid business.

R. Dent runs the Lyric, seating 1,000. The exhibitors in Oklohoma City have Henry W. Ferguson, a publicity man of their own, doing their work. There are several exchanges in this city; F. P. Pickerel, of the Pathe; Jack Brainard of the First National; S, Benjamin, manager of the Universal; M. B. Tritch, of the Metro office; R. D. Lewis Film Company, C. A. Gibbs; manager. Lynch also has an office.

Pueblo

Pueblo is as quiet a town as one can expect to find. The population is about 60,000, of which, the exhibitors claim, there are only about 18,000 Americans. When the steel strike was on it hurt business considerably. Moore & Greeves own the Rialto, seating 1,200, and the Princess, an 850 seater. Since this story was written the Princess has been sold to J. Goodstein, former exhibitor in Philadelphia, also in the state rights business in Denver under the name of the Arrow Film Corporation.

The Majestic, another Pueblo house, is run by Cutshaw & Shepherd. This concern has been doing business in the town for twelve years. The firm claims that this is a poor matinee town. Western stuff is what the public likes. Cutshaw & Shepherd claim that big pictures do not reach the town on account of the exorbitant prices asked.

Foster Brothers, who run the Colonial, seating 750, believe that the serials of today are too long; that they ought to be cut down to ten or twelve reels at the most.

Fort Smith

Fort Smith is a town that looks like one of those spots mentioned in one of the Jesse James stories. It would be an ideal location for some one to produce "Diamond Dick, the Boy Detective." The population is about 30,000, and about 10,000 are colored. It is a mighty easy town to get in, but it is the other thing getting out.

Some of the theatres doing business in town are the Joie, seating 450; the Princess, seating 400; the Lyric, seating 750. Mr. Kirkpatrick takes charge of these theatres. The exhibitors receive their productions from three different towns, Little Rock, Oklahoma City and Dallas, Texas.

Rubye De Remer.

Who will be starred in forthcoming Selznick productions.

Hot Springs

Hot Springs has a population of 11,000. At this time of the year it is a mecca for tourists. The exhibitors seem to be in a healthy condition. Blumsteil and Wolf run two theatres, the Lyric and the Princess.

Blumsteil has been in Hot Springs for thirty-one years, and has this to say: "The exhibitor who has a 2,000 seater in a small town is up against it if he wants to get the money. I believe that the small town movie fan doesn't want to see padded features. A good number of the five-reelers could easily be pulled down to four and better."

The other exhibitors in town are J. G. Blaschke, who runs the Royal, a house seating 630. Mr. Blaschke claims Hot Springs is not a good picture town on account of the short season. Sidney M. Nutt runs the Central Theatre, seating 600. As Mr. Nutt was out of town at the time of my visit, I spoke to Mrs. Nutt. She claims everything is running along smoothly, with business good.

Hutchison

Hutchison, Kansas, with a population of 20,000, is a quiet town. There are four picture theatres doing business. Fred Savage is the proprietor and manager of the De Luxe. This house will shortly remodel to increase its seating capacity. "This is a splendid little town to be in," says Savage. "They like Western stuff here. Yet high-class productions go over in my house."

Ike Rynon runs the Iris, a 300 seater. Robinson runs the Royal, seating 429. Mr. Robinson was formerly connected with the Moore and Greeves Amusement Company. The Liberty Theatre, seating 250, is managed by H. C. Hutchins. This movie runs on the open market plan.

Denver

Curtis street, Denver, Colorado, is like a part of old Broadway. They certainly have a gay White Way out here, and the movies top the bill. Goldwyn Company bought the Tabor Grand Theatre. It is an old land mark in town on Curtis street, and when it is completely remodeled it will add more lights to Curtis street.

All the producers have exchanges in this town. At the Fox office on Walton street we find Kalitski manager. This young fellow has just recovered from an attack of the flu. At the Goldwyn office W. L. Gillett is manager. He has been here about two years. At the United Artists T. Y. Henry is the guide. Mr. Henry is an old-timer, having been with the old General Film Company and wants it to be known that "Pollyanna" is to play at the Rivoli for two solid weeks.

B. F. Rosenberg is at the Metro office. He came here about three weeks ago from Salt Lake City. At Robertson-Cole H. D. Cassidy is manager. He also had a struggle with old man Flu. Eddy Gerbase is over at the Universal, and in spite of the Flu, claims the outlook optimistic. At the Pathe office Ward E. Scott is the manager. This fellow is a hard worker and claims everything is booked solid.

J. H. Ashby is manager of the First National. At the Supreme Photoplays G. Kyler is manager. At the Arrow Film Company J. Goodstein, exhibitor in Philadelphia, runs the works. Mr. Goodstein is a mighty busy man, and keeps in touch with Philadelphia right along.

The Merit Film Company have an office in town. M. Kravitz is manager. The Art-O-Graf, independent producers, have an office in the Guarantee Trust Building. They have just re-organized this company and will soon start producing again. There is a studio at the other end of the town; while it is not in action at present, it will be soon.

Olive Thomas Has Narrow Escape From An Embarrassment of Actors

By Edward Weitzel

THE apartment occupied by Olive Thomas is on Central Park South and the view from her front windows will be beautiful when the grass and the trees turn green and the long stretch of meadow, lake and hillock is bathed in the rays of a fine spring morning. At present the wintery landscape to the north has its claim to the esthetic, of course; but seated on the divan in front of a blazing gaslog and looking at a book of "stills" made from the scenes in "Youthful Folly," said scenes having been taken on a lovely old plantation near New Orleans when the jasmine was blooming and summer duds were airing on the line, had counter attractions that made a trip to the Southland seem the most desirable thing in the world at this time of the year.

I said as much to Miss Thomas, and she agreed with me—with reservations, said reservations having to do with the railroad travel incidental to the trip. I was then gazing enviously at a "still" of the owner of the apartment, clad in a quaint but fluffy costume of cool and comfortable cut and perched upon the sturdy limb of a towering Eucalyptus or banana or what ever kind of a tree it was, while everything in sight, including a group of admiring little darkies in the background, registered ninety-seven in the shade.

"Any one should be willing to go through fire and water to get to that spot," I remarked with conviction.

Two Lucky Lunch Hunters.

"That is precisely what we did," replied Olive Thomas, "and it wasn't a pleasant experience. We ran into floods and were days late in reaching New Orleans. The water put the fire out in the engine and left us stalled more than once. This loss of time was dreadfully irritating and it got on everyone's nerve. Our director was doubly exasperated when he found that two members of the company had been left behind at a small station just before we struck the worst part of the floods. Orders had been issued that none should leave the sleeping car, but the pair wanted a change of diet and the train pulled out while they were hunting for a restaurant. It was a curious sensation to look out of the window of the coach and see nothing but water, the train barely crawling along. We tried to be as cheerful as possible but the director would think of the extra expense the delay was costing and he would fervently bless the two lunch hunters for adding to the delay. 'We'll be lucky if we don't have to wait for them in New Orleans for a week!' he would exclaim."

"How long did you wait for them?"

"Not a second—when we pulled into a station next morning there they were, waiting for us."

"How did they travel—by airplane?"

"No. We were stalled nearly all that night, but they caught a train that was switched around us, and they had just finished a good breakfast when our train pulled in and they saw the name of our sleeper on one of the Pullmans."

"Your director must have been delighted to see the absentees."

"He was, but what he said to them didn't sound like it, and they stuck close to the train for the rest of the trip."

The Secret of Perpetual Youth.

I took up another "Youthful Folly" picture. The heroine of the story had discarded her gown of the vintage of '63 and her pendulous but eminently proper pantalets that made her look as if she had escaped from an ancient daguerreotype, and was wearing an evening frock of the latest mode.

"What's been going on?" I inquired; "you appear to have taken a flying leap over the heads of some seventy-five years. One picture indicates that the attractive Southern miss you are acting was born about fifteen years before the opening of the Civil War, and this other picture shows plainly that you have discovered the secret of perpetual youth: you are wearing a 1920 creation and do not look a day older than in your dimity and curls."

Miss Thomas refused to satisfy my curiosity. She smiled and settled herself more comfortably among the pillows at her end of the divan as she replied:

"You must wait until you see the picture before you find out how I manage it.

Who Will Sympathize?

With Olive Thomas here in her Selznick. "Youthful Folly."

The secret is explained in the story. You know, youth is one of the things that never loses its attraction for everybody. That is why Mr. Selznick and I have decided upon a certain line of youthful heroines for me in my coming pictures."

"What sort of youthful heroines?"

"That's another secret that must be answered by the pictures themselves; but we have great faith in the young ladies."

How the Picture Gets Its Title.

The next "Youthful Folly" photograph I took up showed Miss Thomas dressed in bridal robes, the central figure of a wedding ceremony. Her hand was in the clasp of a handsome but worldly-wise looking chap who seemed to be thinking more of himself than of his demure little bride.

"Is this how the picture gets its title?" I asked.

"Yes," replied the Select star; "but the bride isn't made to pay too dearly for her experience and she finds happiness at last. We had a royal time taking the plantation scenes. It was so beautiful there and the gentleman who owned the place did everything to make things pleasant. Look at this view of one of the roadways lined with trees which form an unbroken arch over it for nearly half a mile."

The picture Miss Thomas held up warranted the enthusiasm expressed in her tone but the charming landscape furnished a background for an unconventional scene. Jogging soberly along that stately old road was an ancient nag pulling an equally ancient carryall. On the front seat sat the young lady of the vintage of '63 driving the rickety turn-out with a look of keen enjoyment and swarming over every inch of available space were grinning little darkies that evidently thought moving picture acting the finest outdoor sport yet invented.

"It looks like a picnic," was my comment.

An Embarrassment of Actors.

"Is was—to the little colored boys," said Miss Thomas. "They enjoyed every minute of our stay and wanted to be in every scene. While we were driving along I overhead one of the little chaps whisper to the boy next to him: 'My mammy says Mis' Thomas gits more'n ten dollahs a day foah actin' up. Golly, I'd do it all th' time foah nuthin'. I'm goin' tuh ask her tuh let me.'"

"And did he?"

"Indeed, he did! The day we left he came over to where I was waiting for the auto, or rather was pushed over by the other members of my recent bodyguard, and offered his services and those of his companions for an unlimited engagement in the movies at nothing a day. 'But how would you all live?' I asked. 'Where would you get your meals?' Can you see my embarrassment when that little darkey looked up at me with those big eyes of his and remarked confidently, 'We all kin live with youah.' "

"You don't mean to say that you refused the offer?" Miss Thomas.

"It was a splendid chance to reduce the high cost of picture production, I know; but my landlord may have objected to a colored orphan asylum in the apartment."

New York F. I. L. M. Club to Aid New Jersey Exhibitors

A MOVEMENT to interest members of the New York F. I. L. M. Club in assisting New Jersey exhibitors in securing Sunday opening for theatres was begun recently, when a number of men prominent in the industry addressed the club. Dr. Charles Hespie gave a detailed outline of the efforts made thus far to have such legislation passed, and appealed for the moral support of the New York exhibitors. He suggested that slides be used for propaganda work. He estimated the number of New Jersey people favorable to Sunday opening at 75 per cent.

Secretary Frederick H. Elliott, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was another speaker. A. M. Fabian, general manager of the New Jersey First National exchange, asked that New Jersey exhibitors be notified officially by letter that Dr. Hespie is the leader in the campaign for Sunday opening.

President I. E. Chadwick, of the club, pledged Dr. Hespie all possible assistance and named a ways and means committee to work with him, consisting of H. H. Buxbaum, chairman, and Messrs. Jans, Abeles, Gersten and Rosenblueh.

H. H. King, president of the F. I. L. M. Club of Havana, talked interestingly on conditions in the industry in Cuba. Reports showed intense interest in the coming exhibitors' convention to be held at Utica on March 9 and 10.

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

The main object of the convention will be the formation of a permanent national independent association, the name of which will be chosen by vote.

Among the other matters that will be taken up are the mapping out of a co-operative, national advertising campaign, the permanent adjustment of all boundary line disputes between exchange territories, the definite fixing of the percentage question in each territory—in the matters of prices for pictures, and the determination of what types of pictures shall be made by independent producers for the coming year, with respect to both stars and subjects. The selection of the types of pictures best suited for each exchange territory will be determined by ballot, by those present.

"The Land of Opportunity" Praised by Chicago's Mayor

B. W. BEADELL, manager of Select's Chicago office, gave a private showing of "The Land of Opportunity" to Mayor Thompson and his official staff Tuesday, February 17, in the City Hall censor room.

The mayor was greatly impressed by Ralph Ince's impersonation of Abraham Lincoln and expressed his surprise that so much of the history of that eventful time could be condensed in two reels of film. He also complimented Manager Beadell on the fine action in this phenomenal two-reeler.

He concluded his remarks by saying: "I tell you, Beadell, that I have seen many five-reel pictures with a great deal less action than is shown in these two reels. The picture should run for the next two years in the United States."

"The Land of Opportunity" was released in Chicago territory Sunday, February 8, and twelve prints have been working constantly ever since.

Some exhibitors are to be found who think that this picture should be shown appropriately only on Abe Lincoln's birthday, forgetting that the lesson of his marvelous life is for all time and more especially during the present season of social unrest, when alien firebrands, who believe only in revolution and bloodshed, are attempting to destroy government by the people and for the people in this beloved country of ours.

It should be esteemed a solemn duty by every exhibitor in the country to show this picture as often as possible within the coming two years. Especially should this be done in sections of great cities, which are inhabited largely by people of foreign birth and who still speak a foreign tongue.

From the youngest to the oldest, people of every tongue can learn from this picture how the rail splitter rose to be president—and how he saved this government of the people and by the people from perishing from the earth.

Novel Exploitation Stunts for "Great Air Robbery"

THE opening of "The Great Air Robbery" in Chicago, at the Bandbox, was ushered in Sunday, February 22, in a most spectacular manner. Four Curtiss planes made that number of flights, of an hour each, high up over the city, dropping literature and passes to the Bandbox.

"Princess Locklear," as the prize animal was christened, paraded throughout the "Loop" district and created great amusement and attracted wide attention.

The foregoing will serve to remind the reader that Harry Rice is back in town with Universal, indulging in some of his novel exploitation stunts. Harry is responsible for "The Great Air Robbery" and for the introduction of Lieut. Locklear to Carl Laemmle.

George L. Levine, Universal's young Milwaukee manager, was in the city last week and told the writer that "The Great Air Robbery" was released in that city, February 1, and that it is doing phenomenal business in his territory. He came in to steal some of the Harry Rice thunder.

Morris Fleckels Is Elected Vice-President of Universal

MORRIS FLECKELS, associated with Universal since its birth and for many years manager of the old Chicago office on Lake street and Fifth avenue, and holding other important positions in more recent years, spent a day in the city last week on his way to New York from Universal City, where he has acted as President Laemmle's personal representative for the past five months.

Mr. Fleckels is mum concerning his most recent preferment; but it is known to a select few that he was elected vice-president of the organization at a recent meeting of the board of directors in New York. He will now make New York his headquarters.

Pat Powers, treasurer of Universal, passed through the city Monday, February 16, bound for Universal City, on a flying business trip.

Chicago Offices of the United Report Increasing Business

J. E. O'TOOLE, manager of United Pictures Corporation, in the Chicago office, is pluming himself over the fact that three first runs in the "Loop" are credited to his office for the week of Sunday, February 22. These are "Between Men," a Hart reissue, at the Castle; "The Tiger Girl," a Griffith reissue, at the Pastime, and "The Corsican Brothers," a United picture, first run, at the Rose.

He reports business exceptionally good, thirty-seven new franchise holders having been added to the list in the last two weeks.

Al. Scates, brother of Walter S. Scates, who is manager of the Boston office of United Artists, has been appointed assistant manager of the Chicago office by Mr. O'Toole.

R. H. Smith, formerly Chicago manager of Triangle's office and now in charge of Triangle's bookings on the south side, is doing splendid work, Manager O'Toole informed me. Sydney Smith is holding up his end for Triangle on the north side.

Mr. Vandawalker, formerly manager of Doll Van Pictures, in the Film Exchange Building, 207 South Wabash avenue, has been appointed manager of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, to succeed Frank J. Flaherty. Mr. Vandawalker is now booking both Doll Van Pictures and the Hallmark product in Illinois territory, the physical distribution being made by United. Mr. Vandawalker's quarters are now in the Chicago offices of United. When seen, he was careful to state that the Chicago transaction refers to the state of Illinois only and that Doll Van still retains its Indianapolis office, which will attend to customers in that territory as in the past.

G. N. Montgomery, who has been manager for the old General Film Company, in various cities, and who has held a similar position at various times with the World, Metro, First National and Paramount, is now field manager throughout the country for Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

It can be gathered from the foregoing that the Chicago offices of United Pictures Corporation, in the Mallers Building, form an interesting beehive, the busiest I know of in the city.

Discuss Handling of Metro's Fewer and Better Productions

AN interesting meeting of Metro salesmen, working out of the Chicago office, in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, was held Saturday, February 14, at which District Manager Shirley presided.

The main object of the conference was to discuss and formulate plans for the proper handling and exploitation of Metro's fewer and better classic productions that are coming. Much time was devoted to the handling of "The Right of Way" and "Shore Acres," the latter featuring Alice Lake, the bright, new star in the film world.

Mr. Shirley is confident that in "Shore Acres" the organization has a box office attraction that will far excel any yet released this year and that it will prove a close rival of "In Old Kentucky" as a money-getter.

Few among the older generation can forget the old reliable stage success, in which James A. Herne scored so many triumphs. "East Lynne," "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "Shore Acres" were life savers that never failed theatrical managers of the old days in a pinch.

Indorses Bill Prohibiting Shipment of Indecent Films

THE Chicago F. I. L. M. Club has united with other picture organizations throughout the country in support of the Walsh bill, recently introduced in the House of Representatives, at Washington. This bill classes moving pictures with books, newspapers, photographs and other printed matter. It stands for the protection of the public by prohibiting the sending of indecent films from one place to another, by mail or otherwise.

Prominent men in the film business are of the opinion that the passage of this bill will do much to solve the annoying problem of censorship, as it will ultimately remove from the film business the producers and the distributors of unclean films.

"The Stolen Kiss" Supplants "Little-Miss-by-the-Day"

MANAGER WILLARD, of Realart Pictures Corporation, reports fine business in Chicago territory for "Soldiers of Fortune" and "Mystery of the Yellow Room," and that exhibitors are much pleased with the box-office values of these attractions.

"The Stolen Kiss" has supplanted the title of "Little-Miss-by-the-Day" for Constance Binney's second Realart picture, a change that will be much appreciated by exhibitors, as the dramatic title was cumbersome for advertising purposes and indefinite as to meaning. "The Stolen Kiss" will be released March 4. It is of six reels.

Dan Roche Now a Proud Father.

Daniel Roche, publicity and exploitation manager in the Chicago office of Famous Players-Lasky, has added about an inch to his stature since he became the proud father of a baby girl.

The happy event occurred shortly after the big national convention of Famous Players-Lasky, recently held at the La Salle Hotel, and Mr. Roche has been flooded with congratulations. Mrs. Roche and the baby stranger are doing well.

Urges Chicago Film Veterans to Join Cinema Post No. 494

JOHN G. HAHN, secretary of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has sent out a call to all Chicago former service men in the moving picture business, to join Cinema Post No. 494, which has just received its charter from the American Legion.

"If Chicago film folk are to have their own Legion Post, let's made it a real post. Send in your names, buddies," says Mr. Hahn.

Creswell Will Form School for Training of Film Salesmen

IT is the intention of Special Representative Fred J. Creswell, of Famous Players-Lasky, to open a school for salesmen in the Chicago office in the near future. He has divided the Chicago territory into twenty zones and he plans to have a salesman in each who will be held responsible both for the sale of the picture and its success at all times as a money getter.

Mr. Creswell will select twenty young men for the purpose, preferably those having no film experience but who have a desire to enter the film business as salesmen. These men will be given a two-weeks' course of instruction not only in salesmanship, but in exploitation as well. They will also be taught the value of publicity and every means of securing it; also advertising and many other similar aids.

The object is to make these salesmen not only valuable as an asset to the organization but also to exhibitors. Indeed, from the time a picture is sold to an exhibitor up to the date of its showing, these salesmen will be expected to furnish him valuable technical assistance.

Dear, Old Tom Comerford, Fine Actor, Passes Away

THOMAS COMERFORD, widely known for his artistic acting in old men parts in numerous Essanay productions for many years, passed away Tuesday, February 17. He was a delightful old gentleman and everyone around the big Essanay studios loved and venerated him.

He was buried at Olivet cemetery, this city, on Friday, February 20. It was sad that his many friends among moving picture actors could not have been present during the obsequies; but they are scattered far and wide and will deeply regret to learn of his death.

Bradford Succeeds Creswell as Famous Players Chicago Head

R. E. BRADFORD, who has filled the position of branch manager for Famous Players-Lasky in Atlanta, Ga., for the past eight months, has been appointed manager of the Chicago office to succeed Mr. Creswell, now special representative of the organization's Chicago district.

Mr. Bradford has many friends in Chicago among exhibitors and in the trade generally. The writer can vouch for his fine ability as a business getter and his great popularity when manager of Triangle's Chicago office. He also established a splendid record in Minneapolis, when filling the position of branch manager for Goldwyn.

Around Chicago Picture Theatres

By Mary Kelly

Charles Ray's Social Blunders Cause Low Delighted Giggles

"HE'S my best male bet." Manager Martin Saxe smiled with satisfaction as the mass of chattering femininity, exuberant in their praise of the hero of "Red Hot Dollars" moved through the lobby of the stately Pantheon Theatre.

"It is not ever thus with the he-stars" he continued with a sigh. "Now for instance there's Mr. So-And-So, who goes big with our men patrons, but who doesn't attract the women. Charlie Ray does. Women of all ages appreciate him."

At that very moment they were appreciating him, judging from issuing sounds. There were low delighted giggles, and now and then a girl's unrestrained laugh, as Charles stepped on a grand dame's train, or sat in the seat with the chauffeur, or made any other of those awkward, altogether charming social errors which are his wont.

And in all of these original antics the Pantheon orchestra was proving equal to the task of accompanying this hero who never grows up. It was a "red hot" picture served up with "red hot" music. The organ selections as well, including a popular overture, were peppy and started the show with a dash.

"It's because we have a thoroughly American orchestra" explained Manager Saxe. "There is little adherence to foreign musical traditions with our musicians. Our programs consist mostly of compositions produced in this country and played in this country's style by American citizens with just the right amount of jazz in their systems to make their playing interesting to our patrons."

Despite the excellency of its instrumental music, the Pantheon still clings to the idea of introducing vocal soloists. With all due credit to the soloists engaged, is there not a superfluity in this provision for additional entertainment? Is not cinema art in itself, when appropriately and attractively accompanied, a complete and potential form of amusement?

The Pantheon orchestra has demonstrated to a fine degree the possibility of finding a perfect musical complement for everything that happens on the screen. This harmony between picture and orchestra is noticeable not only while the feature is showing, but during the presentation of travelogs and comedies, as well. In fact the musical setting arranged for "Molly's Mumps," a Robertson-Cole comedy, exhibited just before "Red Hot Dollars" was a delightful revelation of how humor can be expressed through music.

Big Organ at Covent Garden Makes Vain Peals for Irish

MARGUERITE CLARK spent a part of last week on the Covent Garden screen where she appeared as "All-of-a-Sudden Peggy." A blind man would have had no difficulty in detecting the nationality of this engaging little heroine.

Peggy, had he entered the theatre, so complete was the tribute which Dr. T. J. A. Mapp, organist, paid to her connection with the Emerald Isle. All the familiar Irish ballads (yes, all of them) he collected for this occasion, and played them for all the sentiment and lilt that is in them.

Probably they wouldn't have been as effective on any other instrument; but the Covent Garden organ, the largest in any motion picture theatre in Chicago, has a reputation for perfection of tone and correct distribution of sound, that it fully sustains. It has 250 stops, and a reproduction of every orchestral instrument. On this particular occasion, the harp played an impertant part in the program, for obvious reasons. The chimes, too, rang out the glory due a daughter of old Erin. But perhaps the Covent Garden is in the wrong section of the city, or the wrong section of the globe. In Dublin, for instance—well there would have been a demonstration. At the Covent Garden, the attendance fell below average.

IF the Riviera patrons don't like the new picture on its opening night, General Manager Dave Balaban knows it. He has a carefully trained corps of ushers stationed in the lobby and entrance at the end of each show on the night of the change in program. Their ears alert to any criticism, favorable or adverse, they make note of whatever they hear, on cards printed especially for this purpose. If they sight a disappointed looking fan just emerging from the theatre, they make an effort to hear his expression of his attitude toward the picture. If there is an enthusiastic comment from another, the usher records that with equal attentiveness.

These cards are all submitted to Mr. Balaban who, at the close of the show, checks up. If there are two complaints to one expression of praise, he knows there's something wrong with the picture, and proceeds to right it—which sometimes means procuring another feature. In other cases the remedy can be found by cutting out certain scenes that are proving unpopular, or which are dragging out the picture to too great a length.

"We might be able to fill our houses with this picture just as it is," said Mr. Balaban, "but we couldn't afford to displease the public. We can't afford to be money-mad. It isn't a question of what we want to give our patrons. It is entirely a question of what they want to see. And this system of commandeering the services of our ushers in sounding the public, has proven a most efficient one. For every valuable suggestion from our employes in regard to an idea that will improve our house or presentation, we offer one dollar. Many times an alert employe will see an opportunity which a manager might miss."

Artists and Not Favorites Grace the Playhouse Screen

RIGHT off Michigan Boulevard, up a flight of marble steps, through a lobby done in grey and coral, and you find yourself in one of Chicago's super picture-theatres, The Playhouse. Famed for its high-grade photoplays, as well as their atmospheric presentation for which Manager Harry Smith is responsible, this theatre has become somewhat of a rendezvous for fashionable ladies en promenade and for the cultured classes who are looking for something above mediocre in the way of films. Its location—in the Fine Arts Building—brings to its doors people with discriminating tastes, art students and connoisseurs.

Having established for itself a flattering reputation, The Playhouse faces the necessity of living up to it and in this effort is gratifyingly successful. The first essential, naturally, is the choice of productions of a sort that for star, photography and settings excel. Only the stars who have come to be recognized as artists, not merely public favorites, are permitted to grace the Playhouse screen. Thus Norma Talmadge has been chosen as a two-week attraction in her latest First National release, "A Daughter of Two World."

In close keeping with the quality of this picture is the excellent musical program that has been especially outlined. Organ recitals by day and orchestral music by night accompany the scenes. An arrangement for softening the organ tones suggests the same care and refinement that is everywhere noticeable in the management of this theatre. The keyboard is back of the scenes so that the sounds, in reaching the audience, are slightly muffled and have a pleasing far-off effect. The organist is enabled to follow her cues on the screen by a system of mirrors, devised especially for this theatre. For unusually elaborate spectacles an appropriate prelude consisting of a ballet number or of vocal selections is arranged.

Even the matter of advertising has been placed in the hands of artists. Attractive hand-colored, hand-lettered posters have an actual decorative value in the lobby and entrance where they are placed.

Paul Brunet Says Pathe Serials for 1920 Will Show Improvement in Artistic Value

ANNOUNCING the serial program to be followed by Pathe for this year, Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., stated that the installment form of photoplay is daily receiving more general recognition as an important element of the program by exhibitors.

"We have hardly ventured far enough into 1920 to permit dogmatic statements as to developments characteristic of the new year," Mr. Brunet said. "Still there are so many indications, unmistakable in the message they carry, that I unhesitatingly hazard the opinion that the serial film in this year will realize greater strides towards universal recognition than during any one previous year.

Serial Popularity Increasing.

"The increasing popularity of the serial was amply evidenced last year in the number of theatres, long established, which added this form of photoplay to their regular programs. This condition, along with the obvious conclusion that coincident with the opening of new houses all over the country would come a greatly increased demand for films of all kinds, was a big factor in the adoption by the Pathe organization of a much broader policy with regard to serial production and distribution.

"Naturally Pathe serials this year will show an improvement over last year in artistic value. But the improvement will be observed to be greater in this respect than that due merely to the normal advance of film plays because of increased experience in production. For Pathe has set itself a much higher standard for serial stories, players and production. The serial has arrived at the point where it must be treated by the producer with as much concern for well-wrought scenarios, capable and artistic production as the feature film.

"With regard to the more direct business connection between the distributor and the exhibitor, Pathe has inaugurated a policy that will vastly increase the value of the service rendered the showman. To the end that haste in booking a serial may be avoided and that sufficient time to exploit properly the theatre's offerings be given, the Pathe serial program is now determined upon for a period of eight months in advance of release."

Feiber and Shea Circuit Books "The Sagebrusher"

EMERSON HOUGH'S "The Sagebrusher," the latest Great Authors' production presented by Benjamin B. Hampton, is winning great praise. W. K. Hollander, critic of the Chicago Daily News, hails it as one of the genuine big screen dramas seen in Chicago in a long time and the first run of the picture at Moir's Alcazar Theatre was as big a success as was a week's presentation in Los Angeles at the Kinema Theatre.

Latest of the big first run circuits to give the production enthusiastic approval is the Feiber and Shea Ohio chain of theatres under the general management of D. B. Cool, which includes the Park Theatre, Youngstown, the Colonial in Akron and the Grand Opera House in Canton.

C. E. Stillwell, of Stillwell's Casino, Spokane, has contracted for a week's presentation, and this picture opened a week's engagement at the Columbia Theatre, Pittsburgh. The picture is also playing a week's engagement at Tom Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C.

First run booking has been made by the Ansonia Theatre, Butte; Imperial, Great Falls, Mont, and by M. L. Markowitz, of the Strand, San Francisco.

Walter Miller's Services Loaned.

Walter Miller, shortly to start work as a featured player with Artclass productions, and who is in California where he played an important role in Numa Picture Corporation's production of "The Return of Tarzan," has been loaned by Artclass to the Selznick company. He is working under the direction of Thomas Mills. Incidently, the association resumes a friendship between director and actor that has endured through the screen years since both were associated in the Vitagraph company together. Mr. Miller is expected in New York shortly.

William Farnum Finely Cast in Fox Production "The Adventurer"

By ROBERT C. McELRAVY.

WILLIAM FARNUM finds a blithe and congenial role as Don Ceasar de Bazan in his new six-part Fox production, "The Adventurer." Surrounded by a capable cast, with Estelle Taylor playing a strong feminine lead as Maritana, the gypsy dancing girl, he carries the spectator with him in one of the best romantic dramas yet produced.

"The Adventurer," written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and staged by J. Gordon Edwards, is a historical drama, without the history. In other words, it is a story of old Spain, laid in the seventeenth century, told without particular reference to the facts of the period, though King Charles II and Queen Isabel are present in many scenes, with full court attendance. It is a tale of the "Zounds!" and "Gad-Zooks!" school, full of dark intrigues, bold adventure and charming love scenes. The costuming and settings have been well looked after and the illusion of real life is constantly felt, though there are dramatic surprises in plenty.

A Fine Production.

This type of story is well-known to mature readers of the present generation, who will find a pleasant troop of memories set in motion as they watch this screen subject. It recalls "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "To Have and to Hold," and even the lusty tales of Alexander Dumas. Don Ceasar De Bazan, a penniless adventurer, proud of his noble birth and loyal to his King, even though the latter is a weakling, has the dashing fascination of a D'Artagnan. He fights innumerable duels, is sentenced to death for drawing his sword during Holy Week, enters into a marriage with a veiled woman at the behest of a scheming prime minister, and finally lives to restore his name and prestige throughout the kingdom. The six reels are crowded with colorful action.

Mr. Farnum again proves his readiness as an actor in this subject. He has just the proper conception of the theatrical to carry off such a role. He is never better than when depicting a virile, romantic character, full of vitality and humor. The action is so cleverly shaded that the humor of the situations is felt even in melodramatic moments which might slip into burlesque in less capable hands.

In going back over the lists of actors and actresses who have done good service for the screen, it is doubtful if one could be found whose contribution, as a whole, has been more substantial and consistently as strong. William Farnum was one of the first of the better actors who saw the screen for what it was—a new medium for reaching the masses in greater numbers than the stage would permit. He had played successfully on the legitimate stage, winning approval in "Ben Hur," "Virginius,' "The Prince of India" and many other dramas.

Rapiers and Romance.
With William Farnum in his newest Fox. "The Adventurer."

The screen opened up a new and undoubtedly wider range for his extraordinary abilities. His dual role in "The Tale of Two Cities" is easily remembered. He won success as Jean Valjean in "Les Miserables." All told, he has appeared in about thirty-five pictures, all of which reflect his strong personal appeal.

An Actor of Many Parts.

Prominent among his list of screen successes are the tales of our own early Western period, some of them based on the novels of Zane Grey. In these dramas he appears sometimes as a member of the Texas Rangers, sometimes as a "Killer" and at other times as the familiar cowboy hero. But in all these stories Farnum carries with him a broader and deeper feeling than the average plainsman protagonist. When you are watching him as Buck Duane, the last of a family of bad men, or as a member of the Rangers, whose business it was to preserve order under difficult conditions, you sense in his movements a real historical background. He fills the imagination, not only as the chief figure of a particular story, but as one who visualizes the man of the plains as he must at one time have actually existed. He brings to the spectator an impression of the old West which suggests a truthful representation of its romantic life, its sinister melodrama and above all, its constant hardships. In such subjects he has undoubtedly done much to perpetuate a genuine picture of this life.

In "The Wings of the Morning" William Farnum played the hero in a story of romantic adventure that was brilliantly successful in its way. Based on the fascinating novel by Louis Tracy, the picture seemed like an actual realization of the original story. Almost every important episode in the novel came in for satisfying treatment on the screen. In other subjects Mr. Farnum has appeared as a still virile, but more restrained and compassionate hero.

That Mr. Farnum is a compelling actor has been demonstrated many times. He proves it again in "The Adventurer," and he is said to have still another role under way that will have wide appeal. He has a cumulative drawing power after seeing him in a few subjects.

New Santa Cruz Theatre Is One of California's Finest

At Santa Cruz, Cal., on February 12, Kahn & Greenfield opened the New Santa Cruz Theatre, the fifth in their chain of houses and the first outside of San Francisco. Ideal weather conditions prevailed and the city "where sea and mountains meet" was in rare form. Those of its residents who did not attend on the opening night at least made the attempt to do so and the affair was a big success.

One of the most interesting features of the opening was the attendance of film exchange men, exhibitors and representative business men of San Francisco, with their wives, making a party of more than one hundred and fifty. These visitors were the guests of Kahn & Greenfield and the Santa Cruz Chamber of Commerce, and a lavish program of entertainment was arranged for their enjoyment, no expense having been spared to make their stay a memorable one.

World, As Usual, Leads.

The film folks making the trip from San Francisco gathered in front of Photo Player Hall at 9 o'clock on the morning and were assigned places in the automobiles of the more affluent members of the trade by starter William Jennings Citron, of the United Pictures Theatres of America. At the crack of a gun the race for Santa Cruz was on and all were soon speeding through the Santa Clara Valley, the garden spot of California, with its wealth of fruit blossoms, and over the redwood-clad Santa Cruz range.

As usual, Moving Picture World was not to be denied the lead. The car bearing its representative, piloted by Milton Birnbaum, of the Novelty Electric Sign Company, was not passed on the trip of three hours.

Following a highly enjoyable luncheon at the Hotel St. George the visitors toured Santa Cruz with their decorated cars. They were then taken to the wonderful grounds of the Santa Cruz Country Club, where moving pictures were made and golf was enjoyed by those who wished to play.

Fiction in Vitagraph's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," with an all-star cast.

Banquet Crowns Hospitality.

In the evening all attended a banquet tendered by the Santa Cruz Chamber of Commerce, at which Edward H. Baron, of the United Artists Corporation (to whom much of the success of the party is due), presided as toastmaster. Among the speakers at this delightful affair were Mayor Carl C. Kratzenstein; W. O. Kerrick, president of the Chamber of Commerce; H. D. Keil, of San Francisco; H. D. Connick, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Herman Wobber, and Louis R. Greenfield.

In his talk, Mr. Wobber directed attention to the fact that Kahn & Greenfield control more seats than any exclusive moving picture exhibitors west of Chicago, while H. D. Keil outlined the history of Louis R. Greenfield and told of his success at San Francisco. At the close of the banquet all repaired to the theatre close by, where loge seats had been reserved.

The New Santa Cruz Theatre, seating capacity of 1,500, is similar in design and appointments to the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres, of San Francisco, which are considered the finest neighborhood houses in the entire country. Finished in restful tones of pink and blue, equipped with a delightful ladies' parlor presided over by a maid, carpeted throughout and containing many innovations entirely new to Santa Cruz, this theatre is a duplicate of the larger San Francisco houses.

Special Attention to Projection.

Following their usual policy, Kahn & Greenfield have paid special attention to the projection room and have provided large quarters, with conveniences not surpassed in any other theatre. Three Simplex machines have been installed and this department has been placed in charge of Operator W. T. Green. Music is provided by an organ presided over by Organist Newell Alton.

Mayor Pays Tribute.

The opening program was a fortunate choice, the feature being "Stepping Out," with Enid Bennett. The theatre certainly did "step out," and with its best foot forward. A Mack Sennett comedy, "Back to the Kitchen," furnished plenty of laughs, while a news weekly and a Literary Digest "Topics of the Day" rounded out the bill.

The formal dedication of the house was a short affair, the only speakers being Mayor Kratzenstein and resident manager T. J. Larkins. The former paid a tribute to the foresight of Mrs. Minnie Hihn and Fred D. Hihn, owners of the property, and to the San Francisco firm which leased and equipped the theatre. Alexander Bevani, the famous leader of community singing, followed the speakers and succeeded in getting the desired response from the audience.

By WILLIAM L. SHERRILL

President Frohman Amusement Corporation

BECAUSE the Frohman Amusement Corporation has definitely determined its plan of extended operations and increased production, William L. Sherrill, president of that organization, has issued a plea to independent exchanges throughout the United States for a greater spirit of co-operation with the independent producer and a more substantial evidence of business sagacity. Mr. Sherrill says:

"The discouraging aspect of state rights distribution that rise because of lack of co-operation on the part of the state rights distributor is made clear by the recital of the following methods still pursued by the independent distributor. They purchase prints only to supply their immediate needs, expecting the manufacturer to either hold the negative ready to fill all orders as placed for additional prints, during the life of their lease, or if the negative is to be shipped to Europe to supply the foreign market, that the manufacturer invest in a surplus of prints and keep them on hand in order to supply the buyers' wants.

Too Much Expected.

"They expect the manufacturer to contract for and always keep on hand a supply of advertising matter consisting of lithographs, photo enlargements for lobby display and general printed matter. In the first instance, and when they acquire the production they order a minimum quantity without attempting to gauge their needs or future requirements, during the life of their lease.

"One can readily appreciate that with several productions made in any one year the liability incurred by the manufacturer in the making of advertising matter would run, at the end of a year, into a staggering amount. The best we can do is to approximate requirements of each exchange and if any production, or series of productions, prove extraordinarily popular, we meet with a speedy exhaustion of the advertising matter.

"Then issues a loud wail and a hurried call on the part of the exchange, couched very much in language such as this: 'We can't book the production without advertising matter.' 'What good are the pictures to us if we can't get advertising matter.' 'When you make a picture you should always see to it that our wants are supplied.' 'Are we supposed to buy all the advertising matter we need when we buy the picture?' 'You are supposed to stock up for our benefit.'

Holding the Bag.

"But what if we do stock up," continues Mr. Sherrill, "and the exchange sends in no further orders? We are required to hold the bag.

"Is it not only fair that since the manufacturer makes no profit on his advertising matter but, in fact, suffers a loss considering his proportionate overhead, which he does not tack on to the cost, while the exchange sells every piece of advertising matter to the exhibitor at a profit, that the exchange should at least study its business requirements sufficient to place its orders all at one time?

"Another regrettable situation that exists, proving how little the independent exchange man seeks to bear his share of the burdens or even to operate for his own benefit is in the matter of publicity and advertising. While it is true that the producer should keep his wares before the trade generally, yet the life of the business of the exchange man, naturally depending upon the public's demand through the local theatre, requires the exchange man to properly exploit the attractions handled by him in his own territory.

Producer Does Exploiting.

"The producer will advertise in the trade journals; first, to sell his merchandise and secondarily, to acquaint the exhibitor with the merits of his productions. The exchange man acquiring the attraction expects either the producer to continue to 'plug' the production in his territory, or throws the burden upon the shoulders of the exhibitor.

"In other words, the independent exchange man, once having booked the attraction, does little or nothing, to either create a popularity for the production, or assist the exhibitor in putting it over. They leave the exhibitor to his own limited resources.

"They try to sell, but seldom assist. They will dump on the exhibitor the advertising matter and ship the print, feeling that their duty is well performed, but they make no suggestions for exploitations nor do they, from any angle, study the exhibitor's needs or his best interests.

"Now the manufacturer, perforce, cannot know the individual situations that surround each theatre playing its productions and does not know the peculiarities of each neighborhood, or the program generally that is being run in connection with his attraction. He, therefore, cannot lend that intimate help that a different situation would justify.

Exchange Men Know Conditions.

"The exchange man, or the salesman calling on the theatre, is in a position to make inquiries of the theatre owner that would permit him to make suggestions and to co-operate along lines that would give the exhibitor the full measure of service that he deserves. There are numerous other incidents of lesser importance that all tend to prove that the independent exchange man is not taking advantage of the opportunities which now present themselves.

"Unless they reform their methods," concludes Mr. Sherrill, "get down to business logic and legitimate business methods, the time may come when the so-called program producer will take advantage of the laxity of the independent distributor and bring to life again the program bookings."

William Fox's Policy Is Made Evident by His Picturization of Famous Novels

WILLIAM FOX'S purchase of exclusive screen rights for sixty-seven stories by Richard Harding Davis is in line with his policy to transfer to the cinema literary works of transcending interest. This policy was manifest in the art production "Evangeline," the screening of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" and of the Charles Dickens novel "A Tale of Two Cities." Recent Fox releases, together with productions now in the making, constitute a treasure-house of choice literature. They include visualizations of classics, up-to-date novels and stage successes.

The expansion of producing facilities resulting from the opening of the new building in New York and the construction of a large indoor stage on the West Coast will enable Mr. Fox to film the masterpieces of noted authors to an even larger extent than heretofore. The staff of scenario writers has been enlarged.

The purchase of the world's picture rights to the Broadway success of three years ago, "Her Honor, the Mayor," from the pen of Miss Arline Van Ness Hines, is the most recent transaction in conformity with that larger policy. Madlaine Traverse will play the lead in the screen version.

Naming the Authors.

Edward Knoblauch is another Fox dramatist. "My Lady's Dress" is from his pen and will be presented as a superproduction. Larry Evans also stands high in the dramatic scale and is a Fox contributor.

The two Fox productions thus far announced, in which Pearl White takes the lead, are faithful adaptations of novels by prominent writers which had a big sale as books and will now reach an infinitely larger public. "The White Moll," already completed, is by Frank L. Packard. "Tiger's Cub" now being made was written by George Goodchild. "White Lies" is from a novel by Charles Reade. Gladys Brockwell stars in this picture.

Pearl Doles Bell has provided two vehicles of exceptional merit for Shirley Mason; "Her Elephant Man," praised as a superb circus story, and "Love's Harvest." The latest Shirley Mason feature, "Molly and I," was written by another excellent story teller, Frank R. Adams.

The most notable change made in the filming of the N. P. Niessen novel, "The Love Thief," is in the title. It is called "The She Tiger" on the screen, but retains all the power, intense interest and love appeal of the original.

Requires Virile Western Stories.

The Fox heroes of western drama call for a type of stories in which action and virility are the keynotes. Charles Alden Seltzer is the author of "Forbidden Trails." Harold Titus, a prolific writer, provided several vehicles for Tom Mix.

"The Orphan," an intense story of the real West featuring William Farnum, is from the novel of Clarence E. Mulford. E. Lloyd Sheldon is among the successful authors whose talents have been placed at the service of Fox Film Corporation. Without mention of the name of William C. Lengel the personnel of Fox writers would be incomplete. Mr. Lengel has given to the screen through William Fox his widely read "Tin Pan Alley" stories as published in the Red Book Magazine and has several others now in work for early production.

Among others are Paul H. Sloane, Natalie Sumner Lincoln, J. Anthony Roach, Gelett Burgess, Denison Clift, H. H. Van Loan, Henry Clifford Colwell, Paul Dickey, Justin Huntley McCarthy, Richard Stanton.

Four new men have just been added to the staff of writers on the west coast. They are Stephen Fox, who writes under the name of Jules G. Furthman; Stephen Reynolds, Stephen Chalmers and Arthur Jackson.

Famous Players Busy in Albany.

Through a deal just consummated, Albany, N. Y., will become the main distributing point between New York and Buffalo for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. A big garage near the business center of the city, has been purchased for the reported sum of $30,000 and will be fitted out to meet the requirements of the company. A fifteen-year lease has been taken on the building. It will be ready for occupancy in May, with a force of about forty employed. J. H. Seidelman is in Albany in charge of the preliminary work.

Richard C. Fox Off to London To Be Fox Film Sales Head

JUST one week after Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, sailed from New York—on Saturday, February 14—for a general tour of the corporation's foreign offices, Richard C. Fox sailed from New York on Saturday, February 21, with the London office of the firm as his destination.

The arrival of Richard C. Fox in London will mark the opening of a sales campaign throughout the United Kingdom with certain distinctly new elements. Mr. Fox, whose reputation throughout the Eastern half of the United States has been recently strengthened by the record he established while branch manager at various points for Famous Players, spent two weeks just prior to his departure making a study of the equipment installed in the new Fox studios on West Fifty-fifth.

On the same steamship with Mr. Fox and consigned to his private office in London quarters are three special prints of Fox releases which he takes with him for immediate showings to the exhibitors of Great Britain. The films include Clemenceau's "The Strongest," "The Adventurer" and "The Daredevil" in which William Farnum and Tom Mix are the respective stars.

Tom Moore of Washington Engages "Temporary Wife"

THE Hodkinson organization has just closed a contract with Tom Moore, the Washington showman, for a week's presentation early in March of Joseph Levering's all-star production, "His Temporary Wife," at the Strand Theatre. This marks the fourth Hodkinson release to be presented by the big Capitol City exhibitor within the past two months, Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," starring Louise Glaum, recording two weeks of splendid business each and Leah Baird's "The Capitol" following in turn with a banner week's engagement.

"His Temporary Wife," starring Rubye De Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Roland, Eugene Strong and W. T. Carleton, concluded on Sunday a big week's run at the Crystal Theatre, St. Louis, despite the influenza scare. John L. Sweeney, owner of the Crystal, laid particular stress on the leap year angle of the production in his newspaper advertising spreads and in his displays.

The Levering picture was produced for the most part in Long Island and in the Adirondacks, though the all-star aggregation enacted the final scenes at Asheville, N. C.

"Fashion Show" in Fox Film.

Why go to Paris or any other big fashion center to enjoy a real "Paris Fashion Show" when you can find a wonderful display of the latest Parisian styles brought to your very door? In "Leave It To Me," the new photodrama now in the making at the William Fox studios on the West coast, with William Russell as star, the costumes worn by the feminine members of the cast are the last word in the way of designs for the coming season.

"Fresh Paint" is New Rolin Comedy.

"Fresh Paint" has been selected as a title for the new Rolin Comedy, which Pathe will release on March 7. "Snub" Pollard is starred in this one-reel laugh-getter assisted by Marie Mosquini, Eddie Boland, "Sunshine Sambo," the diminutive colored comedian, and a chorus of artists models, who appear in the garb of classical dancers.

Raging Blizzard Fails to Check Pearl White

NOTWITHSTANDING the raging blizzard which gripped Port Henry, N. Y., the Pearl White company has progressed well in its work on "The Tiger's Cub," a story of the country north of 53 from the book by George Goodchild. The Fox picture is under the direction of Charles Giblyn.

For a time the wild weather threatened to halt the completion of the Alaskan mining camp which the carpenters were building on the shore of Lake Champlain for the exteriors, but the grit of the artisans seconded by high-spirited encouragement from Miss White and her company triumphed.

The first night scenes were taken and served to brighten everybody's spirits, the effect was so realistic. William Black, cast as the "Tiger," broke the trail on snowshoes ahead of a dog team driven by J. Thornton Baston. Two hours later, Charles Giblyn, clad in furs from head to foot, and Joseph Ruttenberg, the cameraman, rehearsed John Woodford as Colonel Summers and John Davidson as Lone Wolf, in a scene in which the latter carries the colonel, who has been mortally wounded, through the deep snow from gambling hall to cabin.

Eight Kaufman Pictures To Be Ready Before Release of Any

THE announcement is made from the offices of Lewis J. Selznick, head of Selznick Pictures, that the first of the Herbert Kaufman Weeklies, "Little Red Riding Hood," will not be set for release until six or eight of the editorial subjects have been completed and are in the hands of the Select branch managers throughout the country.

The decision is the result of Mr. Selznick's belief that the subjects are of such importance the several releases should be on hand to avoid any delay whatever to the exhibitors and the public.

Accordingly, the following information was sent out from the home office to the branches: "Fully realizing the importance and meaning of a weekly editorial subject, and in order to make this proposition an unmistakable success for the exhibitor, we will schedule the first Herbert Kaufman Weekly at such time as we can safely guarantee every exhibitor prompt delivery of these single reel features each and every week. It is therefore our desire that all branches have at least six or eight of the subjects on hand before the first release is made."

Dempsey Serial Episode Sets Standard.

The fourth episode of "Daredevil Jack" which introduces Jack Dempsey as a Pathe serial star, was shown recently to officials of that concern at the New York offices, and the artistic qualities of the production are said to be so notable that congratulations were soon on their way to Robert Brunton, the producer.

This episode, "Shanghaied," is being singled out by Pathe as an example of the "installment-feature" quality, which will be Pathe's standard henceforth.

Quebec Collected the Sum of $648,616 from Admission Taxes in Two Years

DURING the two years that the war tax on admission tickets was collected by the Province of Quebec the total amount of $648,616 was collected through the theatres of the province and a few others from patrons. One of the provisions of the tax act which was passed by the Provincial Legislature in 1916 was that all cities and towns were to receive 1 cent from the assessment on each admission ticket. The province paid back to the municipalities the total sum of $467,584.86, leaving $181,031.14 as the share for the province.

This arrangement was made because the cities of Montreal and Quebec had previously been charging a tax of 1 cent on all theatre tickets and other municipalities had been asking for such a privilege. It was really because of the demand to the government from the various cities for permission for such a tax that the Provincial Legislature decided to adopt a war tax for the whole of Quebec and to give the centers a share of the revenue.

The above figures do not represent the net revenue to the governmnt and the cities, but the expense of collecting the money was light inasmuch as the exhibitors did most of the work.

Quebec Cities Continued Levy.

The Province of Quebec abolished its theatre admission tax altogether in 1919, but granted the privilege to all cities to continue the levy as a local source of revenue with the proviso that the cities of Montreal and Quebec were to give 1 cent from the sale of each tax ticket to local hospitals and charitable institutions. The cities did not return to the 1 cent tax which was in force before the matter became a provincial feature, as they were authorized to use the tax schedule fixed by the province. This ranges from 2 cents on tickets up to 35 cents in value and 3 cents on tickets worth from 35 cents to 75 cents, up to a tax of 10 cents on tickets priced at $1.50 and up.

The abolishment of the provincial tax made practically no difference to the people as the municipalities took over the revenue with only one or two exceptions. Patrons at the one theatre in the small town of Gatineau Point, Quebec, do not pay a tax because the local authorities have not seen fit to take up this form of revenue. In passing, it should be mentioned that the mayor of Gatineau Point is also the proprietor of the local moving picture theatre.

Prohibits Price Reduction.

The fact that no tax is less than 2 cents has tended to kill the lower prices of admission to theatres. The people do not like to pay a tax of 2 cents on a 10-cent ticket and the exhibitor does not care to assume the comparatively heavy tax on the small-priced admission tickets.

All other Canadian provinces continue to collect what was originally known as a war tax on admission tickets and there has been no move to follow the example of the Province of Quebec in giving the admission tax to the cities. In no province, aside from Quebec, is a city or town permitted to collect a tax on theatre tickets for any purpose in addition to the provincial assessment

Hagenah Joins Mayer Staff.

Harry Hagenah, who has acted as co-director in the filming of some thirty-five of his own scenarios, has joined the Louis B. Mayer staff and will be assistant director of the Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Company, Inc. In this capacity Hagenah will assist Director John Stahl in Mildred Harris Chaplin's next feature production for First National release.

Leah Baird's Next Nearing Completion.

Prints of "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," starring Leah Baird, the Artco picturization of Louis Joseph Vance's gripping story, will soon be on their way to Hodkinson exchanges, Director Perry Vekroff having just completed the cutting of the newest Leah Baird vehicle at the Cliffside, N. J., studios.

Republic Distributing Announces Six Feature Productions for March Release

IN selecting six productions for March releases the officials of the Republic Distributing corporation believe they have picked six pictures that showmen will appreciate. The releases scheduled are "Mothers of Men," "Girl of the Sea," "The Gift Supreme," "The Adventuress," "The Great Shadow" and "Man's Plaything."

Attention is called by Republic officials to the fact that several of these productions are of the all-star type and feature a number of the leading players of the American screen. Among them may be named Tyrone Power, Julian Eltinge, famous impersonator, stage and screen star, Claire Whitney, Lon Chaney, Grace Davison, Montague Love, and Stuart Holmes.

Ranking as one of the best productions of the year according to the Republic officials is "Mothers of Men," an Edward Jose production. Claire Whitney heads the cast of this story which was written by William H. Warren and DeWite Kaplan. The story is purely dramatic and deals with the sacrifice of a mother during the world war. The scenes are laid in France but it is cited that the war is merely a backing to the theme of the story.

Julian Eltinge Returns.

The "Girl of the Sea" is declared to be a big special production in that it was produced by means of the Williamson sub-sea process. Betty Hilburn is featured as the leading player in this picture.

Julian Eltinge, the stage star, who has not been seen in pictures for some time, comes back in the leading role in "The Adventuress," a story especially adapted to the dual characters which Mr. Eltinge so ably portrays. The production was directed by Fred J. Balshofer and the story was written by Charles Taylor and Tom J. Gerahty. William Clifford, Virginia Rappe, Leo White, R. Di Vanentina, Stanton Back and Chas. Millsfield are in the supporting cast.

Republic officials are of the opinion that "The Gift Supreme" one of the March releases, will be a most popular release. It is a C. R. McCauley production and was directed by O. L. Sellers. It is said that it is one of the best underworld pictures ever produced.

Bernard Durning and Seena Owen, have the leading roles. Others of wide reputation in the cast are Lon Chaney, Jack Curtis, Anna Hernandez, Eugenie Besserer, Scott McKee ,Claire McDowell, Stanton Beck and Tully Marshall.

Tyrone Power in "Great Shadow."

Tyrone Power is featured in "The Great Shadow." This is a timely production and it deals with a vital question of the hour in an extraordinary entertaining manner. Rudolph Berliner is the author and Harley Knoles directed it. It is a product of the Adanac Producing Company.

Different in theme from any of the preceding stories is that of "Man's Plaything," a drama of city life with a strong heart appeal. Republic obtained the production from the J. G. Pictures, Inc., and believe they have in it an especially strong drama that will appeal to all admirers of modern drama. Grace Davison and Montagu Love are the leading players, while the popular screen villian, Stuart Holmes, is in support of the well-known pair. The picture was written and directed by Charles P. Horan.

Inter-Ocean Has Rights to "An Adventuress"

THE Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has acquired for exclusive foreign distribution the rights to "An Adventuress," starring Julian Eltinge, internationally known for his female interpretations on the stage and screen. The news just made public has already caused a decided stir in the foreign film market in view of Julian Eltinge's extended tour throughout the world, which, according to his itinerary, will take him into every principal city.

"'An Adventuress,' starring Julian Eltinge, is the latest cinema acquisition to the list of notable attractions now being distributed by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation throughout the entire world, exclusive of the United States and Canada. The new production marks the return to the screen of the world's most famous impersonator of female characterization.

"There is every indication that 'An Adventuress' will duplicate the success of previous Eltinge productions in foreign markets. In point of story, cast and direction, it is conceded to be better than the previous Eltinge vehicles. Julian Eltinge is now beginning a two-year tour of the principal cities of the world. Publicity and advertising of a nature never attempted before will precede and trail his personal appearances."

Charlie Ray Starts Work on New Addition to His Studios.

By "personally" conducting the first load of earth away. In the group are Architect Nance; Richard Willis, general manager; Charlie Ray; Albert E. Kidder, assistant manager, and Mr. Ray, Sr., father of the star, whose pictures Arthur S. Kane will release through First National.

"Peddler of Lies" Is New Universal Picture

THE special attraction on the Universal release program for the week of March 1, is "The Peddler of Lies," featuring Frank Mayo and Ora Carew. This production was directed by William C. Dowlan and is the screen version of Henry C. Rowland's story, "The Peddler," which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

An able cast, including Bennie Hill, Harold Miller, Truman Van Dyke, James Barrow, Dagmar Gedowsky, Ora Deveraux, Flora Hollister, William Brown and Ray Ripley, makes "The Peddler of Lies" an interesting and entertaining production.

The serial release for the week include "A Perilous Plunge," the tenth episode of "The Lion Man," in which Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin are featured, and "The Flames of Death," the fourth episode of "Elmo the Fearlous," in which Elmo Lincoln is starred. The Lyons and Moran weekly offering is a one-reeler called "Officer, Call a Cop." There is also a rainbow comedy, "A Red Hot Finish," in which Virginia Warwick, Pat Harmon and Cliff Bowe are featured.

A two-reel westerner, "Hair Trigger Stuff," presents Hoot Gibson and Mildred Moore in an original plot. "His Woman," a Jewel production, is the eleventh of the Stage Women's War Relief series to be released. Julia Arthur plays the leading role.

Launches Fan Advertising Drive on "Eve in Exile"

OF importance to exhibitors of "Eve in Exile" is the fact that the producers have launched a "direct to the fan" advertising campaign in the newspapers in all the large cities. A quarter-page advertisement is inserted in the Sunday issues preceding the first showing of this super-drama in each city, and this advertising is tied up with the local exhibitors by a coupon to be cut out and signed by the fans, and returned to the executive offices of the American Film Company.

Those who desire to see Charlotte Walker in "Eve in Exile" are requested to fill in the name of their neighborhood theatres. Whatever advertising the local exhibitors may do on their own account acts as a follow-up.

The name of Cosmo Hamilton is played up in big type as the writer of "Eve in Exile." The cast including beside Charlotte Walker, Thomas Santschi, Wheeler Oakman, Melbourne MacDowell, George Periolat, Violet Palmer, Harvey Clark and Martha Mattox, is given generous space. An attractive cameo portrait of the star is prominently displayed.

Frankie Mann To Co-Star In Pathe Serial.

When the scenario for "Trailed by Three," the fifteen episode serial which Pathe will release April 4, had been completed by Charles T. Dazey, Arthur F. Beck desired to secure Frankie Mann for the leading feminine role; but she had returned to the stage as the Baby Vamp in "Upstairs and Down."

The fact that the studio's call was for a serial star role did not enhance its attractions as it seemed to Miss Mann that it would be more serene to continue treading the boards six nights a week and two afternoon performances than to jump off cliffs, get oneself trampled upon by runaway houses, etc.

But Mr. Beck was determined. Frankie Mann agreed to give the scenario a reading and now is to make her bow, co-starring with Stuart Holmes and directed by Perry Vekroff. Pathe promises a serial of adventure along lines far removed from the conventional.

Ship Prints of "$30,000" to All Hodkinson Branches

PRINTS of J. Warren Kerrigan's newest Robert Brunton picture, "$30,000," announced by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for February 29 release, have gone forward to all Hodkinson branches where arrangements have been made for simultaneous trade showing a week before the release date.

That "$30,000" measures up to the standard set by preceding Kerrigan-Brunton successes may be gleaned from the personnel of the popular star's support in his newest production, a vivid picturization of H. B. Daniel's widely-read story of the same name. The part of "John Trask" is typically Kerrigan. Fritzi Brunette again has the feminine lead and plays a dual role; one moment she is a petted society beauty, the next she is a tough little denizon of the underworld.

Nancy Chase, the English stage beauty, makes her first appearance on the screen in "$30,000." Joseph J. Dowling, long a fixture in J. Warren Kerrigan pictures, does some excellent character acting and Carl Stockdale, prominent as a delineator of heavy roles, portrays the part of a master crook and gambler.

Ernest C. Warde, who directed all of the star's pictures since the amalgamation with Robert Brunton, also officiated in this production.

"Man's Plaything" Named as Title for Grace Davison Film

REPUBLIC DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton N. Busch, president, announced that the production recently bought from J. G. Pictures, Inc., starring Grace Davison and Montague Love, and which was announced in the trade press as "The Convert of Revenge," will be distributed to exhibitors under the title of "Man's Plaything."

Stuart Holmes, the well-known and popular "heavy," is chief of the support of Miss Davison and Mr. Love. Charles P. Horan directed the picture, which is described as a big city drama of dramatic appeal. The release date has been scheduled for March.

Arline Pretty in "Prince of Pines."

Arline Pretty, well-known ingenue and leading woman, has been signed for her first appearance in Selznick productions, according to an announcement by Myron Selznick. Miss Pretty is to have one of the leading roles in the special production, "The Prince of Pines," which is now in production, directed by Burton George.

In Two Weeks Trade Will Have Details of Metro's Co-operative Booking Plan

OFFICIALS of Metro Pictures Corporation are perfecting plans for a new booking arrangement with motion picture showmen throughout the United States. As soon as the project has been worked out in detail, Metro promises to make an announcement in full, which the producing and distributing company believes will be of the utmost interest to every exhibitor and more especially to the smaller ones.

Co-operation between Metro and the individual exhibitor is declared to be the primary purpose of the plan now being whipped into shape. Company officials state that it is intended to protect owners of the smaller theatres against unjust competition, affording even the weakest of them a fair chance for substantial profits and a guarantee of independence no matter how extensive or influential the great chains or circuits of picture houses may become.

On a Co-operative Basis.

Under the proposed arrangement Metro expects to reach every independent exhibitor with its product on a co-operative basis. The actual scope of this co-operation is being considered from every angle and will be made known in full when Metro issues its forthcoming announcement. The guiding heads of the corporation, however, intimate that terms of rental and facilities for obtaining Metro's big special productions will be adjusted to the complete satisfaction of the exhibitors themselves.

In making known Metro's intention to deal with all exhibitor, big and little, on a co-operative basis, the company's president, Richard A. Rowland, again characterized as groundless the apprehension said to exist among some of the smaller theatre owners that the entrance of big financial interests into the industry will curtail their livelihood, if not force them out of business.

"What reason is there for any man to fear that he and his theatre are going to be swallowed up by financially powerful interests?" asked Mr. Rowland. "The notion is ridiculous. In round numbers there are 17,000 picture theatres in the United States. The largest circuit or chain of picture houses in the country, that of Loew's Inc., of which Marcus Loew is president, represents in the neighborhood of 200 houses.

"Say that the other two or three major circuits are counted in, and you have a situation in which 16,500 exhibitors stand in awe of, or are presumed to fear, extinction by 500 exhibitors. The so-called 'big interests' are confronted with odds of more than thirty to one against the circuit. On the face of these figures it should be the circuits rather than the individual exhibitors that cried 'Help!'

"We are proud of Metro pictures, proud of our new friends among the men who own their own houses, and we yearn to increase their number. For these reasons we are perfecting our new booking arrangement on a co-operative scale that is unique."

A statement setting forth in detail every phase of the proposed co-operative arrangement is promised by Metro officials within the next two weeks.

Selznick Corrects Spelling.

In the announcement of the cast of "The Woman God Sent," the all-star Selznick production, which was made some time ago, the name of one of the players, Fanny Cogan, was misspelled. It was published as Fannie Vogin. The Selznick publicity department wishes to correct this error by announcing her correct name as spelled above.

Fitzgerald to Direct Bert Lytell.

Dallas M. Fitzgerald has been selected to direct Bert Lytell in "The Temple of Dawn," the star's next production for Screen Classics, Inc. Mr. Fitzgerald has arrived in Los Angeles from New York City.

Both Marcus Loew and Famous Players Plan Picture Theatres for St. Louis

WITH two new picture theatres—the cost of each running into the millions—in prospect of early erection, St. Louis expects to pride itself on being on a par with any city in the country in the size and magnificence of its screen palaces.

Announcement has been officially made of the completion of negotiations by Marcus Loew, Inc., for a site for a $1,000,000 theatre to be devoted to movies and vaudeville, and a store building, in the heart of the downtown district.

Announcement of the purchase of a site by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is expected at any time. Some time back, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through F. L. Cornwell, its St. Louis counsel, secured an option from the First National Bank on a site on which, it was announced, a combination picture theatre and office building would probably be erected at a cost of $2,500,000. Since the option was secured, with a cash payment of $10,000, nothing definite has been obtainable in the way of information as to when the deal would be closed, or other plans of the company.

Expect Definite Statement Soon.

However, the presence of Max Goldstein, of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, in St. Louis has led to the belief that some definite announcement regarding the closing of the deal may be forthcoming soon.

The site on which the Famous-Players has an option is located at the northwest corner of Seventh and Locust streets and is now occupied by five-story business and office buildings. It fronts 127 feet on Locust street and 164 feet on Seventh street. The price asked for the site is $1,250,000.

Mr. Cornwell stated the plan of the Lasky organization is to erect a fifteen to eighteen story building, the lower portion of which will be given over to one of the finest picture houses in the country, the remainder of the building to be devoted to office space. The new Loew enterprise is to be erected at Eighth street and Washington avenue, just two blocks "around the corner" from the site on which Famous Players-Lasky Company has its option.

Annual Rental of $60,000.

Announcement of the signing of a ninety-nine-year lease for the site was made by the Mercantile Trust Company, acting as agent for Loew. The annual rental will be $60,000. The site has a frontage of 135 feet on Washington avenue and extends 226 feet on Eighth street. A five-story and a six-story building, which now occupy the site, are to be torn down, it was announced, as soon as the tenants' leases expire, and erection of the new theatre building will be started, it is expected, within two months.

Leo Friedman, of New York, counsel for the Loew corporation, signed the lease for the ground.

The theatre will seat 4,400 and will exhibit feature films and vaudeville at popular prices. Arthur Moskowitz, manager of Loew's Garrick Theatre, commenting on the new house, stated that it will be an exact duplicate of Loew's Metropolitan in New York City, and will undoubtedly be the finest picture house in Missouri.

Cameraman Chester Lyons to Stay with Charles Ray

CHESTER LYONS, veteran camera man, is the latest acquisition of Charles Ray as an independent star. Ray has brought with him to the studios of the Charles Ray Productions some of the best talent with which he was formerly associated, having last week signed up Jerome Storm as his director. The addition of Cameraman Lyons is the final coup which will insure continued technical excellence for the products of the star, to be presented by Arthur S. Kane for First National release.

Known for many years in the industry as "Chet" Lyons, the veteran photographer will come on as leading cameraman with the newly organized Charles Ray Productions, Inc. In this post, Lyons will not only manipulate the camera for Charles Ray, but will work with the star, director and electrician in devising new methods of lighting, as well as new tricks of photography.

Turning the crank for Ray is no new experience for Cameraman Lyons. He has photographed most of the films in which Ray has appeared. Lyons, Jerome Storm, the director, and Charles Ray, the star, have worked together for many years, and their association is not only of a professional nature, but an unusual example of friendship and co-operation.

Selznick Officials Praise McCauley's "Gift Supreme"

A PRIVATE showing of "The Gift Supreme" revealed to the Selznick and Republic officials what in their opinion is one of the best pictures made for some time. The entire group of officials expressed themselves as being not only satisfied but elated. "The Gift Supreme" was obtained for Republic release from the C. R. McCauley's Photoplays. It has an all-star cast and was directed by O. L. Sellers.

The reviewers at the private showing were impressed with the manner in which the entire cast portrayed their parts. Bernard Durning, who scored a success in "When Bearcat Went Dry," and Seena Owen are in the leading roles. Both of these players do excellent work, but no less commendable is the work of Lon Chaney, Jack Curtis, Harry Lonsdale, Eugenie Besserer, Melbourne MacDowell, Tully Marshall, Claire McDowell, Scott McKee and Anna Hernandez.

M. P. T. Association Incorporates.

Papers incorporating the M. P. T. Association of the World were filed last week with Secretary of State Hugo by James and Lillian Quinn, A. G. Maul, J. C. Brubaker and A. M. Bischoff, all of New York City. The company's principal office will be located in New York.

In its papers the company outlines its purpose as being one to stimulate public interest and to generally elevate the standard of motion picture films and plays. It will also diffuse reliable information on motion picture plays and scenarios, as well as to furnish the best methods of production and exploitation. The company also intends to act as a mediator in differences that may arise between the various branches of the motion picture and theatrical business.

Topics Are Widely Advertised.

In four-column, twelve-inch advertisements of the Literary Digest, appearing in 350 daily newspapers in the country, "Topics of the Day," released by Pathe, is being advertised. A striking topic from each week's issue is selected to appear at the top of all the advertising.

Exhibitors Get New Prints of Record Selznick Pictures

THE Select exchanges throughout the country are now supplied with new prints of several Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Norma Talmadge productions. These prints, it is made known, are some of the ones in which these stars made their biggest bids for popularity and success, and include "The Heart of Wetona," with Norma Talmadge; "A Pair of Silk Stockings," with Constance Talmadge; "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," with Constance Talmadge; "The Common Law," starring Clara Kimball Young, and "Her Silent Sacrifice," starring Alice Brady.

Manager Henry Siegel, of the New York branch of Select, is quoted as saying "'Old wood to burn; old books to read; old friends to trust.' A very ancient and very true bit of philosophy. And particularly true when you apply it to the film industry is that last phrase, 'old friends to trust.'

"Should a picture be shown once and then relegated to obscurity? No. And I know that exhibitors all over New York State and other states are echoing that 'No.' Select's New York branch is distributing dozens of favorite box office attractions of which new prints have been made—and they are making good for the exhibitor and pleasing the public beyond measure."

Universal to Release "Burnt Wings" March 29

HOW a young wife sacrifices all that she holds dear to bring her husband back to health, and how this very sacrifice creates a chasm that threatens to engulf them both, is told in "Burnt Wings," a photoplay starring Frank Mayo, which Universal announces for release on March 29.

"Burnt Wings" is an adaptation of "The Primrose Path," the stage success of Bayard Veiller, author of "The Thirteenth Chair," "Within the Law" and other successes. The work of Mr. Mayo is up to his usual standard.

Christy Cabanne, who supervised the production, was formerly chief-of-staff for David W. Griffith, and in "Burnt Wings" he had every possible aid to a perfect photodrama—a story of America's leading playwright, a cast including Josephine Hill, Betty Blythe, Rudolph Christians and Beatrice Burnham, and a production that stopped at no expense in the smallest detail.

King to Produce Independently.

Burton King has completed arrangements to produce a series of pictures under his own name. His first six pictures will be distributed by Hallmark. Production will be begun at once on the first of the series, a comedy drama by Lawrence McCloskey and Harry Chandlee, based on "The Road to Arcady," a novel by Edith Sessions Stupper, which appeared in serial form in The Ladies Home Journal. Mr. King has leased the Mirror studios at Glendale, Long Island, and is now engaged in choosing his first cast and arranging other details preparatory to commencing production.

Early Bookings Indicate Great Success for Edgar Lewis' "Other Men's Shoes"

THAT "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis's initial big special production for Pathe release, is destined to take its place amongst the foremost motion pictures of the year, is quite apparent from the booking record it has established during the first fortnight of its distribution, according to Pathe.

In the first two weeks of its issue, "Other Men's Shoes" has surpassed the great record made by "The Thirteenth Chair" and "Common Clay," Pathe's greatest successes, in the same period. The prospects are that the Lewis attractions will materially surpass the financial returns on each of these offerings, Pathe announces.

In Chicago alone, four of the most representative first-run houses—the Alcazar, Playhouse, Woodlawn and Pantheon—have booked the picture for week runs. The Lubliner and Trinz circuit will also play the production, and, in addition, during the first week of the campaign more than a score of leading Chicago neighborhood houses also were brought into line.

Highly Successful in Chicago.

On the whole, Pathe's feature business in the Chicago territory has taken on a powerful impetus with the recent addition of a staff of six special feature sales representatives and with the appointment of W. B. Frank as branch feature sales manager. Mr. Frank works under Branch Manager Edward Eschmann. He is considered one of the most successful feature salesmen in the entire Pathe organization.

What is true of the Chicago territory is true also of every other section of the country, Pathe reports from its early returns on the picture.

The premiere New England presentation will be held in Providence, where it is booked for a week's run. Most of the foremost screen attractions are receiving their baptism of criticism in Providence now, following a custom established by legitimate producers, who find the Rhode Island metropolis a profitable "jumping off" point.

Chicago, however, is setting the pace. Already this exchange has obtained more than half of its quota, which was set at an exceptionally high mark by the feature sales department of Pathe.

Maigne To Direct Mary Miles Minter.

Charles Maigne, who recently directed Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead," and has a number of other notable productions to his credit, has been engaged by Realart Pictures Corporation to direct Mary Miles Minter in her next production.

Selznick Production Keeps Up; Eastern Studios Surmount Difficulties of Storm

WHEN the storm king who had been reigning in the East for several days, demoralizing the commercial life of New York and its kindred cities, decided to abdicate he left a trail of upset routine from Maine to Washington.

But, according to report, the Selznick studios at Fort Lee, N. J., and the Bronx surmounted the difficulties and when the sun peeped out work was progressing on current films as though California weather had prevailed all the time.

Excellent progress is reported on Elaine Hammerstein's next picture, "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrne," which is being made at both Eastern studios and on location in various sections of the East. Edward Langford has the leading male role opposite Miss Hammerstein in this production.

The Herbert Kaufman weeklies, from editorials written by Mr. Kaufman in the daily papers, are said to be progressing on schedule despite the weather handicap.

"The Flapper" Next Olive Thomas.

The next picture for Olive Thomas, following the release of "Youthful Folly," which is announced for March 8, will be "The Flapper" instead of "Jenny" as was previously reported. "Footlights and Shadows" is declared to have won further popularity for Miss Thomas as a Selznick star. Alan Crosland is named as the director who will make "The Flapper."

Ralph Ince, Zena Keefe and the company which journeyed to the Northland for locations on "The Law Bringers" are apparently meeting with great success in getting the scenes wanted, according to advices received at the Selznick offices.

The Burton George company, in New Hampshire filming "Prince of Pines," reports of good progress being made in getting snow scenes. Favorable reports of progress made also come from Director George, whose story in hand calls for such weather as he is now encountering in the New Hampshire hills.

Eugene O'Brien's Next.

Eugene O'Brien's next Selznick picture, following "A Fool and His Money" which is scheduled for March 29 release, has been announced as "The Figurehead." It is from the pen of John Lynch, scenario chief for Selznick, who has written many stories which have proven successful on the screen. Work on "The Figurehead" is expected to start shortly.

Elaine Hammerstein is also scheduled to start on "Daphne, Correspondent," as soon as she finishes work on "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrne."

American Legion Post in Shelbyville Aided Exploitation of "Copperhead"

SHELBYVILLE happened to be the first Indiana city in the territory of the Cincinnati Famous Players-Lasky exchange to play "The Copperhead," Lionel Barrymore's dramatic super-special. Manager W. C. Meloy, of the Strand Theatre, made a special trip to Manager Harris P. Wolfberg's office at Cincinnati to get the production for a Lincoln Birthday showing. Having secured it for a state "premiere," Mr. Meloy went to the exploitation of the engagement with the same vigor and vim that he used to put over "The Miracle Man" and "Male and Female."

Paul Meloy, son of the manager, is a World War veteran himself and he made a speech at a meeting of Victory Post, No. 7, American Legion, telling them of the stirring Americanism of "The Copperhead." He got their undivided and enthusiastic support, and when the engagement started there was a theatre full of American Legion veterans, attending in a body and making "The Copperhead" the feature of their Lincoln Birthday anniversary celebration. A speech by a war hero was on the program, as Secretary Lane requested.

With the co-operation of Jerome H. Cook, of the Cincinnati Paramount Artcraft exploitation forces, Mr. Meloy staged a special private showing of "The Copperhead" in advance of the opening. Among the guests was none less than Frank Rembusch, who operates the opposition theatre in Shelbyville in addition to piloting the destinies of the National Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Rembusch and his wife joined with other prominent Shelbyville citizens in praising "The Copperhead."

As a result of the private showing, the Rev. A. F. Von Tobel spoke of "The Copperhead" in his Sunday sermon. Superintendent of Schools J. W. Holton heartily recommended the picture to his school children and everybody in Shelbyville, Frank Wolfe and Walter J. Myers gave the American Legion's official approval and the newspapers printed lengthy comment.

"The Forged Bride" with Mary MacLaren Heads Universal List for March 8 Week

SHOULD a child suffer for the sins of the parents? That is the question dealt with in "The Forged Bride," the Universal Special Attraction starring Mary MacLaren, which tops the release program for the week of March 8. The production is based on J. G. Hawks' story, "Sins of the Father," a rather misleading name as it wrongly suggests a sex drama. It is, however, the story of a forger who is sent to jail while trying to provide for his daughter, who has remained ignorant of his occupation. Miss MacLaren gives a fine portrayal of the daughter who marries into a rich judge's family. Douglas Gerrard directed.

The Western feature release for the week is "Runnin' Straight," featuring Hoot Gibson and Virginia Faire. This is the first production in which Miss Faire, winner of the "Screen Classic" beauty contest, has appeared.

The comedy program includes another Lyons-Moran polite society comedy. This time they appear in "Wives and Old Sweethearts," which is just another spasm of the domestic difficulties they regularly experience in their laugh reels.

Another comedy which is listed for release is "My Dog Pal," featuring Brownie, the canine wonder.

Included in the serial releases for the week are "At the Mercy of the Monsters," the eleventh episode of "The Lion Man," in which Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin are featured; and the fifth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," starring Elmo Lincoln in "The Smugglers' Cave."

Alice Brady Views "The Fear Market."

Alice Brady, Realartist, was in New York City last week during her stage engagement in "Forever After" at the Majestic Theatre in Brooklyn. Miss Brady visited the home offices of Realart Pictures Corporation and viewed a special showing of "The Fear Market," her recent production. She expressed much pleasure at seeing the completed film.

Famous Players Draw on Paris for Late Fashions

PARAMOUNT ARTCRAFT pictures of the future are to be more firmly entrenched in public favor than ever as the mirror of the latest and best in fashions, according to a letter received from Milton E. Hoffman, studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., of London.

Mr. Hoffman has completed arrangements in Paris for the establishment of a costume department, which will create costumes from the latest and most popular Paris fashions for the use of the players working in the studios at Islington. It is expected that the benefits of this department will be felt in America, so that all of the producing organizations engaged in the making of Paramount Artcraft productions will have the use of costumes of the most up-to-date fashion.

Sennett Plans to Present Musical Show on Broadway

MACK SENNETT'S personal representative, E. M. Asher, who is now in New York for the purpose of establishing an eastern organization and handling the releasing arrangement for the five reel comedy feature, "Down on the Farm,," announced that plans are under way for the presentation of a Sennett show on Broadway at an early date.

Several scripts and books are under consideration, and Mr. Asher is also negotiating with prominent lyric and song writers. The plans call for bringing several of the Sennett California Bathing Girls to New York, and probably some of the leading Sennett stars.

In case Mr. Sennett, who is expected in New York within a short time, arrives in time, he will supervise the production, adding some of his unique humorous situations. Later, the show will be converted into a Sennett film special.

Frances Marion Writes Story for Olive Thomas Productions

EXHIBITORS and public will no doubt be interested in the announcement that the next starring subject for Olive Thomas, Selznick star, was written by Frances Marion. Miss Marion is one of the best known and most capable writers in the industry. She has written many of Mary Pickford's most successful plays.

The story which Miss Thomas will use, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, is called "The Flapper." It is an original Marion story, for which the well-known writer also did the continuity.

Myron Selznick, head of production of the Selznick Enterprises, is said to be well pleased with the story, so much so in fact, that he withdrew a plan he had made for another story in order to produce "The Flapper" in advance.

Anita Booth in "Prince of Pines."

The announcement that "Prince of Pines" is to be an early motion picture production from the laboratories of Selznick Pictures took on added interest when it was made known that Anita Booth has been added to the cast. Miss Booth is the winner of a recent contest held by a picture magazine and as a consequence has been widely exploited.

Feinman Will Conduct Inter-Ocean Publicity

GEORGE W. NEWGASS, vice president of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, announces the appointment of A. L. Feinman as advertising and publicity director to succeed Bert Adler.

Mr. Feinman, who is well-known to the trade, comes to Inter-Ocean after a thorough training in the advertising and publicity branches of the motion picture business. He was formerly connected with Select Pictures Corporation's publicity department as associate editor of Motion Picture Times, an exhibitor's service journal.

Mr. Feinman is familiarizing himself with Inter-Ocean requirements preparatory to mapping out an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in behalf of the company.

President Kane Receives Scores of Congratulations

J. VON HERBERG, the well known exhibitor of Seattle, is the latest of many prominent figures in the industry to declare Charles Ray a star of unlimited possibilities and "one of the biggest bets in the country."

In a letter of congratulation to President Kane of Kane Pictures, Mr. von Herberg makes plain his estimate of Charles Ray. Since the news of Ray's tie-up with the Kane corporation to make pictures for First National release, similar expressions of expectations have come into the local offices from such well known exhibitors as Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C.; Harold B. Franklin, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.; W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic and Colonial Theatres, Jackson, Mich.; Thomas D. Soriero, of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., and other showmen of equal standing in the industry.

William De Mille Comes East for Conferences

HAVING put the finishing touches on "The Prince Chap," his first special production for Paramount Artcraft, William DeMille came to New York from Hollywood for a series of conferences with the heads of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. DeMille will remain in New York for a week during which he expects to be busy going over new plays and laying plans for the series of William DeMille productions which are scheduled by Jesse L. Lasky. "The Prince Chap" is the first of this series of productions.

Norma Talmadge Film Goes Big.

Lewis J. Selznick announces the report of Manager Henry Siegel of the New York Select Exchange which states that the bookings on the Norma Talmadge Special, "She Loves and Lies," are continuing to arrive at a truly remarkable rate. It has been so highly commended and received wherever it has been shown that Mr. Selznick offers the opinion that it will play in time to come, to capacity houses in every theatre in this country. It has been drawing capacity crowds ever since its release.

Olive Thomas, Owen Moore, Eugene O'Brien Are Starred in Selznick March Releases

THREE star productions and one super-special subject are announced for March release by Selznick Pictures through the Select exchanges. The features known as star subjects will present Olive Thomas, Owen Moore and Eugene O'Brien, supported by casts that are declared to be top-notch. The super-special has a large cast of well known and capable players, headed by Zena Keefe.

The order in which the subjects will go to exhibitors is announced as follows: "Youthful Folly," starring Olive Thomas, on March 8; "The Woman God Sent," with Zena Keefe, on March 15; "His Word of Honor," starring Owen Moore, on March 22, and "A Fool and His Money," starring Eugene O'Brien, on March 29.

Believing that exhibitors are interested in the nature of the releases scheduled, Selznick Pictures accompanied its announcement with a brief explanation of each film.

Olive Thomas is the star and author of the first March release. This is a story especially appropriate for the action of this star and her beauty adds to the attractiveness of the production. Alan Crosland directed.

The second production is the special called "The Woman God Sent" taken from the story by Sophie Irene Loeb. It is an intensely interesting drama with an all-star cast headed by Zena Keefe. Larry Trimble directed. The cast includes, besides Miss Keefe, Joe King as leading man, Warren Cook, William Fredericks, Louise Powell, William Gudgson, William Magner, Russell Hewitt, Duncan Penwarden, and John H. Wade.

Moore in "His Word of Honor."

Owen Moore is starred in "His Word of Honor," from a story originally published in the All-Story magazine. Gloria Hope, Henry Miller, Jr., Emmett King and Charles Arling have important parts in this production. Wesley Ruggles directed.

In "A Fool and His Money" Eugene O'Brien is said to do some of the best work of his career. This picture was taken from the story of the same title by George Barr McCutcheon. In carrying out the production of the picture, Robert Ellis, the director, held closely to the original story.

Big Wheat Crops and Oil Wells Bring Prosperity to Southwest Exhibitors

A WAVE of unprecedented prosperity in which everybody is sharing and in which motion pictures appear to be the popular fad is sweeping over the Southwest, according to Fred. B. Pickrel, branch manager of the Pathe exchange at Oklahoma City. Mr. Pickrel is on a visit to the home office. He is the first of the branch managers to reach New York in accordance with the new system which willl take the place of the annual sales conference.

Under the new arrangement the branch managers will not all come to New York at the same time, but each one in turn will spend a week in the executive offices. During that week the particular problems of the manager's territory will be discussed and he will be given every opportunity to prepare himself for his work in the coming year.

"The Southwest, territory operated out of Oklahoma City, is rapidly developing into the richest little piece of ground in the entire country," Mr. Pickrel said. "The oil boom is going over big and enormous fortunes are really being made. Of course, high wages are the order of the day and although that means the higher cost of living for all of us, the motion picture business men cannot kick for they are getting their share of the prosperity. Tulsa, with a population of 60,000, has fifty-four millionaires.

"Few good road shows get into the territory in these days, and those that do come around are two or three days old. The people demand entertainment and naturally they turn to the motion picture theatres. The exhibitors, who have been fighting along for years, realize that their day is here and they are building and expanding theatres in every direction. Orchestras are supplanting pianos and old organs in the smaller towns, and the Southwest exhibitor is generally showing them that he can put a show over when the business justifies it."

"The Hope" Is First of Five Drury Lane Dramas To Be Released by Metro Pictures

"THE HOPE," will be the first of the five Drury Lane melodramas purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation to be completed for the screen and released. During his trip to Europe several months ago, Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, acquired the rights to the quintet of plays in London and thus far two of them have been played in production by Screen Classics, Inc., at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Metro originally planned that "The Best of Luck" should be the initial release of the five. Then, in order, were to follow "The Hope," "Hearts Are Trumps," "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriages of Mayfair."

"The Best of Luck" was gotten under way last fall, but the picture has encountered delay and "The Hope," started meanwhile, has passed it in production progress and so will be the first release of the five English melodramas.

The great climax of "The Best of Luck" comes in a sequence of thrilling scenes amid the barnacle-encrusted ruins of an ancient Spanish galleon five fathoms down from the surface of the sea. Submarine photography is necessitated in the shooting of these scenes. In addition there are many surface shots leading to the dramatic subsea incidents.

No such obstacles loomed up in the course of producing "The Hope." The powerful smash scenes in this melodrama are in connection with that classic of the turf, the English Derby. "The Hope" is scheduled as a March release.

Prize Contest Features Exploitation Launched for Metro's "Modern Salome"

IN launching a "tremendous" exploitation campaign for "A Modern Salome," the first of the productions starring Hope Hampton to reach the screen, Hope Hampton Productions, Inc., and Metro announce a $3,000 prize contest. It is offered as an "invaluable stunt" by which exhibitors of the picture will reap a large amount of advertising without extra expense to them.

Exhibitors booking Hope Hampton in "A Modern Salome" will be able, under this offer, to invite motion picture fans everywhere to participate in the contest. The cash prizes, ranging from $1,000 to $25, are to be awarded to the persons submitting what are adjudged to be the best essays of 500 words or less in answer to five questions relating to the star and story of the film.

The terms of the contest as arranged by Hope Hampton Productions, Inc., provide that any adult person shall be eligible to compete, regardless of whether that person shall have seen the picture or not. In short, nobody is obligated to attend the theatre showing Hope Hampton in "A Modern Salome" in order to qualify as a contestant for one of the prizes.

Metro Promises National Publicity.

Metro has launched a nation-wide publicity campaign. In this connection, a great deal of space will be given the contest in the "fan" magazines throughout the country, and among the paper available for the production will be a three-sheet poster with the contest featured upon it.

The rules provide that any person may compete by submitting an essay of not more than 500 words, answering the following five questions:

1. Who was Salome in Biblical history and what did she do?
2. What is the strongest dramatic situation in the plot of "A Modern Salome?"
3. How would you describe Hope Hampton's type of beauty?
4. What is your ideal of what a motion picture star should be?
5. What is the lesson taught by the story of "A Modern Salome?"

Exhibitors will be provided with a synopsis of the plot for free distribution to the public upon application at the box office.

For the first prize Hope Hampton Productions, Inc., will pay a cash prize of $1,000. A second prize of $500 will be paid to the person submitting the second best letter or essay, and in addition there will be five prizes of $100 each, ten prizes of $50 each, and twenty prizes of $25 each.

Announce the Judges.

The contest will close January 1, 1921.

Postpone Release of "Empty Arms."

Despite the fact that they have received many large offers from national distributors and independent state rights buyers for their initial offering, "Empty Arms," starring Gail Kane and directed by Frank Reicher from Willard King Bradley's screen story, Lester Park and Edward Whiteside are holding back particulars of the release date and distribution plans of the picture until the return of Byron Park, president of Photoplay Libraries, exclusive selling agents for the Park-Whiteside series of unusual productions.

Guy Empey Returns from Louisiana and Reports Finishing Special Production

GUY EMPEY has returned from the South and announces that the filming of his special production, "Oil," has been completed. Mr. Empey, his co-star, Florence Evelyn Martin, and leading members of his company have concluded a two weeks' stay in the region of the Louisiana oil fields. Headquarters were established at Shreveport, and the work of picture-making proceeded both in and around that centre of the oil boom, and at Caddo Lake, Homer and other hot-beds of the oil-seeking activity.

Mr. Empey found that the tales of Shreveport's mushroom growth had not been exaggerated, and his company found hard the task of securing living quarters inside that city, whose population has been tripled within the year. The courtesy of Mayor Ford stood the party in good stead, however, and resulted in their final bivouac in one of the hotels of the city.

While some of the scenes were made inside Shreveport, most of the filming required actual location on the oil fields. Conditions were far from ideal, the inclement weather of the winter having extended to this section of the South. Nevertheless, Empey secured all the oil fields color and atmosphere he could possibly use, and was enabled to give a new twist to the ending of his story which sends its dramatic values high.

Empey declares that in "Oil" he has easily outdone anything he has before produced. He said that the titles had been virtually completed, and the cutting and assembling of the big picture would occupy another three weeks.

Bayard Veiller Signs to Write Four Original Scripts a Year for Metro

BAYARD VEILLER, noted American dramatist, author of "Within the Law," has signed a contract with Richard A. Rowland and Marcus Loew by the terms of which he will write four scripts a year for Metro Pictures Corporation and will cooperate in their production.

Mr. Veiller has been assigned an office in the administration building at the Metro studios in Hollywood, and has taken possession of it. His first picture play will be a melodrama for Bert Lytell.

Bayard Veiller is one of the few American dramatists who have achieved an international reputation. That came as a result of his notable drama, "Within the Law," which, besides running for five years in the United States and Canada, had record runs in London, Paris, Berlin, Melbourne, Petrograd and Copenhagen.

Mr. Veiller is the author of thirteen successful plays, ten of which have been made into motion pictures. He has written one original script for motion pictures: a story of the South seas recently completed for Louise Glaum.

Vitagraph's Montreal Cashier Embezzles.

Charles E. Chapman, former cashier of the Montreal branch of the Vitagraph Company, pleaded guilty before Judge Bazin of Montreal last week to the charge of having stolen $4,850 from the company's funds. The defalcations extended over the period of a year, it was found, and during this time he had used the money in gambling on the horse races.

The money was obtained by forging checks and by manipulating the bank accounts of the branch. The accused has been held for sentence.

Realart Makes a Record of Seven Straight on Broadway

THE Rialto Theatre, New York, has booked Mary Miles Minter's latest production, "Judy of Rogue's Harbor," for the week of February 29.

This makes a record of seven straight Realart attractions playing four important Broadway houses.

Says J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart:

"It is almost incredible that any firm, let alone one that has been in existence only a short time, should be able to produce seven consecutive pictures that could obtain Broadway bookings.

"Our first production, 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room,' an Emile Chautard production, played a three-weeks' engagement at the Broadway Theatre. Then the Capitol Theatre booked 'Soldiers of Fortune,' an Allan Dwan production, and came back a short time ago with 'The Luck of the Irish,' also an Allan Dwan production.

"A second case. Some few months ago the Rivoli Theatre played 'Anne of Green Gables' as its feature attraction. Then it booked 'The Fear Market.'

"And again. The Rialto Theatre last fall played 'Erstwhile Susan.' Now it is to show 'Judy of Rogue's Harbor.' It is Realart's intention to continue making the sort of pictures that will bring Broadway bookings. We have just started."

Walsh Makes Additions to His New Producing Staff

R. A. WALSH has made several additions to his staff during the last week in preparation for work on his first production for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Ralph S. Mahon, formerly executive secretary to James West, chief executive of the Boy Scouts of America during the million-dollar Boy Scout campaign, has joined R. A. Walsh Productions as personal secretary to Mr. Walsh. He is making his temporary headquarters at the Algonquin Hotel, New York.

James T. O'Donohue, formerly connected with the office of Charles B. Dillingham, the stage producer, has signed up as head of the Walsh play-reading department. Mr. Walsh has recently had his staff searching the city for suitable offices for the new organization. His temporary headquarters are at 1465 Broadway, the home of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

The following announcement regarding policy is made: "As in all past productions, the watchword of the R. A. Walsh super-features will be real human, clean drama. Mr. Walsh feels that there is no excuse for morbidness in photoplays when it is considered that even darkness has its rays of light. It is up to the director to find these rays and produce a thing of beauty rather than a morbid tale. Mr. Walsh realizes that life is not all happiness and sunshine, but that sadness can be brought out in a realistic way without over-emphasizing the shadows."

Canadian Theatre Comes Back.

After lying idle for practically the duration of the war, the Grand Opera House of St. Thomas, Ontario, is being remodeled for use by the Trans-Canada Theatre Company, which consists of a syndicate of British and Canadian interests. The theatre has been purchased by this company and upwards of $20,000 is being spent to modernize the house to accommodate both moving picture performances and road shows. The company owns or controls numerous other theatres across Canada.

Browning Finishes Cutting "The Virgin of Stamboul"

TOD BROWNING, who directed Priscilla Dean in her recent production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," has just completed the cutting of that film, which will be sent to the New York office immediately. The footage shot for this Universal-Jewel feature has been reduced to eight reels, and General Manager Tarkington Baker and other officials at Universal City who viewed the picture after its final titling are a unit in pronouncing it a real gem.

H. H. Van Loan wrote the story especially for Priscilla Dean. She appears as a beggar girl on the streets of this Turkish city. She is a wild desert girl, with the temper of a tigress and the passion of an untamed gypsy.

Prominent in the cast are Wheeler Oakman, Wallace Beery, E. A. Warren, Edward Burns, Eugenie Forde and Ethel Ritchie.

Nearly six months were spent in the filming of the picture, six weeks of which were occupied with making desert scenes in Arizona. Out on the hot sands a Turkish city was constructed. At Universal City over forty individual sets were constructed, the most important of which were six different streets in Constantinople, a panorama of Stamboul, the exterior and the interior of the mosque, the great bazaar, the Sultana Gardens and the rug weaver's home.

Mary Roberts Rinehart and Governor Cantu Face Camera

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART, whose first picture for Goldwyn-Eminent Authors, "Dangerous Days," is scheduled for release on March 14, has just paid a visit to Governor Esteban Cantu of the northern district of lower California. Both Mrs. Rinehart and the governor appeared in a motion picture with a number of leading actors and actresses of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Mrs. Rinehart wrote the scenario, which is entitled "Half Hours With Persons You Would Like To Know." The governor and a number of officials conducted Mrs. Rinehart and the Goldwyn actors to the California-Mexico ranch out of Mexicali, where most of the scenes of the picture were filmed.

C. T. Wardlaw, general manager of the ranch, which embraces 800,000 acres and affords every variety of scenery which can be found in the famed Imperial Valley, extended the hospitality of the ranch to the governor and the noted writer, and every facility possible was afforded the ranch's guests for the successful filming of the picture.

Mrs. Rinehart has written the scenario for the entire series of pictures, which will be released in serial form, and is herself taking personal supervision of the production. Some of the best-known people in the United States will appear in the individual episodes. The episode just filmed had as the center and leading actor Governor Cantu.

Seven Day Showing of First Episode of "Lost City" in Cleveland a Big Success

IN the face of a biting blizzard, records were established in the first presentation in the United States of "The Lost City," the Selig wild animal serial featuring Juanita Hansen, in the New Orpheum Theatre, Cleveland, Sunday, February 15, according to an announcement from Warner Brothers. Not only did the New Orpheum do a "turn-away" business Sunday, but set a new attendance record for Monday, though that day was little better than Sunday from a weather standpoint. The business continued all week, establishing more than an attendance record.

The showing of one episode of a serial for an entire seven days was an experiment being watched by exhibitors. This first showing of "The Lost City," arranged by George Ryder, general manager of the Paul Gustanovic Theatres, and by the staff of Standard Film Service Company, which is handling the Warner Production in Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

The New Orpheum has not shown a serial for more than four years. The house was remodeled a year ago and has been playing big pictures to a high class patronage, and the offering of a serial was attended with misgiving.

The use of an episode running seven days solid was another experiment, but maintenance of attendance justified this innovation.

Possibly no more interesting angle of this serial presentation can be mentioned than the exploitation employed. Trailers showing startling bits of the serial were shown in the New Orpheum and also in the Strand, another of the Gustanovic downtown houses, for two weeks in advance of the opening of "The Lost City." The lobbies of both theatres were filled with animal cut-outs also. Framed paintings from the serial and house program carried announcements for two weeks in advance.

The newspaper exploitation was of the briefest description. No advertising appeared until Saturday before the opening, then quarter pages were used in the two evening newspapers and half pages in the Sunday papers. All these advertisements stressed the wild animals.

News announcements were carried in the afternoon newspapers Thursday before the opening, and in the one morning newspaper Saturday before the opening.

An unusual feature of the display advertising was the fact that all the space was devoted to "The Lost City," except for one line across the bottom of the advertisements in which the feature picture was announced. The subordination of the feature to the three-reel first episode of a serial was another innovation.

A moving picture man dropped in on General Manager Ryder well along in the evening Sunday. "It's too bad you had to have such a blizzard for your opening," "I couldn't take care of more people if they did come out," answered Ryder; "we've been turning them away all day." And he took his visitor inside to see the packed house for the final show.

Mabel Normand Wins in Contest.

All doubt as to who is the most popular star with patrons of the twelve theatres conducted by the Wehner Amusement Company, Brooklyn, N. Y., was settled recently when the votes were counted in a contest launched by Manager George J. Wehner. Mabel Normand, the comedienne of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, was returned the winner by a large majority.

Red Cross Employs Moving Pictures to Teach Sanitation to the Serbians

CAN you remember when and where you saw your first moving picture? And do you recall what it was about? It is a pretty safe bet that it was not an educational film. And yet that is the experience in store for the young people and grown-ups of Serbia, in their first introduction to the world of motion pictures.

The American Red Cross is using the screen to teach Serbians how to combat tuberculosis, malaria, typhus and other infectious diseases that have ravaged this section of the Balkan peninsula. They have been found valuable assets in the Red Cross campaign for health and sanitation, and peasants who never have seen anything of the kind before come for miles to see the new pictures that move and tell stories.

The American Red Cross is co-operating with the ministry of health, organized last fall by the Serbian government, for the prevention and cure of disease and the introduction of modern methods of sanitation.

Col. Edgar E. Hume, of Frankfort, Ky., is the American Red Cross commissioner to Serbia in charge of this task of relief and reconstruction. A string of American laboratories, dispensaries, hospitals and clinics has been organized, each one of which is the center for the American workers and health propaganda. The motion picture instruction is an important feature of this work.

Instruction in health, sanitation and tuberculosis prevention is needed, especially among the 350,000 war orphans of Serbia, 60,000 of whom have lost both parents. It is hoped that the soap and water campaign, carried on in the Red Cross moving pictures, will benefit these pathetic young lives.

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" Will Open Summer Drive for Famous Players

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the Paramount-Artcraft picture in which John Barrymore is starred in the Robert Louis Stevenson dual role, will probably be released some time in June. According to present plans, this big super special, upon which much time and money have been lavished, will serve to inaugurate the summer season.

A dramatic version of the Stevenson story was first acted by Mansfield on May 9, 1887, at the Boston Museum, Boston. The following September it was presented at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, and then Mansfield took the production on a long tour of the larger cities, going as far west as St. Louis. The following summer he went to London and played a highly successful engagement at the Lyceum.

In the meantime, Daniel E. Bandman, the noted German-American actor, presented another version at Niblo's Garden, New York City. Still another version, by J. Comyne Carr, was presented in January 1910, at the Queen's Theatre, London, by Henry B. Irving, eldest son of Sir Henry Irving.

Bert Adler Has Not Severed His Connection with Realart

AN item comprising six lines with a one line head in the lower right hand corner of a page in last issue of Moving Picture World has caused Bert Adler a lot of embarrassment. Let somebody say to Bert that Moving Picture World is not read in the trade and he will tell them differently.

While working in Indianapolis in fulfillment of his duties with Realart as exploitation manager, Mr. Adler sent a postal card to Sam Spedon, the wording of which transmitted the impression to the man who "Keeps in Personal Touch" that Adler had transferred his activities to Indianapolis as publicity promoter for Barret McCormick at Circle Theatre. Such was not the case.

Mr. Adler is traveling in promotion of "Soldiers of Fortune" and was in Indianapolis only for a few days in connection with the showing of Realart features at the Circle. Mr. Adler telegraphed to Moving Picture World from Cincinnati to correct the misunderstanding and to ask Moving Picture World to explain that he is still with Realart and has no wish to sever the agreeable connection.

Therefore we gladly correct a misapprehension that was originally based on the eagerness of Sam Spedon to fulfill his mission as a reporter of the individual "doings" in filmdom. Mr. Adler continues as manager of the exploitation department for Realart specials and Moving Picture World gladly devotes this increased space to correcting the six line item that originated from Mr. Adler's postal card.

"Clip and Paste"

Many busy New Yorkers stopped to see what it was all about as camera men, directors and actors, including Miss Elaine Hammerstein shot scenes about the Hotel Astor and the Pennsylvania Hotel. But then New Yorkers will stop in droves to watch snow shovelers at work.

"The Miracle of Love" is being revealed in photoplay by Lucille Cotton. It is a Cosmopolitan production, meaning that the story originally appeared in the magazine of that name.

Shirley Mason, star of "Her Elephant Man," now bringing the circus atmosphere into theatres as harbinger of spring, is at work on another William Fox production, "Molly and I," with Howard Mitchell directing the work.

"Did We Forget Anything?"
Colleen Moore and Eddie Barry, after a second-story act in Christie's "Her Bridal Night."

William Fox recently dedicated his new studios—five minutes from Broadway, and within easy walk of Times Square, heart of the metropolis. In this new building every feature of film production goes on under and upon the same roof—for there is a mammoth roof-garden studio, where several companies can work at once without rubbing elbows one with the other. Laboratories, scenario departments, production stages, developing plants and every essential of picture producing and distributing goes on night and day.

Constance Binney in "The Stolen Kiss" is the latest offering to picturedom by Realart. This photodrama has been created with Lucille Van Slyke's novel, "Little Miss By-the-Day," as the basis.

"The Blood Barrier," latest of the J. Stuart Blackton screen productions, will have as its theme "America for Americans." It will serve as good propaganda in the "Americanization" movement that is, under belated impulse, going forward to combat the evil influence of foreign agitators.

The National Board of Review, that looks at pictures for everybody with a view to keeping the screen pure and clean, has taken cognizance of the demand for pictures that is coming from churches and religious societies. To that end the Board of Review has compiled a special list, particularly suited to the more sacred and less profane uses of the screen.

William Courtleigh, ex-shepherd of the Lambs, and one of the most versatile of American actors, has been added to the cast of "Children of Destiny," which is being made at the Selznick West Coast studios.

The duplex sculptor's studio set used in "Blind Youth," a National Theatre Pictures Production, is declared to be an exact replica of the studio of Stanford White, the New York architect murdered by Harry Thaw.

Owen Moore will be the star in "Wilderness Fear," a story recently purchased by Myron Selznick.

Publishes Own Newspaper.

Elmer Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres, is publishing his own newspaper. It is a four-page publication, entitled "The Central Park News." On page one Mr. Winegar used several large cuts showing scenes and stars of productions at his two houses. The sheet also carries quarter page ads on the Central Park and Premier. It is distributed to the homes in the vicinity of the two houses.

Buffalo Brieflets

Mosher Is Appointed.

IRA M. MOSHER, manager of the Palace Theatre and president of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association, has been appointed member of the convention committee of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce. Frank S. Hopkins, manager of the local Universal office, is associated with Mr. Mosher on this same committee.

Thompson on Job.

E. E. Thompson, exploitation manager at the local Goldwyn office, put over a lot of publicity in the newspapers on the occasion of the visit of Maeterlinck and his wife to this city. The name of Goldwyn appeared in the most of the stories and there were photos of the distinguished couple adorning the front pages. Mr. Thompson was instrumental in arranging a banquet by Mayor Buck in Maeterlinck's honor as well as a public reception in the Hotel Iroquois.

Smith Visits Gotham.

P. H. Smith, manager of the First National office, journeyed to New York Thursday, February 12, remaining over the week end for a conference with officials at the home office. Business is booming at the First National office.

Wallner With F. P.-L.

H. W. Wallner, formerly with the local Goldwyn exchange, has been engaged by Manager Moritz of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange as a sales representative.

F. M. Zimmerman Returns.

F. M. Zimmerman, sales manager of Gardiner Pictures, Inc., has returned from a two-week trip in the South and is now at the Albany office boosting Clara Kimball Young in "Eyes of Youth," and preparing for the second release of this star, "The Forbidden Woman," both of which features the Gardiner company is handling. The Gardiner publicity department is planning a great exploitation campaign for "Tillie's Punctured Romance," which Gardiner controls for the state.

Realart Sales Gratifying.

Port Colburne Theatre Burns.

The Colonial Theatre at Port Colborne, Ont., was destroyed by fire, February 12. The blaze is believed to have been caused by an over-heated stove in the box-office. The theatre was owned by the Metiazuk Brothers, who estimated the loss at $9,500. The building is said to have been insured for $5,500.

Pick-ed Pictures.
Among 'em Harry Morey's Vitagraph, "The Flaming Clue."

Chester Moves Headquarters to Coast; Offices and Laboratory To Be Erected

C. L. CHESTER, who has been an important figure in New York's moving picture quarters for some time, is about to move his headquarters to Los Angeles, where he has purchased a plot of ground 180 by 320 feet, at the corner of Fernwood avenue, adjoining the Fox studio, on which the construction of offices and laboratory will begin shortly. The Chester building is expected to be completed and ready for occupancy in the spring.

The architect's blueprints for the new offices and laboratory at Hollywood were received by Mr. Chester a few days ago, and show a careful arrangement in which two floors will be fitted up for the convenience of the producers of Chester-Outing pictures. The building, for which the plans were drawn by John C. Austin, a Los Angeles architect, will be in Spanish mission style, and one of the most attractive in the Hollywood district.

Besides the usual laboratory facilities, provision has been made for a library to contain reference books, manuscripts and volumes on travel, as well as various trophies that Mr. Chester has collected in his tours in all parts of the world.

C. L. Chester has been one of the largest and best contributors to outdoor photography. His subjects have been well chosen, and well photographed. To this has been added the technique and artistry of careful assembling and subtitling, which have made the Chester-Outing pictures stand alone in their class. Cameramen located in different parts of the world, China, Brazil and other faraway lands are at work gathering unique material for a splendid series of travel pictures.

C. L. Chester, who entered the competitive side of the industry from a door that opened from the big outdoors, has found the game an alluring one, and with the true spirit of enterprise has, in addition to his other interests, taken a plunge into the comedy field. A story on the Chester comedies will be found on another page of this issue.

Films of Ice Formation Awake Scientific Interest

THE formation of ice is depicted in a picture film which was taken under the direction of John Murphy, M. E. I. C., electrical engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, Ontario, by the moving picture cameramen of the Exhibits and Publicity Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The views were taken in the refrigerator of the Chateau Laurier, the great hotel of the Canadian capital.

They are considered a triumph in moving picture photography. When shown recently before the Canadian Engineering Institute, they aroused considerable enthusiasm because of the beauty of the ice formations revealed. So great was the prettiness of the flaky spicules and so changing in form as the freezing proceeded that the engineers at times forgot the scientific purpose of the reel.

The formation of both frazil and anchor ice was depicted in the interesting film and the primary intention of the picture was to indicate how the operation of water power machinery is restricted in cold weather. It was established that a difference of one one-thousandth of a degree in temperature below the freezing point meant the attraction of frazil ice to submerged machinery and a consequent interference with its operation. It is also shown that ice does not collect on submerged parts when they are charged with electric energy or when the machinery is hollowed for the circulation of steam.

The picture proved so interesting to the engineers that it was screened a second time. Announcement was made that a number of prints have been made so that the picture may be screened before the engineering institutes in all parts of Canada. The use of moving pictures in this connection is expected to solve the bugbear which confronts the users of water power machinery in Canada during the winter months, or at least to permit scientists to study the trouble.

Wireless Telephone in Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph

AMONG the subjects scheduled for the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, No. 7028, is an explanation of the system of wireless telephony with animated drawings by F. Lyle Goldman. This marvelous invention, developed in the stress of the World War, is the mechanism by which the human voice talks across the ocean, linking continent with continent.

The illustration shows how similar sound waves are to the ripples of the water when a stone is thrown in. A device for transmitting electric waves, which readily travel a great distance, is clearly pictured. Then the remarkable invention by which the electric waves are made to carry the sound waves is shown with telling effect. Even a child can comprehend this clear and thrilling story. The picture was edited by the Western Electric Company and is scientifically correct.

"Lining Up the Presidents," another interesting subject, shows Marius M. Baldwin at work making an engraving of the head of Lincoln. Marius M. Baldwin has for forty-five years past been employed by the United States Government in engraving likenesses of our presidents on the five dollar bill.

Topping the Mountain.

Film Study of Volcano Nears School Requirements

THE Educational Film Corporation of America has a film study of a volcano which should revive hope in the minds of those who have waited long and cheerfully for the semblance of an interest in the pedagogical moving picture.

It is not presented as a perfect type, but rather as a sincere effort toward a fuller development of the big idea. Animated drawings coupled with explanatory subtitles tell the story of how the cracking of the earth's surface, produces fissures, through which finally the red hot lava forces its way, creating what is known as the burning mountain or volcano. Added to this are realistic scenes which illustrate the destructive qualities. The lava bomb, streams of lava similar to rivers of mud, avalanches of ashes, and even the spectacular fire of eruption enter into the explanation of the volcano.

"Topics of the Day" to Campaign for Teachers

BELIEVING that the American public is in general sympathy with the movement for higher wages for teachers, and encouraged by the thousands of letters of approval which have been received on "Topics of the Day" favoring better pay for teachers, the Literary Digest will support a nationwide campaign through the Topics on behalf of the teachers. The campaign has opened at Cleveland, where a convention of teachers was held and it met with popular favor.

Announcement of the opening of the campaign will be made in the "Topics of the Day" and the initial step is a contest that can be utilized to advantage by all exhibitors showing the film.

It is believed that local managers will be certain to take advantage of the opportunity to co-operate with school teachers in their communities.

"The Log of the La Viajera."

When Robert C. Bruce set sail at Seattle, Wash., for Vancouver Island and the inside passage, he tackled a subject considerably different from what he had already presented in pictures. His method of handling the situation with regard to subtitles is rather unique, and represents a brief diary of the days consumed in making the trip.

The city of Victoria from the harbor and some of the public buildings and streets of the city figure in the early scenes, and later as we progress through the strait of Georgia we come to villages, of which a large portion of the inhabitants are Indians. Totem poles and other sights of interest have been treated in the comedy vein.

Whale Hunting as Conducted in Japan Is Shown in Screen Magazine for March 12

COINCIDENT with the plan outlined by Hal Hodes, editor of the New Screen Magazine, to present to the American public, through the screen, intimate pictures of cutoms in foreign lands, Universal announces that in No. 58 of the New Screen Magazine, booked for release March 12, will be contained scenes showing the method of whale hunting, as conducted in Japan.

It is an interesting industry. Aikawa, on the coast of Japan, is the headquarters for the whalers, and daily fifty or more ships set out in quest of the mammoth fish. The whale is captured by means of a harpoon, which is shot out through a gun, which is about the same as the monster 16 "inchers" aboard the American men-of-war, except for the fact that it is not nearly as large or powerful.

Once harpooned, the whale is a goner; then it is buoyed and left for a crew which will return for it later. These pictures, as presented through the New Screen Magazine, are perhaps a step forward in the art of motion picture weeklies.

This issue of the reel also shows John Burroughs, world famous naturalist, at his home not far from New York. It is an interesting fact that he has lived at one place continuously since 1874 and is always finding new anmial friends to interest him.

The wonderful mechanism which controls the four-dial electric clock in the tower of the Metropolitan building, New York, is shown, and one is wont to gasp at the immensity of the time piece, which, when viewed from the ground 346 feet below, seems hardly larger than the ordinary alarm clock. A small clock is shown, which, in addition to regulating the monster timepiece, regulates forty others of varying sizes.

The inimitable "Cinema Luke," and the ever "laugh getting," "Laughographs," round out this interesting feature. This issue of the Screen Magazine is declared to be the most entertaining, both from an entertainment as well as instructive standpoint, yet presented.

Pictograph Shows Wireless Telephoney.

No greater marvel has been invented by man than the wireless telephone, which is the scientific feature of a Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph B 7026 announced for early release. In the stress of the world war, the mechanism was perfected by which the human voice talks across the ocean, and under the direction of F. Lyle Goldman, of the Bray Pictures Corporation, the film shows unusually well how the marvel is accomplished. The device for transmitting electric waves which travel great distances is pictured so that even a child can understand how the electric waves are made to carry sound.

Three other subjects are included in this Goldwyn-Bray release—a flirtation in Zooland between a baby monk, a Saki and the Matamata and the wily Chameleon; lining up our presidents on government bank notes, and the comic cartoon of Jerry on the Job in "The Wrong Track."

Activities of Old Women Shown.

The proverb that a person is only as old as she feels is illustrated in the Paramount Magazine of February 22, which shows the keen intellect and strenuous activities of women well advanced in years who refuse to grow old, under the title of "On the Job with Grandma." Mrs. Mary Barton, age sixty-three, has no difficulty in navigating a huge truck on a crowded New York thoroughfare encumbered by snowdrifts. Miss Celeste Lambert, in spite of advancing years, holds down a job as traffic specialist, and does it in tiptop style. The picture shows her business-like methods of supervising vehicles at a busy corner. Great Grandmother Luneschloss is another example of the fine standard that refuses to yield to Father Time. In her grandmotherly capacity she still knits socks, sweaters, wristlets, mufflers and mittens for the boys in the service. She will continue, she says, "as long as a single boy shivers on the wintry land or sea."

Shows Development of Continent.

Palezoic, mesozoic and cenozoic are terms that have little significance to the novice but to the initiated, sophisticated geologist they spell history in the development of a continent. How they have figured in the growth of North America is shown in the Paramount Magazine of February 29 under the title of "The Growth of the North American Continent." As the result of careful research work the picture is also able to depict accurately the forms of animal life existent on this continent in the early days. Dinosaurs, the great amphibious animals, mastodons and others are introduced with a real thrill that furnishes an unusual event in a magazine pictorial.

"Studies in Kids," another of this issue, is a typical "boy" film. It shows children as they are naturally—playing, working and sometimes fighting.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That the motion picture has been resorted to in Leroy, N. Y., in order to get persons to attend the mid-week service at the Methodist church. The members of the church are invited to bring their supper to the church. After the repast is served and the dishes put back in the baskets, a half hour prayer service is held and the remainder of the evening is spent enjoying the new film plays.

That the University of Pennsylvania employs a cameraman continuously for the purpose of keeping a record of happenings at the university. Every time, for instance, that it is visited by a notable, or an atheletic competition or other important happening takes place, the moving picture camera is on the job to make sure that the event is duly "canned."

Metropolitan Clock System in Film.

The current issue of the Universal New Screen Magazine has some remarkable views of the clocks of the Metropolitan Tower. The interior of the clock tower, the working of the mechanism, the intricate system by which the master clock and the score of control clocks are set by telegraph from Washington, is shown in detail. The control clocks in turn regulate the hundreds of clocks throughout the building. We believe that this is the first time that the "big time" arrangement of the famous skyscraper has been unfolded to the public.

Other interesting subjects of this issue are brief glimpses of whale hunting in Japan, and John Burroughs "close to nature."

Prizma Releases Novelty Reel in Colors.

The title of Prizma's latest release is "Pennywise," but it has nothing to do with Pound Foolish, for Pound Foolish would probably be found buying some "Very Hopeful" Oil Stock.

"Pennywise" is a novelty reel which shows some of the beautiful and useful things which can be made in idle hours for personal adornment or home decoration. This should particularly be of great interest to women who are always eager for new ideas. It is a very unique reel on the art of wax and crepe paper and one which creates the desire to try it for one's self. Prizma's "Pennywise" will show you how distinctive heads, decorated vases, beautiful flowers and charming lamps are easily made from "paper, wax and strings." In other words, "Pennywise" tells you how to make beautiful things in a beautiful way.

Best Pathe Features Booked at Camps.

Motion picture entertainment is still being furnished Uncle Sam's defenders in khaki. Through the Community Motion Picture Bureau, the principal regular army concentration points have frequent screen entertainments. Only the finest pictures are being exhibited to the soldiers, as is evidenced by the recent bookings made by the Community Bureau, through the Washington Exchange of Pathe Exchange, Inc., by which the following productions were shown at Camp Lee and Camp Humphries: Dolores Cassinelli, in "The Web of Deceit"; Hobart Henley's "The Gay Old Dog"; Blanche Sweet in "A Woman of Pleasure," and Frank Keenan in "Brothers' Divided."

A larger booking was recorded for the camp at Hampden, Md., where the following pictures were exhibited: William Desmond in "The Prince and Betty"; Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon in "Respectable by Proxy"; "Dawn"; and "My Husband's Other Wife"; Dolores Cassinelli in "The Web of Deceit" and "The Right to Lie"; Mae Murray in "Twin Pawns" and "The A. B. C. of Love"; June Caprice in "A Damsel in Distress."

"The Yankee Watch on the Rhine."

In his Famous Players-Lasky release for February 29, Burton Holmes takes you to see the Yankee Boys in their watch on the Rhine, to see the flag flying over Ehrenbreitstein, the one-time pride of every German heart, now firmly held by our boys in khaki. He takes you through the cities where American "M. P.'s" control the street traffic; he takes you to the Royal Palace, formerly the favorite residence—outside of Berlin—of the Hohenzollerns, especially of the Empress Augusta, grandmother of the ex-Kaiser. the cafes, the Y. M. C. A. Hut, the water front—all these you will visit before you cross the famous pontoon bridge over the Rhine and go up into the very Citadel of Ehrenbreitstein where, with the Stars and Stripes waving over your head, you may look down upon Coblenz on the opposite bank, picturesquely situated between the Rhine and Moselle Rivers.

Ford Weekly Shows Clock Making.

The Ford cameraman has invaded the factories of the Maiden Lane jewelers. Following his recent eavesdropping in a silverware factory, the cameraman entered a clock factory and gave his lenses full scope. The resulting picture, which is released this week through Goldwyn, shows the making of the innumerable small clock wheels, balance shafts and screws, their assembling and polishing. The picture further shows how the clock cases are made by machinery and the mechanism installed. Each finished clock is tested for several days before it is considered ready for shipment. The picture is aptly called "Tick Tock."

To Curb Baltimore Truancy.

The moving picture and vaudeville theatre managers in Baltimore will probably be asked to co-operate with the school board and Big Brother League in an effort now being made to curb truancy among the local school children.

Numerous children stay away from school in order to go to moving picture shows, it is claimed, and children have been seen at 9.30 in the morning asking for admission at these theatres. The action that will probably be taken will be to ask the managers of the theatres and also the police department to co-operate in stopping this practice of the children.

Goldwyn Announces Release Dates for Feature Productions Up to End of May

GOLDWYN announces the order of issue of productions from February 22 to the last of May and the release date of each picture. Under the present system of distribution, one feature photoplay will be released every Monday, starting with Tom Moore in "Duds" on February 22. Heretofore, Goldwyn productions have been issued in series lots without a definite date being attached to any one picture.

Rex Beach, the Eminent Authors and the Goldwyn stars, several of them in famous stage successes recently purchased by Goldwyn, are represented in a list of productions of the first magnitude. They offer wide variety in subject matter, running all the way from light comedy to serious drama.

The release chart reads: Tom Moore, "Duds," February 22; Eminent Authors, "Partners of the Night," February 29; Will Rogers, "The Strange Boarder," March 7; Eminent Authors, "Dangerous Days," March 14; Madge Kennedy, "Trimmed With Red," March 21; Rex Beach, "The Silver Horde," March 28; Geraldine Farrar, "The Woman and the Puppet," April 4; Eminent Authors, "The Tower of Ivory," April 11; to be announced later, April 18; Tom Moore, "The Great Accident," April 25; Will Rogers, "Jes' Call Me Jim," May 2; Rex Beach, "Going Some," May 9; Pauline Frederick, "Roads of Destiny," May 16; Mabel Normand, "The Slim Princess," May 23.

Tom Moore in "Duds."

The Tom Moore picture, "Duds," was directed by Thomas R. Mills, with a cast including Naomi Childers, Edwin Stevens and Christine Mayo. "Partners of the Night," Leroy Scott's first contribution to Eminent Authors Pictures and the first picture made by Goldwyn in the East, was directed by Paul Scardon. It is a new kind of detective story. In the cast are Pina Nesbitt, Emmett Corrigan, William Ingersoll and William B. Davidson. Will Rogers will be seen in "The Strange Boarder," an adaptation of a story by Will Irwin, directed by Clarence Badger.

New Geraldine Farrar Picture.

In "Dangerous Days" Mary Roberts Rinehart contributes a powerful story of contemporaneous interest interpreted by a company of Goldwyn players under the direction of Reginald Barker. Rex Beach presents another of his vivid out-of-doors dramas in "The Silver Horde."

"The Woman and the Puppet," starring Geraldine Farrar, will come to exhibitors on April 4, the first Farrar production since the spectacular "Flame of the Desert," released last fall. It is a colorful and dramatic version of a play by Pierre Louys and Pierre Frondaie, directed by Reginald Barker. Lou-Tellegen, husband of the famous prima donna, has the principal role in her support.

Atherton Novel "Picturized."

"The Tower of Ivory" is the pictorial version of Gertrude Atherton's novel, directed by William Parke and acted by Barbara Castleton, John Bowers, Sydney Ainsworth, Doris Pawn, Edythe Chapman, Clarissa Selwynne and others. In "The Great Accident" Tom Moore has a Ben Ames Williams story that enjoyed a tremendous vogue. Will Rogers' second representation on the list of releases is "Jes' Call Me Jim," a humorous character study. The director was Clarence G. Badger. Another comedy of an entirely different type is Rex Beach's "Going Some," an adaptation of the successful stage farce.

Pauline Frederick will make her next appearance the second week in May in "Roads of Destiny," a photoplay version of Channing Pollock's play. It is in charge of Director Frank Lloyd. The last picture named on the present schedule is "The Slim Princess," starring Mabel Normand and directed by Victor Schertzinger. It will be recalled that "The Slim Princess," written by George Ade and Henry Blossom, was a great stage success with Elsie Janis as the star.

Industry Mourns Death of Major Raymond W. Pullman

THE motion picture industry lost one of its best friends when, on February 22, death called Major Raymond W. Pullman, chief of police of Washington, D. C. Major Pullman had for some time been working for the betterment of the motion picture industry and was very active in Americanization work, being a member of the executive committee having the handling of Americanization work in charge.

Major Pullman was well known to most of the big producers; his dealings with them and with the exhibitors and exchange managers of Washington were such that his passing is a matter of deep regret to all. A meeting of the executive committee of the Washington Exchange Managers Association was called for the purpose of drawing up suitable resolutions expressing the sympathy of the managers for his bereaved parents. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry expressed its sympathy in the form of a handsome floral piece.

The deceased was only 38 years of age. He was looking forward to the time when things would so shape themselves as to permit him to cast his lot with the industry. As a newspaperman, before becoming head of the local police force, he had considerable experience with motion picture work and it was his desire to "get into the motion picture game" as soon as possible. He was ill only a week with double pneumonia. Despite the best of medical attention he lost his fight, and there passed away a man who was 100 per cent. the friend of everyone who knew him; a man who had the highest of ideals; a man who lived a moral life.

Complete Cast for "Sea Rider."

With the engagement of Louiszito Valentine for the role of The Girl, Vitagraph has completed the cast for "The Sea Rider," Harry T. Morey's next feature. The other important feminine role will be played by Alice Calhoun, a regular Vitagraph player and the principal male roles will be enacted by Webster Campbell, Van Dyke Brooke and Frank Norcross. Edwin Hollywood is directing the picture. Mr. Morey has had about every sort of a role during the ten years he has been associated with Vitagraph, but in his new feature he is a sea faring man for the first time.

Sunday Bill Serves No Useful Purpose, Senator Writes Methodist Conference

DECLARING that many leading church members are guilty of Sabbath breaking and that the movement for a stricter observance of Sunday must come from within the churches, Senator McKellar, of Tennessee, in a letter to the Methodist Conference of his state, has flatly refused to be the medium through which any drastic legislation on the subject may be introduced in Congress.

A draft of a bill drawn by the Methodist Conference, prohibiting the operation of trains, the handling of mails, the publication or delivery of newspapers or the operation of theatres, other places of amusement or any business enterprise on Sunday, was recently transmitted to Senator McKellar with the request that he introduce it in the Senate. Fines ranging from $100 to $10,000 in the case of individuals, and from $1,000 to $100,000 in the case of corporations, are provided as penalties for violation, together with imprisonment of the individual and the forfeiture of the corporation's charter.

Urged Stringent Regulations.

"We * * * urge the enactment of laws to prohibit all professional baseball playing on Sunday, the operation of moving picture shows and all theatres on Sunday, the publication of advertising in and circulation of all Sunday newspapers, the operation and using of all freight and passenger trains on Sunday, all trading on Sunday, and the carrying on of any vocation for profit," the organization wrote Mr. McKellar.

"This bill, if enacted into law, will stop all interstate trains and traffic on Sunday, will stop the circulation of Sunday newspapers through our postal facilities, and will stop all persons who act under authority of or under the employment of our government from carrying on their ordinary vocations on Sunday. This action of our conference was based upon the commandment of our God to honor the Sabbath day and keep it holy, a commandment we must keep if we would save our people and our nation from destruction."

Senator McKellar's Reply.

"It seems to me that it would serve no useful purpose to introduce such a bill," declared the senator in his reply. "I believe it would be much better to organize the churches and other local Sabbath-observance societies first, and if successful the movement would undoubtedly spread until action of the kind you suggest would be possible.

"I am in doubt whether this is the way to proceed in the matter. Even some of our ministers defend certain Sunday amusements like baseball, and many of our leading church members—probably the most of them—indulge in one form or another of Sabbath breaking.

"The running of trains, freight and passenger, the use of the telephone and telegraph, the carrying of mails, riding and driving in automobiles, and to a more or less degree nearly every other kind of work or business or amusement, when deemed important or excusable, is done on the Sabbath. Indeed, the most of us have indulged in one or another form of Sabbath breaking ourselves. The great body of the public have become accustomed to these forms of Sabbath breaking.

The Wrong Method of Approach.

"To undertake to restore an observance of the Sabbath by federal law, without inculcating the wisdom and duty of Sabbath observance in the people at home, seems to me certainly to be the wrong method of approach. These movements must win public favor locally first and then spread, as, notably, prohibition and suffrage.

"To introduce a bill in Congress to stop all interstate trains, interstate traffic, interstate freight, interstate news, interstate mail, interstate telephonic communication, interstate telegraphic communication and Sunday newspapers would undoubtedly give a legislator very considerable notoriety, but it would not, in my judgment, and according to views expressed here, in the slightest degree change the ugly fact of Sabbath desecration. I have not suggested the matter to a single legislator here who has approved. All say that the bill would die in the committee, or could not in any event get anywhere in the Senate."

Interest Steadily Increases in Exhibitors' Convention

EVERY day shows a marked increase in the interest and momentum gained by the preparations for the big New York State convention of exhibitors to be held on March 9 and 10 at Utica. A concrete example is the recent meeting of Rochester exhibitors. Twenty-eight of the thirty-one members attended and twenty-two pledged their attendance at the convention. A committee was appointed to establish Rochester headquarters in the convention city.

One of the most gratifying indications of a large attendance at the convention is the response of small exhibitors. There will be delegations from every section of the state. New York will have a very substantial representation.

Speakers of national repute and members of both branches of the state legislature will be heard at the banquet the first evening of the convention. Preparations for the ball on the following night are nearing completion.

Many prominent exchangemen have applied for space at the hotel where the convention will be held. Among those whose applications have been favorably acted on are First National Exhibitors Circuit, Merit Film Corporation, Selznick Enterprises, Gardner Syndicate, National Screen Service, Famous Players-Lasky, Commonwealth Pictures, Simplex Machine Company, Power's Machine Company, Stanley Frame Company, Moving Picture World, Motion Picture News, New York State Journal, Photoplay News of Rochester, Pioneer Film, Pathe Exchange, United Artists Corporation and United Theatres Pictures Corporation.

Rose Sanders Establishing Agencies in India and Straits

MISS ROSE SANDERS, who went to India last September for the Trans-Atlantic Film Company of London, for the purpose of establishing sales agencies in India, Hong-Kong and the Strait Settlements, reports her mission progressing and prospects excellent.

Miss Sanders was sent out by John B. Tippett, president of Trans-Atlantic, because of her familiarity with conditions in that part of the world. She purchased films for those parts of the globe for sevtral years while with Levetus & Co.

Hindu buyers who knew Miss Sanders by correspondence greeted her warmly and made every effort to co-operate with her and make her work agreeable. She is at present located at the Grand Hotel, Calcutta.

Republic Enlists George Ames to Form Sales Department for Short Subjects

SO important to the success of the motion picture theatre has the short reel become that Republic Pictures has instituted a special department to take care of this important factor in the distribution of pictures. Briton N. Busch, president of Republic Pictures, has engaged George Ames, who for sometime past has been connected with the Pathe exchange in Philadelphia, to come to New York and organize a special sales department for one and two reel pictures.

Mr. Busch says: "The success we have had with one and two reel pictures, such as 'The Ghost of Slumber Mountain,' which by reason of its unique character was used in many theatres as a special feature irregardless of its length, and later with the Chaplin reissues, Prizma Natural Color Pictures, Kinograms and Chief William J. Flynn series of eight two-reel pictures in which Herbert Rawlinson is featured, has convinced me that the one and two reel picture is as necessary to the success of the picture theatre as any feature of longer length.

"The public demands that entertainment shall have the element of variety. Nothing drives patronage away so quickly as the deadly monotony of program that lacks pictures of contrasting character. The secret of the success of the B. F. Keith houses can be directly traced to the genius of E. F. Albee, who demands that the Keith theatres present programs in which no two acts are booked that are similar in character.

May Influence Entire Program.

"The same reasoning or psychology obtains in the picture theatre. Often a mediocre feature may be lifted out of a rut by surrounding it with one and two reel pictures. The one-reel picture can, because of its subject matter and treatment, be a bigger drawing card than a five or six reel feature that lacks the element of interest.

"It will be our policy to give exhibitors a full list of productions irregardless of length so that they can book their shows from the one distributor, and thereby save quite an item in express charges which would result in the booking of a news reel from one company, an educational picture from another, a comedy from another and a feature from another company. Thus, by Republic Pictures distributing short as well as long-length subjects, it will be quite a factor in helping the exhibitor to save a tidy sum of money during this season."

Influential People Join in Indorsing "The Copperhead"

THE ease with which "The Copperhead," the Paramount-Artcraft super-special production, lends itself to exploitation along certain lines is vividly illustrated in reports from several cities playing this big picture in the territory of the Cincinnati exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The exploitation department of that exchange seems to have had no trouble in securing the co-operation of the finest people and most influential interests in each city. The result has been engagements of unqualified financial success for exhibitors.

In Dayton, Ohio, a striking example of the splendid support which "The Copperhead" rallies to itself, is seen. W. K. Mathews, publicity man for Charles Cross' Columbia Theatre, secured whole-hearted support of the schools and patriotic organizations of Dayton. He arranged a special showing prior to the opening at which twenty-five leading citizens representing the schools, churches and patriotic organizations, were present.

Mr. Mathews then proceeded to get statements from those present. He had these printed in full in the Dayton Journal as news matter. This has been done before, but Mathews did it so cleverly that the newspaper carried photographs of the citizens quoted.

Schools and Clergy "Boosted".

In Columbus, Ohio, "The Copperhead" secured the support of the schools, the American Legion and the clergy. In Shelbyville, Ind., it was made the center of the Lincoln Day celebration of Victory Post, No. 7, American Legion. The school superintendent dismissed school early so the children could see the picture on Lincoln's Birthday. A newspaper that had never given a moving picture a press notice, felt it a patriotic duty to boost "The Copperhead" and gave its first screen comment.

Universal Current Events Full of Interesting Topics

INTERESTING scenes of the greeting of General Pershing at New Orleans, La., are shown in Universal Current Events No. 7. After delivering a brief but weighty talk on "America First," the General was presented with a gold membership card to the American Legion by Captain Newman, of that organization. Doctor Clemens Pirquet, the eminent European scientist who is said to have discovered a new serum with which to combat tuberculosis, is also seen on the reel.

Other topics filmed are Frankfort, Germany, flooded by overflow; Princess Mary leads the British Girl Guides; Railroad Wrecks at Trussville, Ala., and Schneicemuel, Germany; Cuba's Welcome to the New British Minister; Rescuing Trawler from Davy Jones' Locker; New York Women Prepare for National Campaign; and Thrills for Society in Alpine Ice Racing.

This issue also presents unique views of Kaiser Karl's palace converted into an American food kitchen. The home of the former ruler of Austria is now a headquarters for food for the needy.

This reel also contains the following newsy items: Record Speed Made in Destroyer Test; The "Big Three" Clash with President Wilson; World Ski Champions in Thrilling Carnival; Daffy News; Hints on How to Keep Fit; Explosion on Ship Causes Spectacular Blaze; and the Great Earthquake in Southern Mexico.

Chief among the interesting features presented in issue No. 7 of Hearst News is Paris' Welcome to the new President of France.

Paramount Magazine Shows Evolution of the Photoplay

ONE of the most interesting short subjects released in a long time is the current issue of Paramount Magazine which shows the evolution of the photoplay. A series of original slides by Alexander Black produced in 1894, which marked the humble beginnings of the present motion picture industry are reproduced, forming a subject of surpassing interest.

Under the title of "Miss Jerry" the initial motion picture by Black was flashed on the screen by means of a gas projector which allowed each still to be exhibited for about five minutes. Each picture was dissolved into the one following, so that a complete sequence of action was maintained.

Briton N. Busch

The present issue of the Paramount Magazine shows about 16 of the original stills, about three feet of each having been taken and dissolved. Howard I. Young, editor of the Paramount Magazine has quoted Mr. Black saying "that the effect is exactly the same as at the first performance of 'Miss Jerry'."

By permission of Mr. Black these stills have been used for the opening examples in "The Evolution of the Picture Play." With the advancement of science the section shows more modern scenes, one of them being Grover Cleveland at his desk in the White House. The film in which this originally appeared was titled "Capital Courtship."

Aeroplane Wind Machine Is Idea of Goldwyn Company

PROBABLY for the first time in the history of the motion picture, the aeroplane is to be used as a wind machine. This interesting departure in the use of the aeroplane is occasioned by the filming of Rex Beach's story, "The North Wind's Malice," which is now being made at Port Henry, on the shores of Lake Champlain, New York.

Last week, Rex Beach, Robert B. McIntyre, Goldwyn's eastern production manager, Carl Harbaugh and Paul Bern, co-directors, and a company of players left for Port Henry to take the exteriors. Accompanying the players were the fuselages of two Curtiss aeroplanes. These are equipped with motors of 90 horsepower, and are capable of developing 2,400 revolutions a minute. The machines are complete aeroplanes save for the wings. They are mounted on their own running gear, and will be operated by two mechanicians who traveled from the Curtiss Garden City plant with the machines.

In "The North Wind's Malice," Rex Beach has created an allegorical figure of the North Wind in the form of a beautiful woman of Junoesque proportions. The continuity of the story, which Mr. Beach himself prepared, clothes this figure in fifty yards of chiffon, and the north wind blowing the material will suggest the destructive power of the northern elements.

WITH more than sixty motion picture theatres in the six New England states in operation or being built, and with options on many others, the newly organized Black New England Theatres, Inc., looms up as the biggest proposition on the horizon of the industry in that district.

"We have been an active force in New England and I promise you that our activities are fast broadening out," said Alfred S. Black, president of the new company and leading spirit in its scores of enterprises. Mr. Black is without doubt New England's livest wire, and his message to readers of Moving Picture World means that things are going to hum in New England from now on.

Fox Entertains His New York Exchange Head and Assistants

WILLIAM FOX entertained manager Louis Rosenbluh, assistant managers and salesmen of the New York Exchange of the Fox Film Corporation at the new Studio Building recently. Mr. Fox received his guests in person and conducted them over the new building. Later he complimented Mr. Rosenbluh and his staff on the splendid showing made in business by the New York Exchange.

The offices assigned to the New York Exchange, and which cover the entire tenth floor of the Leavitt Building, have been completed. The reception rooms and executive offices have been handsomely finished in mahogany with furniture to match. The projection room is of ample size and is fitted with two projection machines with a screen capable of taking the largest superpicture. Each of the salesmen has his own private office fitted with personal telephone and direct wire.

The advertising room and stock room has been enlarged, all printing, billing and newspaper advertising being handled by Mr. Rosenbluh, for the territory under his control and which embraces, part of Connecticut, part of New Jersey, Long Island and New York.

Maeterlinck's Tour Finishes with Arrival in Los Angeles

MAETERLINCK'S trip across the United States, which resembled one continuous ovation, ended in a wholly satisfactory manner when his special car, the Mayflower, pulled into Los Angeles recently. The city outdid itself in welcoming him. Charles Winsel, Belgian consul, headed the receiving committee. Louis Santous, French consul; Harry Gearing, president of the Canadian Society of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Willoughby Rodman, who was chairman of the Commission for the Relief of Belgium during the war, were also on the committee.

The party was escorted to the Windermere Hotel at Santa Monica, where luncheon was served. The city council, commercial club and women's clubs welcomed the poet here. There was an added interest in the greeting, because M. and Mme. Maeterlinck are to reside in Santa Monica in a house selected for them by Samuel Goldwyn.

Soon after arrival, Maeterlinck asked for a few days' rest, as he was fatigued by the long trip. Therefore, a number of social events were postponed. Los Angeles Belgians are planning a celebration of King Albert's birthday on April 7, at which Maeterlinck will be an honored guest.

Bulls-Eye Has New Studio.

The Bulls-Eye Film Corp. west coast studios are now located on a new plot of ground in Hollywood. The new studios are about a block from old Bulls-Eye lot, recently sold to Ben Wilson. Although Texas Guinan is now screening her western dramas on an open stage, an enclosed stage of the most modern type is under construction.

Charles Brabin Directing Carrigan.

Thomas Carrigan, well known behind the footlights and before the camera, whose latest screen success was in the leading role of William Fox's production "Checkers," has been placed under contract with William Fox to appear opposite Pearl White in a late picture, "The Tiger's Cub," started this week under the direction of Charles Brabin. Mr. Carrigan has left with the Pearl White Company for Arctic City in the Adirondacks. The company will also go into Canada for snow scenes.

Goldwyn to Start Work Soon on First Craig Kennedy Film

ARTHUR B. REEVE, author of the Craig Kennedy stories, and John W. Grey, associated with Mr. Reeve in his motion picture enterprises, are completing plans for the first production to be made at the studios in Flushing, L. I., for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. According to the terms of the contract, recently signed by Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Reeve, four feature photoplays based on the exploits of the fictional detective will be turned over to Goldwyn during the coming year.

Several directors who stand at the top of their profession are now being considered and the cast is being selected. The choice of a story for the initial production will be made within the next few days.

Everything at the Flushing studios is in readiness to start "shooting" as soon as the company for the first of the five-reel pictures is assembled. Both the author and Mr. Grey will be on hand to assist in making the screen interpretations true to the original stories that occupy a unique place in American literature.

Quimby Picks McConnell as One of Chief Assistants

FRED J. McCONNELL, one of the best known and most capable former newspapermen who have made their mark in motion pictures, will be one of the chief assistants to Fred C. Quimby, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Mr. Quimby brings to the organization experience and knowledge that will be of inestimable value to Mr. Quimby and to the organization.

Mr. McConnell first made his reputation as a newspaperman. Having met with high success in that field he began to specialize in motion pictures and their connection with daily newspapers.

For three years Mr. McConnell was the New York representative of the Chicago Herald, after which he met with unusual success in the exploitation of motion pictures, particularly serials. He has done exceptional work along this line for numerous big companies, among them Pathe, Universal and Mutual.

Mr. Quimby's chief assistant has been handling recently the motion picture and theatrical departments of the Cleveland Sunday News Leader and the Cleveland News.

Borzage Completes First Cosmopolitan.

Director Frank Borzage has just finished his first Cosmopolitan Production at the studios, 127th street and Second avenue, New York City. The title of it is "Humoresque" and it is from Fannie H. Hurst's short story which appeared in the Cosmopolitan recently. Alma Rubens is the featured player and others in the cast are Vera Gordon, Dore Davidson, Miriam Batista, and Gaston Glass. "Humoresque" is a story of orthodox Jewish life in the maelstrom of New York and is said to be one of the best stories that Miss Hurst has ever turned out from her typewriter.

Marshall Neilan's "River's End" Smashes Six-Year-Old Record at Strand Theatre

REPORTS to First National home office from first-run theatres in the East, Central States and the West of their Sunday, Monday and Tuesday receipts on "The River's End," first of Marshall Neilan's series of independently made and personally directed productions for First National Exhibitors Circuit, state that box-office records of long standing have been broken and that every indication points to a new high record for first-run exhibitors with the screen version of the book by James Oliver Curwood.

First intimation of what the production was doing to first-run box offices on the opening day of its public run, came when Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, telegraphed Marshall Neilan in Los Angeles that "The River's End" had broken every record of six years' standing, including every high mark achieved as a record by any other picture shown in the house. On the second night Mr. Eaton supplemented his first wire with another, stating that that day's business had exceeded that of the first day and that the crowds for matinee, dinner hour and first and second evening performances had extended from the box office to Forty-seventh street on Broadway, and west on the cross thoroughfare to a point 200 feet beyond the farthest limit of the Strand building. This, in itself, Mr. Eaton declares, is an unprecedented example of patience among New York theatre-goers.

Established Advertising Precedent.

The Strand management established a new precedent in its newspaper advertising for "The River's End" by describing it, in the Monday dailies, as "a production that is breaking every attendance record in the history of the Strand." This is the first time that any New York first-run house has used a reference to exceptional patronage as endorsement of its entertainment.

Heralded by S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, with an advertising campaign which is not completed as this is published, the production opened at the big Hoosier State first-run house with a phenomenal result, which Floyd Brown, manager of the H. Lieber Company there, summarized in a telegram to New York.

Simultaneous with its accomplishments in Indianapolis and New York, the Neilan picture opened at the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles. The results of Sunday's business bears out the exhibitor opinion, given in advance by Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser, who recently purchased the First National franchise previously held by T. L. Tally, that it would do the unexpected. They reviewed it on Saturday, the day before it opened, and wired the New York offices of First National that it would be a record breaker.

Comment on Mystery and Suspense.

New York newspaper critics concur in the opinion of newspaper reviewers in Indianapolis and Los Angeles, reports of whose comments have been wired to New York. A majority comment was given to the combination of mystery and suspense in the development of the story, which they describe as "the first successful directorial attempt to register mystery through pantomime without sacrificing suspense and without making the climaxes and revelations amount to a ridicule of audience intelligence for not outguessing the producer for his acts of elimination."

Among the wires of congratulations and comment from other exhibitors and exchange managers sent to Marshall Neilan, praising him for "The River's End," were messages from Moe Mark, president of the Strand Theatre Company; Harry Scott, exchange chief at Detroit, and C. F. Senning, holding a similar position in Richmond.

Use Crisp, Attractive Lobby Displays, Carl Laemmle Tells Small Exhibitors

MUCH attention is paid to the big fellow in the exhibitor world. His theatre appears in photographs in trade papers, his advertisements are copied, he is quoted in news articles and he is an all-round example of the leader in the fastest growing industry in the world.

The little fellow gets practially no attention from anybody except the man who takes his orders. His theatre is very rarely photographed, his opinions are never asked, his ads are not worth while reproducing. And yet it is the small exhibitor who is the back-bone of the industry. What he lacks in importance he makes up in numbers.

In a statement just issued by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, particular attention is paid to this class of exhibitor. He is criticised, but Mr. Laemmle uses constructive criticism in pointing the way to better efforts.

"One of the Worst Evils."

"One of the worst evils practiced by small exhibitors is the use of mounted posters," says Mr. Laemmle. "Of course no first class exhibitor follows this practice. He is too good a showman, too good a merchant.

"In other lines of business, the man with goods to sell puts his best foot foremost. Even the smallest merchant in the cheapest street makes the best window-display he can possibly dig up. He does not put his worn-out, fly-specked goods in the window. He uses his best. In this respect he is a better showman than the theatre man who uses mounted posters.

"Mounted posters are bound to misrepresent your show. They are dirty, cracked and mussy after being used only once. They are anything but an attractive invitation for people to enter your house. The excuse given for the use of mounted posters is that the small exhibitor 'can't afford' to buy fresh, new, clean paper. The truth of the matter is that he cannot afford to use anything but clean paper.

The true showman, the successful showman, never lets the people see the seamy side of his business. The first principle of showmanship in any line of business on earth is a good, clean front.

The Lobby is His Show Window.

"The showman's show window is his lobby. His wares are represented by posters. Is he dealing in cast-offs or is he getting patronage because he shows different pictures each week? Will he get more patronage if the people passing his house see that some new picture has come to town? Of course he will.

"Put out new posters. Let their bright colors, their crispness make the lobby look clean and modern. The picture will draw crowds which never before frequented your theatres because you have 'wrapped your wares' attractively."

Big "U" Porto Rican District in Charge of Herbert Wall

JEAN WALL, who formerly conducted Universal's Porto Rican office and who has been spending the last eight months in Mexico City, has just returned to the United States, and was a visitor at Universal's New York offices.

Mr. Wall spent most of his time in the South American country in looking over the movie field and arranging for the distribution of Universal films there. To this end he established branch offices in Merida, Yucatan and Hermosillo, Sonora. His brother, Herbert Wall, will be placed in charge of this territory.

Mr. Wall states that Mexico offers a splendid field for American moving pictures. "The Mexican government has a censor board which is clothed with the highest authority," said Mr. Wall. "At the head of this censor committee is a woman, Adriana Ehlers, who was sent to Universal City some time ago by President Carranza to study moving pictures from every angle. She spent two years there, familiarizing herself with American stories and methods of production."

While certain form of pictures are taboo in Mexico, the censor board is usually fair in its decisions, in the opinion of Mr. Wall.

"The South Americans," he says, "like the emotional actor and very dramatic situations. Their temperament is fiery and they like plenty of action and fast moving plots.

"Serials, therefore, are very popular in Mexico. An entire serial is shown in three days, and then repeated two days later," concluded Mr. Wall.

Screen Stars Help to Open New Loew Theatre in Canada

AN event unique in the history of the Loew Theatres was the opening of the beautiful new Loew Theatre in London, Ont., Monday night, February 16. It was marked by the presence of some of the best known stars of the stage and screen, who ran into the worst blizzard that New York State had ever encountered, and were thirty-three hours on the way from New York to London. They missed the opening Monday night, arriving in town at 3 o'clock Tuesday morning, but a second official opening was held Tuesday night.

Marcus Loew had chartered a special car consisting of compartments and drawing rooms. His guests included Doraldina, famous as the creator of the hula dance, the Hawaiian craze and the "shiver dance"; June Elvidge, June Caprice, Anne Luther and the Lee children, Jane and Katherine. With their maids the party included sixteen persons.

London opened its heart to the stars, and they were given a welcome they will never forget.

Gifts and honors of all sorts were showered on them. All of them asked Mr. Loew to include them in the party the next time he opens a theatre. Mr. Loew was deeply appreciative of their efforts and is planning a little souvenir to present to each of them, as a sort of memetto of a wonderful occasion and a great success.

Mary Pickford Gives Big Party to Orphans at Clune's Theatre

TOUCHED by the pathos of a letter from a child, who signed her name, "one of your admirers, who has neither father nor mother," Mary Pickford entertained all the orphans and friendless children of Los Angeles, at a party at Clune's Auditorium, to see "Pollyanna," the United Artists' production.

Miss Pickford appeared in person and took the opportunity to propagate the philosophy of "Pollyanna," the "Glad Girl."

The orphans' party was during the fourth week of the successful run of "Pollyanna" at the Clune's Auditorium. During all that time, capacity houses prevailed.

Many Press Notices on "Children" Picture.

Robert McLaughlin, author of "The House Without Children," is receiving hundreds of clippings through a clipping service on his big state right feature.

Nathan Hirsh and some 150 exhibitors in Greater New York are putting out advance notices on engagements current and pending on the picture in and around New York City, and Leon D. Netter, the Ohio State Right specialist is advertising extensively in conjunction with percentage dates on the same picture, while Messrs. Cohen & Pearl, owners of Hi-Art Productions, who control Up-State New York, have just launched a whirlwide campaign at Buffalo, where the picture opens a week's engagement at the Family Theatre February 9. The Buffalo contract calls for four pages in the Buffalo daily and Sunday papers.

Alice Lake on Location Trip.

A fisherman's hut and a lighthouse built by the Metro technical department near Laguna, Cal., will furnish the setting for scenes of "Shore Acres" during the next few days. Alice Lake, who is to be starred in the Screen Classics, Inc., production of James A. Herne's celebrated play, and twenty members of her company have left the Metro studios in Hollywood for the location, expecting to remain five days.

Public Taking Stock in Allen's Canadian House

IN offering preferred shares in the new Allen's Montreal Theatre Company to the public a few days ago, announcement was made that each of the forty-seven Allen theatres in actual operation in the Dominion is showing a profit and that each of the Allen companies, such as their exchanges, in which the public has an interest is paying a dividend.

The new Allen Theatre in Montreal, which is to be known as the Palace Theatre and is to have a seating capacity of 3,000, is to cost half a million dollars and $350,000 worth of preferred shares is being offered to the public. The estimated gross annual revenue from the theatre is placed at $468,000 and the estimated fixed and operating expenses are placed at $253,000.

The eight per cent. dividend on the $350,000 stock amounts to $28,000 leaving an estimated surplus of $187,000. Incidentally, a bonus of twenty-five per cent. of common stock is offered with the preferred shares.

"The Flame of Hellgate" Offers Exploitation Stunts

"THE FLAME OF HELLGATE," the current Robertson-Cole production starring Michelena, is bound to be a winner both from the standpoint of production and the various exploitation and publicity angles of the title. Beatriz Michelena in "The Heart of Juanita" won additional success for the manner in which she portrayed the women of the dance hall. First run exhibitors who saw the production are loud in their praise for the work of the accomplished star, and have contracted with Robertson-Cole to play all of the Michelena productions.

"The Flame of Hellgate" was written by Earle Snell and directed by George E. Middleton for Michelena's own company. The poise acquired by Miss Michelena, while on the operatic stage, is brought out in force by her superior work in the current Robertson-Cole production.

William Pike plays opposite Miss Michelena as the man she prompts to run for sheriff. Albert Morrison is the villainous cattle king. Other leading parts are taken by D. Mitseras, Cliff Thompson, Kathrine Angus, Clarence Arper, and Jeff Williams.

Leonard Completing "Restless Sex."

Director Robert Z. Leonard is putting the finishing touches to "The Restless Sex," Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle for Cosmopolitan Productions, at International Studios, 127th street and Second avenue, New York City. Robert Chambers is responsible for the story and the production is one of the most massive and expensive that Cosmopolitan has ever turned out. One of its striking features is a scene called, "The Ball of the Gods." Over five hundred people were used in it as Nubian slaves, Egyptian dancers, charioteers, warriors, etc. Marion Davies plays a particularly effective role which gives her unusual opportunities for the display of her rare histrionic talent.

Capital Combines Accelerate Progress, Says John S. Woody of Realart Company

THE dire prophets and alarmists who take the joy out of life for the motion picture exhibitor get no encouragement from John S. Woody, general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation.

"Those who are bewailing the entrance of large capital into the motion picture industry as the death-knell of the independent producer and exhibitor, show an amazing disregard of natural business evolution and facts and figures concerning it," said Mr. Woody. "The independent producer is not being forced out of business and he is not being forced to sell. Many have gone into bankruptcy by production of inferior films that could not make money under the present strong competition, and many exhibitors are taking big profits on selling their houses and retiring to live on their incomes.

"The natural evolution of business is to increase sales and decrease the number of establishments. That has been the case in all important enterprises. It has never impeded progress or hindered individual initative, and it is not going to affect the motion picture business."

Mr. Woody produced statistics on other industries to sutsain his point.

Auto Industry Furnishes Comparison.

"It is unfortunate that figures of the motion picture industry are not available," said Mr. Woody, "but those who have observed the trend of recent events will see that what is taking place is simply a repetition of what has occurred in the other cases I have cited.

"Progress of an industry depends upon increased sales, and this naturally resolves into a situation of fewer and larger units. And the competition that results affords the greatest opportunities for specialization and diversification. The automobile industry illustrates this point. Not until a few large concerns had entered the field did the automobile reach a high practical and commerical position. We are going to witness some such change and prosperity in the motion picture business. Big combines afford unlimited capital for improvements and progress based on effective experimentation.

"Our luxurious motion picture theatres in all large cities have made possible better pictures. Control of these is not driving the smaller exhibitor out. It is giving him better pictures. The competition to fill these houses is stimulating individual efforts in production and increasing the reward.

"Economy and efficiency are developing rapidly, but a view of the situation which regards the motion picture industry as swollen beyond natural size is not based on sound business facts or the natural evolution of industry. If we had taken any other view of the matter, Realart never would have been started."

Colonial Gives Long Run to Pioneer's Wrestling Pictures

LOWELL, MASS., turned out in regiments to look at Pioneer's Caddock-Stecher wrestling pictures which from present indications seem to be booked at the Colonial Theatre for an indefinite run.

The pictures are being shown under the direction of R. C. Paradis, sporting editor of the Lowell Courier-Citizen. The city of Lowell and the outlying suburbs were billed like a circus, special block stands, banners as well as the full line of lithographic paper are to be seen in all parts of that section.

The newspapers without exception gave the pictures an enthusiastic reception.

Like reports have been received at the Pioneer office from other sections of the country. Ernest Holmes, with headquarters in Omaha, is now working Nebraska and Iowa with five prints which are touring through the territory as road shows.

The Masterpiece Attractions in Philadelphia, the S. & S. in Pittsburg and Sidney Lust in Washington, as well as the Pioneer exchanges in New York, Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit are all being flooded with requests for bookings. Each of these offices are working several prints.

The cast supporting Miss Aoki includes Jack Livingston, Eugenie Forde, Arthur Jasmine, Dolly Hipp, Frederick Vroom, Elinor Hancock, Goro Kino and Toyo Fujita.

Voluminous Bookings Prove Blanche Sweet's Popularity

CONCRETE evidence of the return of Blanche Sweet to the foremost ranks of motion picture stars is to be found in the voluminous bookings on "Fighting Cressy" and the heavy demand for dates on "The Deadlier Sex," which will be her next release through Pathe. New York always furnishes a fair indication of what a star can be expected to accomplish throughout the country and has given its stamp of approval to Miss Sweet's "come-back."

Exhibitors who found "A Woman of Pleasure," her initial Pathe feature, a profitable venture, readily booked "Fighting Cressy" and are now prepared to play "The Deadlier Sex," which is rated as Miss Sweet's best Pathe offering. The ranks of this number have been augmented by a host of other showmen, who, quick to sense the box-office value of a star, have added Miss Sweet's name to the luminaries they depend upon to fill their houses.

Pathe officials are following Miss Sweet's "come-back" with particular interest, seeking vindication of their belief that she is one of the most popular players before the public today.

Wyoming Home Folks Plan to Honor Mrs. Charles Chaplin

REGARDLESS of what honor and acclamation exhibitors throughout America are planning for Mrs. Charles Chaplin's initial release through First National Exhibitors Circuit, entitled "The Inferior Sex," there is a little spot called Laramie, Wyo., inhabited by exactly 4,962 proud people who are preparing the gala event of the year as an accompaniment to the presentation of this picture.

E. B. Hearst, manager of the Empress Theatre of this city, is perhaps one of the most insistent and encouraging of Mrs. Chaplin's admirers. In letters to the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Mr. Hearst has applied for the earliest possible release on "The Inferior Sex," because the return of Mildred Harris, born and raised in his city, as the wife of the screen's most famous comedian, will mark the showing of this attraction.

Mrs. Charles Chaplin has signified her intention of making a brief visit home just about the time her initial First National attraction is scheduled to be shown there.

Two New Vitagraph Comedies.

"Squeaks and Squawks" has been selected as the title of Jimmy Aubrey's latest Vitagraph comedy. It was made under the working title of "Gas and Girls." He already has begun a new comedy.

The new Montgomery and Rock comedy will be called "Sauce and Senoritas," made under the working title of "A Spanish Romance." In this comedy Patsy De Forrest, who has been absent from the screen for two years playing in musical comedy, is the leading woman, appearing as a Spanish senorita. Montgomery and Rock are now at work on another comedy called, at present, "As the Wind Blows."

Inter-Ocean Company Urges Stimulation of the Motion Picture Export Trade

AT a time which has been termed "the most critical period in the history of the motion picture export business; when external conditions are particularly unsettled, necessitating the strictest vigilance in the disposition of motion picture films and motion picture accessory products in foreign territories at the present depreciated rate of foreign exchange, the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation feels the urgent need for the transaction of a greater volume of export business than ever before," is an announcement just issued.

"This conclusion, which may appear drastic to many exporters of motion picture films, who have expressed the belief that the sane policy to pursue is to wait the present foreign upheaval, a temporary reaction of the world war, has somewhat subsided, is the result of mature deliberation and an endless amount of research work on the part of Inter-Ocean officials," the statement continues.

"As an unswerving confidence in this plan of action, which, it is hoped, will bring conditions back to its pre-war basis, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's plans for the coming year are bigger and wider in scope than at any other time in the history of the company. Contradictory rumors notwithstanding, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's plans for the coming year embrace the wholesale acquisition of many stellar productions from the ranks of large independent producers in America, for exclusive distribution through the important film-renting agencies of the world.

Inactivity Would Be Fatal.

"Inter-Ocean Film Corporation maintains the belief that a period of inactivity in the export branch of the motion picture business would lead to fatal consequences. It cannot see its way clear to endorse the policy of 'watchful waiting' in the present crisis, but it heartily recommends the transportation of greater quantities of motion picture films and motion picture accessory products to foreign territories. It feels that such action will stimulate motion picture export trade in the future.

"Reports from all over the world indicate that newly organized producing units are forming at the rate of almost one a week. Increased motion picture production seems to be the watchword everywhere. At present the American product's supremacy in the export field is unquestioned. If we are to maintain this supremacy, the logical thing to do is to export, export and export. We cannot place too much emphasis on this point."

Many First-Run Houses Book "The Lone Wolf's Daughter"

THE second big J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance, is enlarging its first run successes.

In Los Angeles, where a successful first run was held in Tally's Theatre, the Garrick has booked this W. W. Hodkinson release for a week's second run, but a few blocks removed from the Tally. In Pasadena Jensen's Theatre booked it for a week; in Baltimore the Bernard Depkin chain of theatres and Guy Wonders' Wilson Theatre have booked it.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter," Hodkinson also reports, opened to turn-away business at the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, where Milton H. Feld, manager of the Frank L. Newman enterprises, waged what is declared to be the biggest advertising and exploitation campaign ever attempted in promoting a picture presentation in the Newman houses. Also on Monday the Liberty, Colorado Springs, Col., opened a week's run on the production.

Effective Campaign Books Issued by Robertson-Cole

THE Robertson-Cole Company is gratified by the manner in which showmen have employed the suggestions and aids contained in its campaign books. In accordance with its announced policy of closer co-operation with exhibitors, an illustrated booklet of at least sixteen pages is issued on each feature.

The campaign book on "Who's Your Servant?" which is of the type issued on each production, is divided into four parts, advertising, exploitation, publicity and general service, and so arranged that the exhibitor can tell at a glance what will be practicable for his particular needs.

In addition to samples of type ads, reproduction of slides, poster copy and lobby displays and newspaper suggestions, there are many exploitation hints, such as tie-ups with merchants, teaser campaigns, etc. There are also four pages of advance stories reviews and newspaper notices written by trained newspaper men, music cue sheets, a fictionized story of the picture, a who's who, catchy lines for ads, what you will see in the picture, projectionist's cues for fading out, and other valuable suggestions for presenting the production.

The Marion Kohn Releases Ready.

Although his organization is barely two months old, Marion H. Kohn, head of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, announces that his three short-subject producing units has each three prints ready for state rights. Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling Bill" Jones are the stars.

While Mr. Kohn will spend a good deal of his time in Los Angeles looking after his interests, I. Bernstein, production manager of the National studios, will be in charge of all production.

Requests So Heavy for "Empty Arms" Plan Book Second Edition Had To Be Printed

SO many requests for the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, the big exploitation aid issued in connection with "Empty Arms," starring Gail Kane and directed by Frank Reicher from Willard King Bradley's screen story, were received by the producers, Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, that they found it imperative to have an additional five thousand copies printed.

The second edition is now being circulated among those exhibitors and State Rights buyers whose requests were received too late for them to receive a copy of the first edition.

From cover to cover the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet is interesting, giving many helpful hints for the successful exploitation of "Empty Arms."

The cover design, a symphony in black and green, shows a huge packet, from the bursted ends of which pours a profusion of silver and paper money.

Page two is devoted to illustrations showing the line of lithographic paper prepared for the production. Reproduced in black and white are the twenty-four sheet, two kinds of six-sheets, two kinds of three-sheets, three kinds of one-sheets and the window card.

On page three, headed by the general caption, "A Summary for a Prelude," space is given to discussing the vast number of clubs, movements and noted professionals interested in the subject of "Empty Arms" and to a reproduction of the banner issued in connection with the production.

Comments by Well-Known Women.

Page four gives the comments of famous women on the subject and reproductions of the slides. Page five contains reproductions of the lobby display, which is composed of eight 8x10 photographs, two 22x28 photographs, four 40x60 oil paintings and four 30x40 oil paintings.

On page six are found reproductions of the newspaper cuts. Pages seven and eight, nine, ten and eleven carry a series of illustrated advertising suggestions for local newspapers.

Page twelve furnishes information about the producing organization of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, in addition to giving a number of biographical stories about the author, star, director, supporting cast, etc.

Page thirteen contains interviews with the star and the director. Page fourteen presents a lobby set which will attract. Page fifteen is devoted to showing how one display on "Empty Arms" was made and suggestions for a post card which will bring results, and page sixteen is given up to Dr. Frank Crane and the editorial titles this famous editor and author wrote especially for "Empty Arms."

The plan book is printed in two colors on heavy calendar stock, eleven by sixteen inches. It is being mailed in a specially manufactured tube which prevents damage to the copies while in transit.

F. I. L. M. Club Will Attend March Convention at Utica

THE New York F. I. L. M. Club, at its last meeting, received an invitation from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, to attend in a body the annual convention of exhibitors to be held March 9 and 10 at Utica. He suggested that each exchange procure booths where the manager could meet personally many hundred exhibitors. The invitation was enthusiastically acepted, and President Chadwick delegated Lester Adler, Fred Salinger, Max Nathan, J. J. Iris, I. J. Schmertz and Henry Siegel to co-operate with Mr. Cohen in making the convention a success.

E. M. Saunders, Metro general manager of branches, was a visitor at the meeting and gave an interesting history of the club during the two years he was its president. The new grievance committee, composed of H. H. Buxbaum, Lester Adler, J. Bellman, S. Eckman, Jr., and Sam Zierler, submitted its first report, showing how three exhibitors have received substantial awards for claims that were in dispute.

First National Directors Meet in Special Session

ELECTION of two new directors for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and adoption of plans recommended by the Exhibitors' Defense Committee as essential measures for the protection of independent theatre owners affiliated by sub-franchises were the important features of a joint session of the directors of First National and of the Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, held at the Hotel Astor, New York, February 23-25.

Samuel Katz, of Balaban & Katz, owners of the Riviera Theatre, Chicago (who recently purchased the half interest owned in the First National franchise for Illinois by Jones, Linick & Schaeffer), was elected a director of First National Exhibitors' Circuit to succeed Aaron J. Jones.

E. B. Johnson, general manager of Turner & Dahnken, owners of the First National franchise in Northern California and Nevada, was elected a director to succeed T. L. Tally of Los Angeles, who recently disposed of his franchise for Southern California and Arizona to Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser.

With the exception of Nathan Gordon, of Boston, J. G. Von Herberg, of Seattle, and Colonel Fred Levy, of Louisville, all directors of both organizations, were in attendance. Beyond a general statement that the meeting was for the purpose of taking official action on matters of importance to First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the newly organized Associated First National Pictures, Inc., no detailed explanation was given out.

Those present were: Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; John H. Kunsky, Detroit; Moe Mark, New York; Jay J. Allen, Toronto; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Jacob Fabian, Paterson; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; H. O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; J. D. Williams, New York; Samuel Katz, Chicago and E. B. Johnson, San Francisco.

Pioneer Books "Lost City" Serial in Fox Theatres

IN the face of a blizzard "The Lost City" which Pioneer is handling in New York and Northern New Jersey opened up in four of the William Fox Houses in New York. The Academy of Music, the Crotona, the Folly and the Jamaica Theatre. Trailers were run for a week before the openings, while the lobbies of the four theatres were filled with animal cut outs depicting the scenes from the initial chapter of the serial. The house programs were a big factor in putting the attractions over.

Twenty four sheet stands were also devoted to "The Lost City."

Despite the weather, reports of excellent business were received. "The Lost City" will play the entire Fox Circuit.

Exhibitors Compliment Pathe on Success of Dempsey Serial

JACK DEMPSEY has made his bow to the motion picture audiences as a screen star, and excellent reports are arriving at the office of the Pathe Serial sales manager.

One of the congratulatory telegrams is from the Gaiety Theatre, Cleveland, which has "Daredevil Jack" booked for a week's run per episode. "'Daredevil Jack' opened yesterday. Gaiety Theatre filled to capacity on coldest day this winter. It is now 2 P. M. Monday and not a vacant seat in the house. Congratulations on this serial. Gaiety Theatre."

"Daredevil Jack's campaign managers announce their confidence that he will be elected a hit by an overwhelming majority.

The Kearse Theatre in Charleston, W. Va., also booking the serial for six-day runs, started "Daredevil Jack" off on February 16 and the management claims to have had as many visitors as they could possibly entertain in their theatre.

Moreno Completes "Invisible Hand."

Antonio Moreno kept right up to schedule in finishing his latest Vitagraph serial, "The Invisible Hand," last week, and this despite the fact that William Bowman, his director, was taken ill, and the serial star directed two of the episodes himself as well as playing in them.

Before beginning another picture Mr. Moreno will take a few weeks' vacation, touring California in his automobile, and playing golf.

Richardson to Present Evils of Overspeeding in Paper at Picture Engineers' Session

F. H. RICHARDSON, Moving Picture World's projection authority, will present a paper on "The Various Effects of Overspeeding" at the Spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held in Montreal in May.

This paper will be read with the idea of bringing up for discussion the evil effects of overspeeding motion picture projectors. The sources of damage to films, the consequent monetary loss, the grotesque effects produced on the screen, the throwing out of harmony the tempo of the picture and that of the orchestral accompaniment are all taken up and elaborated upon.

It is hoped that this discussion will mean the taking of a big step forward in checking the evils of overspeeding.

Paramount Films Break Records.

New attendance records were set up at both the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, on Washington's Birthday, or rather on February 23, when the holiday was observed, the management announced.

At the Rivoli, where William D. Taylor's Paramount Artcraft production, "Huckleberry Finn," is the attraction, the new record was 9,840 paid admissions. At the Rialto a still more achievement was recorded, for although the house is smaller than the Rivoli, no fewer than 10,060 paid during the day to see Marguerite Clark in "Easy to Get."

Remodeling International Studios.

These are busy days at the International Studios, 127th street and Second avenue, New York, where Cosmopolitan Productions are being made for Paramount Artcraft. Under the supervision of William Sistrom, studio manager, the plant, which was formerly Sulzer's Harlem River Park, is being thoroughly rebuilt to conform to the needs of an up-to-date motion picture studio. The studio is large enough to permit six companies to work at once.

May Name Town After Little Mary.

There is a movement on foot among some of the prominent citizens of Grand Rapids, Wis., to have the name of that town changed to Pickford. There is much confusion between the Wisconsin town and Grand Rapids, Mich., that the Grand Rapids-ers of Wisconsin experience much trouble with mis-sent mail and the like. Several names have been presented, but according to a local Grand Rapids paper Pickford is the favorite of the majority.

Fidelity Presents "Married Virgin."

The Fidelity Pictures Company, a newly organized concern with offices at 117 West 46th street, New York, with William G. Smith and M. Lewis in charge, will distribute for state rights throughout United States and Canada, its first feature, a Maxwell production, titled "The Married Virgin." The cast includes Vera Sisson, Kathleen Kirkham, Edward Jobson and Rodolfo DiValentine. The production was directed by Joe Maxwell.

In recognition of his good work in behalf of Select, Claude Ezell has been appointed by Sam E. Morris, vice-president and general manager of Selznick Pictures, to the position of supervisor of the New Orleans district. Mr. Ezell is also manager of the Dallas district.

Demands of Union Operators in Chicago May Force Closing of Picture Theatres

FILMDOM in Chicago is in an uproar, and Local 110, I. A. T. S. E. M. P. O., is the cause. A short time ago Local 110 ordered that the Crown Theatre, an Ascher house, place a union bill poster on its payroll, his work to be confined to the posting of the theatre's bills. Mr. Ascher refused to do this. Similar demands were made on other theatres, and a meeting was called at the Hotel Morrison on Friday afternoon, February 20, at which all members of the A. A. A and the Film Association were present.

Aaron Jones and Nate Ascher addressed the meeting and asked the co-operation of the exchanges to combat the demands of the union. Their request was agreed to and Dr. Atkinson was appointed to represent both organizations and appear before the union with full and complete authority to act, and, if it became necessary, he was empowered to say to the union that all picture theatres in Chicago and in that part of Cook County served by Chicago exchanges, would be closed before they would submit to the union's demands.

But the demand for union bill posters at theatres was only a minor demand. The union also demanded an increase in the wages of all operators, in some cases nearly double what they were receiving formerly; also that the number of operators be doubled at many theatres. This demand was made through Dr. Atkinson, vice-president of the Allied Amusement Assoclaiton, on Saturday, February 21.

Dr. Atkinson met the union on Saturday, February 21, but could not change the demands of its officers.

A meeting of all Chicago exhibitors and members of the Film Association was then called for Monday morning, February 23, at Cohan's Grand Opera House. At this meeting it was unanimously decided to provide each exhibitor in Chicago with a notice to be handed the operator or operators on Monday, February 23, either at the matinee or evening presentation to the effect that one week from that date their services would be no longer required.

It is understood that the A. F. of L. is not in sympathy with the drastic action contemplated by Local 110. In answer to a wire from Chicago President Samuel Gompers frankly stated that he was powerless in the matter.

Douglas Fairbanks' Next "Big Four" Production Announced as "Mollycoddle'

"DOUG'S" next picture will be called "Mollycoddle." This was the announcement that came from Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation, added to which information was the fact that this picture, the third that Mr. Fairbanks has done for the "Big Four," would be released in the near future. The date of release will be announced shortly.

While box-office records in every section of the country continue to be broken by the record crowds that have swarmed to the theatres showing "When the Clouds Roll By," "Doug's" second United Artists production, he is hard at work before the camera completing "Mollycoddle."

Activities were seemingly at a standstill at the Fairbanks studio for some weeks since the completion of his last picture, during which time, however, the star was resting and also preparing some novel "stunts" for his forthcoming release.

The numerous "stunts" and novelties in "When the Clouds Roll By," such as the flood, the nightmare episodes and the ultra-motion photography, while considered big steps in the discovery of new material for the screen, will even be surpassed, states Fairbanks, by other features which he has embodied in the production now nearing completion.

There is but one thing similar about the latest and his last production. That is that it is an original story, written by Mr. Fairbanks himself. The screen adaption will be by Tom Geraghty, editor of productions, who prepared the scenario for the picture that is now attracting wide attention.

Many new faces will be seen in support of Mr. Fairbanks in this next production, including a new leading woman, drawn from the legitimate stage and declared to be a "find." Frank Campeau, long identified with Fairbanks productions, has an excellent part, giving him exceptional opportunities for his particular type of "villainy." Charles Stevens, who has won much favor with Fairbanks in the past, the Indian Eagle Eye, "Bull" Montana and others familiar in previous supporting casts, will again surround the star in support of the story of "Mollycoddle."

Goldwyn Executives Leave Culver City Studios for East; Spring Program Given

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and Abraham Lehr, vice-president, left the Culver City Studios, Sunday, February 22, bound for New York.

During his brief stay on the Coast, Mr. Goldwyn has been active in supervising the production activities of the company, which has started many new pictures, including those of the Eminent Authors and others selected as vehicles for the Goldwyn stars, among them the adaptations of a number of popular stage plays, the motion picture rights to which were recently purchased.

The production program for the early spring, launched by Messrs. Goldwyn and Lehr, includes Mabel Normand in "The Slim Princess," directed by Victor Schertzinger; "Milestones," directed by Paul Scardon; "The Double-Dyed Deceiver" an O. Henry story starring Jack Pickford; "Scratch My Back," a Rupert Hughes story; and "The Great Accident," a Ben Ames Williams story in which Tom Moore is starred.

Mr. Lehr's trip East is the first he has made since November, 1918. Since then, as executive head of the Culver City plant, the Goldwyn vice-president has devoted his energies to building up the studios to their present state of efficiency.

The purpose of Mr. Lehr's visit East has not been announced.

Pathe Sales Force Starts Big Business Drive; Honoring Vice President Brunet

SUPPORTED by a greater variety of high class productions than at any time in the history of the organization, the sales force of Pathe Exchange, Inc., starts on the first day of the second anniversary of Paul Brunet as vice-president and general manager of the exchange. The sum of $6,000 in prizes will be awarded to branch managers establishing the best records in collections and new business.

Since Mr. Brunet assumed office the business of the Pathe exchange has increased to a remarkable extent and many things have been inaugurated that have benefited the sales force and stimulated business. With a bonus system and many competitions men in the exchanges have had great opportunities for sharing profits, and in appreciation of the work of Mr. Brunet they are out to smash all records.

Realizing that the sales force would necessarily require an exceptional production output to keep pace with the great efforts to be put forth, the month of March will see a great array of releases from Pathe. Among the new features are "In Walked Mary," with June Caprice; "Tarnished Reputations," with Dolores Cassinelli, and Blanche Sweet in "The Deadlier Sex." The latest of the Harold Lloyd Comedies, "Haunted Spooks," will be released on March 21.

In arranging the contests the sales force has been divided into four sections, the eastern, western, southern and central. The selling force of each branch in these sections will constitute a team. The winning manager in each division will receive $500 in cash, and each salesman on the winning team will receive a $100 gold watch. The sum of $100 in cash will also be paid to one salesman in each division who secures during the month the greatest amount of business on the new Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedies.

In the event of ties in either of these contests, each of the winners will receive a prize of equal value as is announced for the winner.

Reports from all parts of the country to the home office of Pathe indicate that the drive during anniversary month will meet with the favor of exhibitors because of the general strengthening of the business everywhere at this time. It is conceded, in reports, that the exceptionally hard winter weather and the influenza epidemic have worked toward a feeling of timidity, which is now rapidly disappearing.

London Papers Wax Enthusiastic Over Private Showing of "Broken Blossoms"

ADVICES just received from London by Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., the American corporation controlling all foreign rights to D. W. Griffith's film triumph, "Broken Blossoms," assure the American owners that at a private press showing in that city, a fortnight ago, it created a tremendous sensation.

Such conservative and powerful London papers as the Times and the Daily Mail proclaimed it the finest film offering ever presented by any producer in that country. The consensus of the London critical resumé shows that the verdict of New York on this artistic success had been carefully estimated by the reviewers, who enthusiastically endorsed the local press comments in their appreciation.

Acting upon the suggestion of the London Times, plans have been perfected in London to get around the usual delay of booking theatre time many months after a press showing, and this offering will be put into one of the representative West End theatres and presented in time for the spring season in the British center.

Conservative trade periodicals like Bioscope, Cinema and the Kinematographic Weekly all highly praised the production and devoted full page reviews which declared that it opens a new vista of the art and sets Griffith further forward than all others in the film world.

Thomas Burke, whose Limehouse Nights story, "The Chink and the Child," was the basis upon which Griffith builded "Broken Blossoms," has written an open letter to the press expressing his gratitude to Mr. Griffith for the beautiful treatment of the theme.

Immediately following the London presentation upon the same elaborate scale the piece was given here, Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., will present it in exactly the same manner in Paris at one of the leading theatres and then complete negotiations now pending for a like production of the classic in the principal art centers of Australia.

J. Parker Read, Jr., Announces His Plans for Twelve Special Productions in 1920

THAT J. Parker Read, Jr., has entered the ranks of the important film producers to stay is proven by the plans of the young creator of the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth specials for this year.

"In intend to have Miss Glaum make only five production a year," said Read, "and Hobart Bosworth will be busy on five other specials. I feel that this scheme will give my stars plenty of time to express their abilities to their fullest extent and thereby offer the public the best both they and I have to give them.

"In addition to the ten Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth productions I expect to film in 1920 I have in preparation two stories of sensational character, my treatment of which I hope will prove unique.

"These specials I will make with all-star casts—or at least that is my present intention—and with the finest directors I can obtain at the helm of production. The public, so the exhibitors indicate, want special pictures.

"Miss Glaum's and Mr. Bosworth's stories will be subject to the most careful supervision during the coming year and I feel safe and happy in saying that I am confident that these forthcoming productions, based on actual knowledge of popular likes and dislikes, and backed by motion picture experience and art, will compare most favorably with the finest product of the cinema mart."

Announcement has been made of the signing of John Ince's name to a directorial contract and of negotiations under way for another prominent figure in films to direct certain Reed productions.

Fine Cast for Grossman Feature.

Each member of the cast supporting Marguerite Marsh in the Grossman Pictures, Inc., feature, "Face to Face," was selected because of his or her special fitness for the part to be portrayed. The leading man, Coit Albertson, has appeared in a number of stage and screen productions, also in "The Carter Case," "$1,000,000 Reward" and "Wits vs. Wits," the latter two being Grossman productions.

Joseph Marba, another actor of wide stage and screen experience, is seen in an important role. Other principals are Frances White, Edna Holman, Richard Stewart and Wilbur Kendall.

Texas Guinan to Appear in a Feature.

As soon as Texas Guinan finishes her present contract with the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, which calls for a series of two-reel westerns, she will be presented in a five-reel feature, to be produced by the same concern. Miss Guinan has eight two-reelers already to her credit on her Bulls-Eye contract, with all territory sold.

Jay Hunt, now handling Miss Guinan, will also direct the five-reeler. Her latest Bulls-Eye is called "Letters of Fire" and will be ready for an eastern preview about March 1.

"Tarzan" Print on Way East.

The completed print of Numa Pictures Corporation's production of "The Return of Tarzan" was shipped from Los Angeles Saturday, February 21, to New York. Harry Revier, the director, recently arrived in New York, illness forcing him to leave a few days before the task of cutting and assembling was completed. George M. Merrick, who supervised the production, accompanies the print East. The trade showing will be announced shortly. Bids on the picture by releasing corporations are reported brisk.

National Forms a Studio Council.

Under a new ruling adopted by the National Film Corp. of America a studio council, composed of a member of the board of directors and all the unit directors, will hereafter pass on vital phases of production. The council is composed of J. Bernstein, production manager, and the following directors: William A. Seiter, Harry Edwards, Mark Goldaine, Ward Hayes, Robin Williamson, Paul Hurst, Jack Hoxie, "Mickey" Caldwell and Fred Bauman.

McManus to Supervise "Bringing Up Father."

After a trip over all the battlefields of the Western front with what is said to be the first touring party officially permitted on all the old fighting ground, George McManus, the well-known comic artist, is preparing to return to the United States to supervise the screen debut of his "Mr. and Mrs. Jiggs," the famous characters of his "Bringing Up Father" will be seen in a series of comedies to be issued by International through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Fred Young With R-C in K. C.

The Kansas City branch of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation is now under the management of Fred W. Young, who has succeeded E. W. McAvoy. Universal's Sales Head on Tour.

Sidelights and Reflections

Last week this department contained an article beginning: "Nothing has been heard lately from the scenario writers who are fond of rushing into print with the assertion that the screen should practically limit itself to original material." This week the following explanation has been received from two industrious workers in the field:

We'll be glad to tell you about them. Many have broken under the horrible strain of trying to make logical and plot-tight pictures out of the worthless junk producers buy on the child-like theory that whatever finds its way into the pages of magazines or books MUST be good photoplay material.

Others, surviving these terrors, are abused by directors as being "the curse of the industry," as your pages recently credited one director with asserting. Yet, how many directors attempt the adaptation of stories they are to produce? Funny they should so rely on the "cusses."

Some few of us are finding it very profitable to write an occasional adaptation, but specialize mainly on "saving" pictures by editing and titling picture productions of books and plays that have no releasing possibilities because of inconsistencies, absurd story mechanics and false situation. You might be surprised to know how many former scenario writers are doing this.

Those of us who are thus sitting tight and hanging on are some day going to take fiendish delight in holding up the industry for very fat and juicy sums in payment for original stories. If the demand for original stories doesn't return—and many believe it will not—I'll tell you what we are going to do. Now this is confidential, so hold this page close to you and don't let anyone in on it. We're going to start writing stories to send to producers with the warning that if they don't snap them up at our reasonable price, we'll sell them to some magazine and then they have to pay fifty times as much for them.

For experience whispers that they will do just this.

The following communication to the Moving Picture World explains itself:

Mr. Charles Ray has done me the great honor of asking me to direct him in his new productions, and before starting to work I want to thank you for your interest in the past. I appreciate what your publication has meant to us with the public and the exhibitors and your sincere criticisms have helped us more than I can say.

If possible, I want to set the public and the press right in regard to a rumor which seems to have been spread by mistake. It is said that Mr. Ray means to change his style of work and step forth in an entirely new line. I am sure Mr. Ray appreciates too much what he owes to the public ever to think of making such a change.

Both Mr. Ray and myself feel that we owe a great deal to Mr. Ince for the way in which Mr. Ray has been handled, and we hope to build on the wonderful foundation he has made.

Thanking you again for your co-operation and hoping you will be with us in the same way in the future, I am

Yours very truly,
JEROME STORM.

A glance at the titles in the next column will reveal the pleasing fact that the married ladies are very much in evidence in this week's reviews, and that at least one of the pictures is a strong argument against divorce. WEITZEL.

"Why Change Your Wife?"

Brilliant Comedy Satire Directed by Cecil B. DeMille and Released by Paramount.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

CECIL B. DeMILLE has hit the bulls-eye again. "Why Change Your Wife?," his latest Paramount release, is totally different in character from "Male and Female." It is a comedy satire on married life. Nothing of a farcical nature is introduced. It is truth itself, with rare bits of sparkling drama, and it runs along smoothly and fast. The dialogue of the sub-titles is replete with homely philosophy, the kind that strikes every married man or woman, every lover or sweetheart.

There never was a more costly and lavish display of gowns in a DeMille picture as in this; never more elaborate settings. These two items are real features of the production. But the acting of the three principals, Gloria Swanson as the first wife, Bebe Daniels as the second wife and Tom Meighan as the husband, stands out above anything. Their work leaves nothing undone; in fact, throughout the story they command your attention and admiration.

"Why Change Your Wife?" is about as near a 100 per cent. perfect picture as it is possible to make one. You can boost it without the slightest fear of disappointment.

The Story.

"Why Change Your Wife?" is the story of a husband and wife who, although deeply in love with each other, do not seem to get along owing to slightly opposite temperaments. Robert Gordon likes jazz music; Beth, his wife, likes such classics as "The Dying Poet." The husband likes to take his wife out to a cabaret, the wife likes to listen to Professor So-and-So give a musicale on his violin. Gordon prefers to see his wife dressed in expensive gowns, with a plentiful display of flesh, while Mrs. Gordon shrinks with horror at such a costume. So one night Robert goes out, meets a girl, has a good time and goes home at one a. m. All is well until his wife notices the odor of perfume on his clothes. Then a divorce. The husband later weds the girl, but soon finds out that she is too "flashy" for him.

Gordon then takes things as they are and makes the best of it, but fate intervenes. He and his new wife are at a fashionable summer resort. Here they meet his first wife. Having heard her society friends hint that she lost her husband because she did not dress or act to suit him, Beth makes up her mind to show them that they are wrong. When the meeting takes place, she is beautiful in an elaborate bathing suit, and evidently enjoying herself.

The old spark of love returns, but that is all. Nothing can be done to fix things as they used to be, so they part. Later Gordon meets Beth again, and while walking together he slips and injures himself. His first wife takes him home, and the doctor tells her he cannot be moved until he is better.

Wife No. 2 is notified of the accident by Wife No. 1. She hurries to Gordon's bedside, insists on taking him to her home, and there ensues a bitter fight between the two women. When it is over Wife No. 2 makes up her mind that she doesn't want her husband any more, saying: "The only good thing about marriage, anyway, is the alimony."

Exploitation Angles: Circus this if you desire before the full campaign with teasers along the lines of the title and the divorce angle. Start this well in advance to get interest for the title, but when you launch your regular campaign tone down to a more dignified appeal. Hook up with the success of "Male and Female" by telling that it is by the same producer; but do not make the mistake of trying to make people believe it is the same type of production. Lay stress upon the fact that it is something very different, that it is a discussion of social unrest and the over-readiness of men and women in society to change their partners. Go back to "Male and Female" to hook up with "Old Wives for New" and "Don't Change Your Husband."

"Easy to Get"

Paramount-Artcraft Picture Presenting Marguerite Clark in a Sparkling Comedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN mockery of man's egotism is "Easy to Get," a story with zip and no infirmity of purpose. It is a honeymoon comedy, thoroughly modern in exhibiting the multiplicity of woman's moods. It is interpreted by a bright cast, the star shining with a distinction all her own. It is a pleasure to watch her as an infatuated young bride, her eyes beaming with love, and then flashing with the internal fire of an entirely different emotion. The bride of four hours becomes aware for the first time of man's hollow vanity, his deeply embedded belief in his own superiority, and those eyes no longer reveal her wealth of affection. They burn with the pride and resentment working busily within her. It may be said without detriment to the story that Miss Clark's expressive eyes and face constitute its leading attraction.

A light comedy, cleverly adapted and arranged and admirably directed, "Easy to Get" has a theme forever amusing. The skill and daring shown by the little bride in bringing her over-confident husband down a few pegs lead her into an interesting series of adventures. She emerges triumphant, though somewhat scared, while he is, at least, temporarily cured. The Paramount-Artcraft comedy delighted a packed house at the Rialto, and it will undoubtedly please wherever shown.

The Story.

"Easy to Get" boasts Bob Morehouse to his friend Dick Elliot, in referring to the conquest he made of Milly, his bride. She overhears the men chatting about her in the smoking room of the train soon after starting on her wedding trip, and her infatuation is swiftly replaced by resentment. Burning with rage and wounded sensibility, she descends from the train when it slows up twenty miles from their destination.

With only one thought in mind, that of proving she is not so easy as he imagines, Milly wends her way to the rustic bungalow of a scientist and tells him she fled from a man madly in love with her. She is given shelter and food, but she soon finds that her husband has traced her. She manages to get out of the house as he enters it, bribes the chauffeur of the car he has hired, goes to the country hotel where they intended to pass the honeymoon and registers under an assumed name. She can rest easy for a while, as she has entangled him in difficulties with a rustic sheriff.

She next encounters her husband's friend, Dick, who is pursuing a girl not easy to get, and she enlists his services to make another getaway when Bob returns. They leave together and encounter an old woman driving a wagon. Milly is now determined to give Bob a good scare. She sends back word by Dick that she has been kidnapped by a gang of toughs who will not release her for less than a ransom of five thousand dollars. At the old woman's house, Milly finds a gang of ruffians, but her suspicions are allayed, and she tells them of her scheme to frighten her husband. They promptly agree to assist her.

When Dick returns to the hotel with his story of the bandits he becomes a hero in the eyes of the girl, who has thought him commonplace. Bob raises the necessary fund to pay the ransom and goes to meet the gang. They turn out to be the real thing instead of a joke and get the money, but Bob gives up willingly, and peace dawns on their honeymoon.

"His Wife's Money"

Selznick Presents Eugene O'Brien in a Story of Manhood's Revolt Against the Selfishness of Inherited Wealth.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

APPROPRIATE theme is that of "His Wife's Money" at a time when domestic relations are becoming more strained than ever on economic questions. The Selznick release offers a manly viewpoint. It also shows up the all-too-common selfishness of married women well off in their own right. There are male creatures in our midst who do not hesitate to sacrifice personal honor and dignity of character in order to live on wealthy wives, but they are not objects of admiration, even when they are socially tolerated. The genuine American, as impersonated by Eugene O'Brien, cannot disregard his protective instincts and happily subsist on "His Wife's Money." It is deep in his nature to go to the front where the fighting is hardest and do his share in the general struggle, hence he revolts at being a camp follower in his own family.

Such is the essence of the Selznick story. Its mood is fully appreciated by Eugene O'Brien and Zeena Keefe as the wife. Their performances are the more creditable in that they are of difficult characterizations. Their highly intelligent interpretations of the leading roles and the vitality of the theme make "His Wife's Money" a satisfactory product and a good entertainment.

The Story.

Ralph Barlow is ready to carry the burden of life as a man should, not on "His Wife's Money," when he meets his fate in Marion Phillips. She comes to his hunting lodge while lost in the woods and is so deeply impressed by his manly gallantry that she falls instantly in love and inspires him with reciprocal passion. On being restored to her friends she betrays her feeling through an indiscretion, and he announces their engagement without knowing she is a great heiress. They are happy in their married life until she insists upon entertaining in lavish style, when she is forced to confess that she is "stupidly rich."

Barlow feels deeply the ironic remarks of his wife's friends and decides to develop a mining property of his own in the West. She only smiles with tolerant superiority at the idea of accompanying him—it is unnecessary for either of them to go. He feels that she has become attached to the material inanities of social life and leaves to engage in his enterprise alone. He is, later on, in the midst of a desperate struggle to find a lost mining shaft when she joins him from complex motives, principally to induce him to give up his plans and return with her. This failing, she leaves with a group of gay friends on the very day his efforts, unknown to her, are crowned with success.

Months later, when Marion is sated with social pleasure and so oppressed by melancholy that she plans a trip abroad, the friends who weaned ner from her husband find themselves badly involved financially. Some unknown power is slowly and determinedly destroying their holdings and her own. Barlow has secretly returned and used his newly acquired wealth to bring about a reversal of fortune. He relents, however, on seeing that his wife's heart is as truly his as when their troth was plighted, and he enjoys the happy triumph of tender and forgiving love.

"Wit Wins"

A Story of Romance, Big Business and Revenge, Produced by Burton King Picture Corporation and Released by Hallmark.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

WIT WINS" is a good story, logically worked out and containing an element of mystery that makes it a satisfactory production. It is that combination of society, romance, intrigue in big business that makes an entertaining performance and sends the audience out with a feeling of having enjoyed a good show, however short of being a masterpiece the feature might have been. The story is one that has been used before, yet probably not quite in the same manner. For most stories of big business generally leave nothing for guess-work on the way they will turn out. Hence, the mystery helps this one wonderfully and makes it all the more interesting.

"Wit Wins" concerns a financier, Wharton, who has been ruined by a tricky friend in the stock market. His daughter, Marion, makes a resolution of revenge. The Story.

Wharton, a banker on the verge of ruin, makes a last splurge in society by giving a party. When the guests are gone he tells his daughter, Marion, of his plight. She knows there is treachery behind her father's ruin and determines to get revenge. Down in Wall Street is Lawton, a prosperous banker. He has a son, however, who is the opposite in character. Later Marion Wharton obtains a position in the offices of Lawton as his secretary, and the younger Lawton is so attracted to her that he decides to go to work for his father.

Previous to the girl's engagement to work for Lawton a mysterious man has been employed for confidential work. He and Marion are seen frequently in conversation, and seem to carry on a secret code. Shortly afterward things turn for Lawton. His operations become of a losing nature, and one day valuable stocks and bonds are missed. Evidence points to the girl, but detectives are unable to fasten the theft upon her or to recover the collateral.

Meantime, young Lawton has fallen madly in love with Miss Wharton and calls on her. On one occasion he sees her embrace the mysterious man. As the time passes Lawton, Sr., becomes worried over his misfortune and his inability to stop the losses. He still thinks the missing stocks and bonds are in the possession of his secretary and has her apartment searched. In this his son takes a part, although at first he protests against being drawn into it because he truly loves the girl. But all this is of no avail.

Finally when Lawton, Sr., finds himself practically ruined Miss Wharton calls in the mysterious man and tells the banker where his collateral is. During this, Mr. Wharton walks in, and in him Lawton recognizes the man whom he ruined. He is the father of the girl and the mysterious man is her brother. Everything is cleared up, the youthful lover forgives Miss Wharton for embracing her brother and all is happiness.

"Mary Ellen Comes to Town"

Paramount-Artcraft Picture Starring Dorothy Gish.

Reviewed by H. Clyde Levi.

THIS Paramount-Artcraft story, apparently written with the sole purpose of affording Dorothy Gish an opportunity to display her peculiar talents, serves its purpose admirably. Miss Gish makes excellent use of her features and feet to the amusement of her audiences, and the laughs average about one a minute throughout the running of the picture. The plot is melodramatic in form,. with a strong vein of comedy.

Miss Gish's comedy is delightful, some of the funniest bits being her attempt to cry through a liberal application of grease paint and cold cream; her method of measuring her hall bed room, and her singing of "Sweet Adeline." If the latter effort sounded anything like it looks, it must have been a "scream." Charles Gerrard, as the villain; Ralph Graves, as the hero, and Rhea Haines, as the "vamp," make the best of rather limited opportunities. The rest of the cast is adequate. The photography is good.

The Story.

"Mary Ellen Comes to Town" concerns a young stage-struck girl in a sleepy little southern town, who is the dispenser at the only modern soda fountain in the place. She spends most of her time day-dreaming, and never fails to go down to the depot to see the New York train go by. One day, after some hundreds of trips on which it does not even hesitate, a combination of a hot-box and a cow on the track brings the train to a stop. During the wait a famous actress descends to take the air and Mary Ellen prevails upon her to give her a card to a theatrical agency. She then coaxes her mother for permission to go to New York to "make her fortune."

On the train with her is a young man recently returned from the army, who is the only person in town she has never met. She lands a job in a shady cabaret, whose manager runs it merely as a blind to cover his criminal activities. He puts up a scheme to rob Mary Ellen's townfellow, and forces her, by staging a fake robbery implicating her, to help him work the badger game.

However, at the last moment, Mary Ellen, who has fallen in love with the proposed victim, refuses to go on with the game, and the tables are turned on the villain. The finale finds Mary Ellen, on her honeymoon trip, back in her home town, a wiser and happier girl.

"The Chamber Mystery"

Sprightly Comedy Drama—Mostly Comedy —Produced by Schomer-Ross, Shows Claire Whitney and Earl Metcalfe in Leading Roles.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

CONTRARY to what would be inferred from its title, "The Chamber Mystery," is a lively farce, with more mirth than mystery, more laughs than thrills. An obedient heroine with too much father for her own happiness, who is about to be forced into an alliance with a pickle merchant, and a young doctor, whose ardor exceeds his discretion, thereby causing him to hide in his sweetheart's boudoir, wherein she herself is presently locked, furnish much but not all of the amusement.

The whole is pleasantly clean and entertaining, and while its cast boasts of no renowned personalities, it has been chosen with an admirable regard for type, and shows, on the part of its members, a general adherence to the traditions of good acting. A number of clever characterizations add to the merriment.

Claire Whitney, as the wistful-eyed lady in distress, realizes the requirements of her role, and Earl Metcalfe gives a spirited sympathetic impersonation of the unlucky doctor. Robert Lee Allen as the pickle king; Sam Edwards as the girl's dictatorial parent; Dorothy Walter, the complacent cook; Howard Morgan, the much-married alderman; Ricca Allen, his wife; Fred Stanton, the omniscient detective, and Camilla Dolberg as the worried, hurried mother, all contribute generously to the picture's success. Director and producer have concentrated their attention upon the matters of characterization and plot-manipulation, rather than upon any elaborate outlay of sets or any particular effort toward perfecting the sub-titles.

Scenario and direction by Abraham Schomer.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

There is agitation in the West household, the young Dr. West having mysteriously disappeared without taking his coat, hat, rubbers or gloves. His mother notifies the police, who assign the search to Detective Rhombus, a self-acknowledged expert.

In the meantime the cause of all this excitement is in the Parker apartment on the floor above, whither he has come at the call of his sweetheart, Kitty. Kitty is in a desperate situation. Her father has decreed that she shall marry Gus Woozle, a prosperous dealer in pickles, who is just paying her a morning visit. They over-rule her protests and blame the doctor for poisoning her mind against Woozle. They order Dr. West to go home, and then the two leave to get Alderman Smiggles, a notary public, to come and perform the wedding ceremony.

West sees them depart and hurries upstairs again to Kitty. They plan to elope, but before they can accomplish this Parker returns, and Kitty, afraid for her lover's safety, hides him in her boudoir. Her father has left word for Smiggles to come at six o'clock to marry Kitty to Woozles. Determined that she shall not escape, he locks her in her room, where she and the doctor are compelled to spend most of the day. They manage to keep from starving by receiving food through the transom from the cook, who, unaware of the doctor's presence, is unable to account for Kitty's tremendous appetite.

Later, when Woozle has reappeared, the detective arrives and in ferreting out what information he can from those present, accuses Parker and Woozle of having murdered the doctor and disposing of the body afterward. Thereupon the house is searched, but Kitty skillfully prevents them from entering her room. Parker and Woozle are taken to court. Alderman Smiggles arrives while they are gone, marries Kitty to Dr. West and when father returns there is nothing left to do but give them his blessing—which he does.

"In Walked Mary"

Five-Reel Pathe Release Features June Caprice in Engaging Little Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

An enjoyable little story is pictured in this five-reel Pathe-Capellani release entitled "In Walked Mary." June Caprice, in the leading role of Mary Ann Hubbard, was never sweeter and more bewitching in her personal appeal. The plot is a light and pleasant one, with a good undercurrent of humor running through it. One or two of the transitions are so abrupt as to miss a certain desirable dramatic effect, but in general the continuity is excellent.

Mary Ann is a typical Southern girl, with Southern notions of hospitality. When her negro mammy advises her to go to New York and cast herself upon the mercies of a young Northern gentleman who had befriended her, the girl has no doubt whatever as to her reception. Even the fact that she makes an embarrassing appearance in the midst of a bachelor's party, much to Dick's chagrin, does not disturb her feeling that she is entirely welcome. And in the course of events she wins out. She also interrupts Dick's proposed matrimonial alliance with a designing girl and finds his love turned to herself.

The scenes on the Southern estate at the beginning are quite realistic and picture the humor and pathos of a sheriff's sale of the heroine's household effects. Frances M. Grant plays a life-like role as the negro mammy. Thomas Carrigan and Stanley Walpole have the masculine leads and Vivienne Osborne does well as the adventuress.

The Story.

Mary Ann Hubbard, in "In Walked Mary," is the surviving member of a fine old Southern family, and as the story opens the estate is in the sheriff's hands. The girl and her faithful negro mammy see everything pass under the hammer of the auctioneer. Even the old family bed, which the heroine desired to keep, is sold to a young Northerner, Dick Allison. But Dick, seeing Mary's grief, insists upon restoring the bed to her.

The girl and her mammy go to an old tumble-down cabin, near the estate, to make their home. One stormy night Dick seeks shelter with them. Mammy's suspicions of the Northerner are gradually overcome and he becomes an intimate friend of Mary. When he is called to New York suddenly he leaves his address with her and tells Mary to look him up if she ever needs a friend.

In course of time Mary is threatened with becoming a charity charge and Mammy urges her to go to New York and appeal to Dick for aid. This Mary does, with amusing results. She invades a bachelor party and embarrasses Dick greatly at first, but later she finds a place in his affections. Mary even upsets a burning love affair between Dick and an adventuress and wins Dick herself.

"Even as Eve"

First National Adaptation of Robert Chambers' Story, "The Shining Band," Features Grace Darling Surrounded by Capable Cast.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

That nature can be so beautiful and human nature so ugly fills the spectator with wonder as he views the superb out-door scenery in "Even as Eve," which serves as a background for the activities of wicked, deluded mortals. True to life it may be, but such a revelation of decayed society and dishonest human impulses may not meet with general approval. However, the author's close observation of men and women, his interest in the unusual, his admiration for natural beauties and splendid animal specimens, are carefully reflected in this picturization of his novel and call forth due praise.

The cast includes but one character who elicits anything but disgust, at least in the beginning of the story, and she is Eileen Darling, who has accurately reproduced the O'Hara, the heroine, played by Grace manners of an unsophisticated, somewhat primitive daughter of a mountain recluse. G. V. Seyffertitz as the insincere "prophet" of a fanatical religious cult, opposed to love and marriage, has interpreted his role with subtle cunning. Peyster Sproul, a rascal in moral and business relations alike, and his designing wife are played satisfactorily by E. J. Ratcliffe and Sally Crute. The role of the cynic, who eventually regains confidence in women, is discreetly handled by Ramsaye Wallace. There is a decided tendency toward melodrama in many of the scenes, the popularity of which will vary according to the tastes of patrons.

The Story.

Eileen O'Hara lives with her father in a remote retreat in the Adirondacks, where she does not come in contact with conventional folk. Her father has determined that she shall lead a single life, because of an unfortunate affair some years before, which brought about a separation between his wife and himself. The man who is responsible for his wife's infidelity is Peyster Sproul, who turns up later, and, as president of the Sagamore Club, attempts to buy O'Hara's land for a summer resort. O'Hara recognizes him and a quarrel ensues which results in O'Hara's death.

The girl then falls into the hands of "The Shining Band," religious faantics opposed to love and marriage, who attempt to enforce their ideas upon her. Sproul's wife interferes for reasons of her own. She has discovered that Dr. Lansing, a young man with cynical ideas about women, is really falling in love with Eileen, and in order to carry out her sinister design she temporarily adopts Eileen.

In the meantime Sproul has secured an illegitimate hold upon the land by paying Amasa Munn, dishonest leader of the "Shining Band," a small sum, and has kept for his personal use the club funds which were entrusted to him for purchasing the site. Upon receiving orders from the club that he produce the deed, Sproul is in desperate straits. He endeavors to force Eileen to give up the deed which she has hidden in a cave. Sproul's wife pretends to assist her husband by staging an episode which really results in his disaster and in Eileen's apparent disgrace. But the girl is innocent, and Lansing surprises Agatha Sproul by defending Eileen. Later he saves her and the box of precious papers after Munn has followed her to the hidden recess. "Faith"

Five-Reel Fox Production Features Peggy Hyland in Simple, Heart-Interest Story.

In this simple story, laid in Scotland, in and near the city of Edinburgh, Peggy Hyland plays the leading feminine role. She appears as the niece of a hard-headed, grasping old Scotchman, whose love of the girl is the one softening influence of his life. Edwin B. Tilton plays the part of MacGregor very well. J. Parks Jones is pleasing as the country lover, David Harden, and Edward Hearn plays the scheming young doctor acceptably.

But the chief character of the little tale is Adam Harden, the "faith healer." This role is effectively portrayed by Winter Hall, who makes of Adam a sweetly-smiling old man, always ready with a helpful word for suffering individuals. He possesses the healing touch, which in truth seems to be possessed by certain individuals, regardless of creed or medical pretense. Adam, who follows along somewhat in the lines of "The Miracle Man," is not in any sense a fakir, but simply a kindly, religious man who has a happy faculty in dealing with sick persons. It is he who, in the closing scenes, restores the heroine to health, when medical treatment has failed, and wins over the heart of MacGregor to her rightful lover.

The Scotch settings and characters are pleasing and many charming country scenes are pictured. As a whole the story is one that will appeal to the family circle and make friends in spite of the lack of dramatic pretense.

The Story.

A young doctor named George Kyle, in "Faith," lives in the city of Edinburgh. He has become impoverished through failure to get on as a physician, despite his good appearance. While Kyle is in a despondent mood, his housekeeper, Meg Harper, suggests a plan by which they may become rich. She induces him to pose as the missing nephew of the dead Lady Murrell, and commends him to the friendship of Sir Kent MacGregor, a stingy old Scotchman living near the city.

Kyle goes to see MacGregor and finds him in a state of wrath over the love affair that has developed between his niece, Peggy Laughlin, and a young shepherd lad, David Harden. The latter is the son of an old faith healer, Adam Harden, who goes about treating the sick. MacGregor accepts Kyle as the missing nephew of Lady Murrell and makes him welcome. Kyle at once becomes interested in Peggy ,though she does not care for him, and proceeds to help MacGregor in his efforts to break off the match between the girl and David.

David is finally put out of the house by MacGregor. Peggy escapes and flees to David but returns home on the advice of Adam Harden. Peggy succumbs to an illness on the eve of her forced marriage to Kyle, and sinks into a state of weakness, which thoroughly alarms MacGregor. The latter, relenting, sends for Adam. Peggy is restored to health and MacGregor gives her to David.

Measuring Up a Hall Bedroom.
Dorothy Gish, in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town," a Paramount release.

A toddling child, just getting its balance a-foot; a dog of shaggy coat and remarkable "education"; a horse of dashing style and fearless demean, and a chimpanzee so close to human that amazement crowds appreciation of his work almost into the state of disbelieving what the eyes behold, constitute the leading "actors" in a cast that has three or four mere men and a woman to contrast their work with the skill of their animal "inferiors."

The child is a repeated victim of attempted "kidappings," but the dog, the horse and the chimpanzee combine their skill in co-operative rescues that time and again foil the "villains." Katharine Hillaker's titles add greatly to the enjoyment of the subject and, of themselves, punctuate the progress of the comedy with many laughs.

It is for Mr. Chester to worry about following up this amazingly good start with subsequent "animal comedies"—but there is a smart task cut out for this producer by the merits of his initial offering in the new series. Suffice it now to say: "Foiled by Four" is a corker.

"Hoodooed"

Paramount-Carter De Haven Comedy Ridiculing Familiar Fetishes About Good and Bad Luck.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A LOT of wholesome sanity emerges from the comedy "Hoodooed." Very pointedly, but amusingly, it shows how small a part old superstitions play in what happens adversely or for our benefit. In its motive this keen little Paramount-De Haven story rises superior to the average, holding up to scorn as it does the hidden emptiness of weakness and stupidity. And it is timely.

Carter De Haven plays the role of a young business man on the edge of advancement and eager to take advantage of every token of good luck. He even consults a dream book and jumps over the bed ten times to overcome the evil influence of a bad dream. His wife is nearly distracted by his absurdities, but she tolerates them and suggests that he invite his employer to dine with them. His agitation only increases. He spills salt and throws a lot of it over his shoulder into the eyes of the house servant and thus loses a good cook on the day of the dinner.

He finds a horseshoe and hides it in a box near his entrance door, dropping it on a mirror as he does so. He also discovers a four-leaf clover to avert disaster. He is so nervous at the office that he soils his employer's trousers with ink and is given a day off. It is an eventful day. After lunch he walks out with his wife, carefully avoiding stepping on a crack, "for luck you lack." He is delighted to be followed by a black cat and makes a cushion of his coat picking up pins.

After all these preparations, and after the dinner, he is offered the desired position and his employer leaves. His wife now shows him it is Friday the 13th. He suddenly decides to give up superstition. He throws the horseshoe out of the door. Calamity. His employer is brought back insensible, hit on the head by a horseshoe.

"A Man There Was"

ASCRIBED to a dramatic poem by Ibsen, "A Man There Was" has plenty of full-blooded activity all its own. There is in it an Ibsen unfamiliar, though it contains his belief that to live is to continually war with fiends of self that infest the brain and heart. The Radiosoul release is replete with incident and desperate situation, while presenting the mental processes of a heroic man. What he feels and suffers the spectator lives through while watching the vigorous interpretation of Victor Seastron. Under his personal direction all superfluous action is eliminated. Even the auxiliary characters are used only to heighten an effect dominated by a single figure, that of man at his best and worst under the stress of acute suffering.

The performance of Victor Seastron as an actor deserves abundant praise, but his handling of the subject matter as director awakens enthusiasm. This will be more clearly brought out when his product is scientifically perfected, but there is enough of it to show vivid flashes of potential genius. His painstaking attention to details in landscape and interiors merits critical approval, but his handling of spirited and realistic scenes of storm at sea is almost a revelation. In this, his native country, he has made an effort which is bound to attract attention. Because he is a director who has the courage of his instincts there results in "A Man There Was," a picture of high intensity and tender pathos, a drama of the soul.

"A man there was" by the name of Terge Viken, of Viking blood, for he loved the sea. One day, returning home from a long voyage, he found his sweet wife spinning and rocking a cradle. From that moment the intrepid sailor found all his happiness at home. Then came a time of war. The island on which Viken lived was isolated by enemy warships. His people were slowly starving to death. He risked a thousand dangers in a light skiff and evaded a man-of-war lying in the offing. Keen eyes detected him, but he escaped by his skill and daring. He found friends and food on a neighboring shore and returned. He was weary of body when nearing home, but he made a mighty struggle for those he loved. A declaration of peace released him war vessel and his skiff sunk on the shoals.

In vain Vikin pleaded with My Lord, the war vessel's captain. He was loaded with chains and cast into a land prison. There he endured cruel treatment and hardship five years, his mind forever fixed on those he loved. Adeclaration of peace released him and he returned to his island home bowed and gray. There was no one to welcome him. Wife and child lay in one grave by the sea. After that he lived a recluse, sweet and kind to all he met except in times of storm, when fires of hate glowing in his bosom shone in his burning eyes.

Years of solitude passed—he was thought to be crazed—when a private yacht flew signals of distress where once the war vessel swung at anchor. Vikin alone went to the rescue. It fell to him to guide the yacht. He recognized in the owner none other than My Lord, the heartless captain of the warship. Viken steered the yacht on a reef. He took off the owner and his wife and child. He stove the boat on the same shoals where his own went down and heeded no pleadings for mercy until he looked into the child's eyes. Then the finer man rose in him, pure and warm. sunshine in a sky storm, and he saved those who had destroyed his family and his lifetime happiness. A man he was.

"Young Mrs. Winthrop"

Emotional Role for Ethel Clayton in Paramount Adaptation of Howard Play.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

YOUNG Mrs. Winthrop," from the stage play of Bronson Howard, is the story of a domestic tragedy growing out of the baleful influence of a city's rushing, inconsiderate, tinsel activity on the lives of a happily started couple. Ethel Clayton in the title role plays a part which abounds in emotional opportunity, and to which she does commendable justice. Her dramatic scenes are sincerely done, she does not pose, and her acting does not pall or drag out the performance. Personally she is her own attractive self, revelling in a lavish wardrobe and the chance to display it. Harrison Ford's Douglas Winthrop is a decidedly creditable interpretation—he has just the properly convincing amount of youth, good looks and stage presence, and he does seem to be the embodiment of the character's successful, stubborn, blindly intolerant and yet manly personality. Helen Dunbar makes a statuesque mother, Mabel Van Buren is quite pleasantly despicable as the lady villainess, and Charles Ogle scores a certain hit with his part of the kindly lawyer. The play has been carefully prepared, the acting is forceful and in the last part there is sure amusement in the "phychology scene" in the lawyer's office. It does not leave a hurried impression, as do so many otherwise good features. The settings are in good taste, and especially noteworthy is the ball room view, with its varied and fantastic masquerades.

Quite passable amusement for Ethel Clayton's staunch admirers.

Young Mrs. Winthrop is the society-spoiled wife of a rising young business man. The romantic "newlywed" atmosphere of their lives has been dispelled by business absorption on the part of Douglas, the husband, and by a continued dose of giddy revelry with Mrs. Dick Chetwyn on the part of Constance, the wife. The only happy elements in their home are provided by Baby Rose, their small daughter, and the elder Mrs. Winthrop, who, seeing the drift of events, partially succeeds in bringing the young couple to a realization of their peril. In reparation, they agree to re-make each other's acquaintance by a quiet evening at home, for which Constance foregoes a gay masked ball, and Douglas his usual business evening. It is the eve of the baby's birthday and both look forward to a happy readjustment. But Mrs. Delaney, a malicious neighbor whose vindictive ire has been aroused by the fashionable Mrs. Winthrop's deliberate snubs, has managed to scrape up an acquaintance with Douglas, and by false phone messages and talk of business succeeds in detaining him at her home on the all-important evening. Constance, mortally piqued by his supposed indifference, throws herself into the spirit of the masquerade party, determined to answer coldness with spite. Her return home finds a dying Baby Rose and a broken-hearted, misunderstanding husband. The baby's subsequent death is the last straw and the two agree to separate permanently. But the mother's fervant prayers, seconded by the disclosures of a discharged servant and the clever insight of Douglas' lawyer—a family friend of the old small town days—bear fruit in a joint interview in the lawyer's office. During its course, the old man so plays upon their recollections of lost love and happiness that both the erring young Winthrops come back to realities and achieve ultimate understanding.

"The Amateur Wife"

Irene Castle Starred in Fascinating Love Drama.

Reviewed by Herbert Caryl.

CHARMING gowns of the latest fashion, romance, high life, tragedy, and love are intermingled in "The Amateur Wife," Paramount Artcraft's latest production. Miss Irene Castle, that favorite of the screen, who always fascinates the women, and men, too, with her beauty, stunning dresses and clever acting has a vehicle in "The Amateur Wife" to display all her beauty, gowns, and talent.

While it is not a story to stir the soul, "Amateur Wife" is very good entertainment. From beginning to end it has a dash and spice that is alluring and fascinating. High flying parties, the murder of an actress, the story of the girl from the convent who comes into modern life and captures the hearts of men, finally that of her husband, is all very interesting and entertaining.

Arthur Rankin, nephew of Lionel Barrymore, plays the role of the young hot head, Billy Ferris, in an excellent manner. W. P. Carleton does good work as Spotiswood and Augusta Anderson portrays Dodo the dancing queen in striking fashion.

The Story.

A young French convent girl comes to America to live with her mother, a musical comedy actress. The girl's plain clothes and innocent ways get on the mother's nerves. Left alone the girl is befriended by Spottiswood, an admirer, of her mother. The mother is killed by a jealous lover, Ferris, in a quarrel, and Spotiswood marries the girl. She has become a lady of the world when her husband deserts her, but later they are brought together.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Beat the Health Board to It and Cash In on a Real Germ-Free House

YEAR before last we suffered an epidemic of infantile paralysis; last season it was the influenza, which latter has chosen to play a return date with us during the present winter. And during these visitations the exhibitor lost a goodly percentage of the box office receipts that would have been his under normal conditions.

Not that the house was closed in each event but that people who habitually crowded into unventilated trolleys, engaged in bargain counter rushes in department store cellars and whose homes were often the reverse of sanitary remained away from the shows while the scare prevailed.

And many children who were allowed to attend school, where their companions freely coughed and sneezed over them, were sternly bade to shun the movies.

Might as Well Face Fact.

We might as well face the fact that we are going to have epidemics from time to time and that it will be money in the exhibitor's bank account to make his house the most sanitary establishment in town and then so firmly impress the fact upon everyone that people will be more afraid of eating meat from a marble trimmed butcher shop than attending his feature pictures.

> Do You Notice How Good
> The Air of This House Is?
> It's because our ....Ventilating System changes it completely every .... minutes.
> You don't use any second hand breath in the .... Theatre.
> Can this be said of any other building in town?

We have already devoted considerable attention to the subject of ventilation and our readers appear to have been thorough impressed with the importance of frequent changes of atmosphere as a means of popularizing their houses. But after the Typhoon, Sturtevant or Monsoon has been installed, don't wait for the ideal air condition to slowly percolate into the consciousness of the patron.

> Willie's Teacher Asked Him
> Where Diseases Originated;
> Willie Said:
> "The germs come from Germany, the microbes from Ireland and Parasites from Paris." Whether or not Willie was correct, they are all foreign to the .... Theatre that is daily disinfected with.........
> Is any other building in town equally sanitary?

Put the first slide on the screen and capitalize to the utmost the amount that the said ventilating system cost.

Eliminate draperies as much as possible and if walls are painted, let the paint be one that many be thoroughly washed without injury and wash it frequently. Where steps are absent, linoleum is preferable to bare floors as it affords no cracks or seams for lodgment of dust, dirt or germs.

Disinfect Liberally.

Be liberal in the use of a good disinfectant. By good I mean one that actually disinfects and does not rely upon one smell covering up another. Use it whenever the floors and walls are washed and flush all drains with it. Never allow a dust rag, a mop or a broom to be used in the theatre without applying the disinfectant to them —and keep on applying.

And don't make the mistake of choosing the brand of disinfectant by the price. You would not choose your physician by competitive bids and the disinfectant is your physician of prevention.

Have no false modesty about blowing your horn good and loud regarding your disinfecting campaign. A slide something like the second will drive the point home.

> Howdy Folks!
> I'm the official dust catcher of this house.
> Did you notice how clean everything is? That's because I'm on the job before each show.

If building a house, arrange for a vacuum cleaning system as part of the equipment. If this is not possible, one of the many excellent portable machines will do the trick. Be sure and get a big husky machine such as is used in hotels and institutions and get the entire bunch of tricks in the way of accessories with it so that you can clean mouldings, blow out the piano, organ and radiators, clean the hangings and get into corners and then have the machine's portrait taken and put it on your screen with a few words to the following effect:

An item that will add much to the comfort of patrons and cause them to feel more safe in having their children attend the shows is the installation of sanitary paper drinking cups. These may be arranged for free use or be retailed from an automatic vending machine.

Solution of the Drinking Problem.

These cups are the solution of the drinking problem for public places where convenience of the thirsty and absolute sanitation must be combined. These may be featured by a slide that will make their presence known and appreciated by the audience.

> Said the monkey to the owl
> "Oh! What'll you have to drink?"
> Said the owl, "Since you are so very kind,
> I'll take a bottle of ink."
> If you want ink, the stationery store down the street has a very good assortment. But if you'd like a nice cool cup of water there is a sanitary cup dispenser on the rear aisle, filled with brand new cups that have never been used. Could you get this in any restaurant in town?

You have a lavatory of course. It cost money to equip it. Spend a little more and make it a big asset. Throw out the old fashioned soap dish and the linen toweling and substitute liquid soap containers and individual paper towels so that it will be possible for the most fastidious patron to realize that he can have germ-proof cleanup on your premises.

And then get this slide on the screen.

> Financial Tip
> How to Make a Cleanup
> Utilize the individual liquid soap drops and the individual paper towels that we have installed in the lavatory. You cannot get such a hand bath anywhere else in town.

Do It Now.

Do not wait for an epidemic to strike your town before you put this santiary campaign into operation. Start right now and make so much noise about it that your patrons will gradually assimilate the knowledge that yours is an establishment that has absolutely no room for disease germs and that they are better guarded in it than in their own homes.

It is a great point to make but you can make it and, when you have put it over, it will be hard sledding for any official who endeavors to close you up while any other enterprise continues to do business.

Lightning Coin Changer Co. Extending Its Field of Effort

THE Lightning Coin Changer Company of Chicago has just closed a deal with the Perkins Electric Company of Montreal, whereby the latter concern becomes the exclusive Canadian distributors of the Lightning coin changer.

The initial order of the Perkins Company was for two hundred and fifty machines which the factory is now adapting to handle Canadian coins.

This is not the only agency recently established by the Lightning Coin Changer Company. It has arranged with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the distribution of its device in Cuba and is now negotiating with the same company for representation in South American countries.

The De Vry Projector Stimulates Interest

A BRISK demand for the De Vry Portable Projector in the Kansas City territory was announced by W. H. Bell, manager of the Equitable Film Corporation at Kansas City. A delayed shipment recently caused the office to be "sold out" for several days. Many commercial concerns as well as churches and schools are buying the machines, Mr. Bell said.

A large mercantile concern in Kansas City recently purchased six of the machines for its salesmen. Film was made showing Exhibitors Are Satisfied.

A large cracker manufacturing concern and loose-leaf ledger manufacturing concern also purchased machines for their salesmen.

Mr. Bell said that exhibitors are not complaining because the machines are being sold to churches and schools for educational purposes, as it has been proved to them that the machine merely stimulates interest and is not in the nature of competition.

Tell Us Your Troubles

WHENEVER any exhibitor or house manager runs up against a snag in the matter of equipment—its choice, use or installation; whenever you are in doubt as to just what you should do to make a new house attractive or improve an old one—ask the "Better Equipment" Department and we will dig up the dope for you. BUT don't forget to enclose a stamped return envelope with your inquiry.

The Government Retained Them.

Moving Picture World:

What are the present whereabouts of the hundreds of moving picture projectors that the government, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and similar bodies must have had at the end of the war? Can you tell me whether or not any of the foregoing have these machines for sale now, or where they may be bought, if at all?

An advertiser in a certain mechanical magazine offers a 12 light, 110 volt generator at a very moderate price. Would not this machine, in all probability, furnish ample light for the average moving picture projector?

What's the best light for moving picture projector, where electricity is not to be had? What's the lowest candle power safe to use at say, 35 feet?

JOHN T. PERRIN.

(1) As nearly as I can ascertain, the army and navy have retained and stored these machines for future use at army posts and aboard vessels of the navy.

The great work performed by pictures in the late war opened the eyes of the government to the fact that the screen was a mighty factor in upholding the morale of its forces and, from now on, projection

(2) If the outfit were suitable for picture work it would probably be advertised in our columns.

Why take chances when you know that Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh; General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.; Westinghouse Electric and Mfg. Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa., and J. H. Hallberg, 1604 Broadway, build generating plants for picture theatres?

(3) Acetylene gives a particularly good result when electricity is unobtainable.

Write Oscar F. Ostby, Small Tank Department, Prestolite Company, Inc., 30 East 42nd street, New York, who can advise you regarding outfits.

Some Question.

Moving Picture World:

I am considering embarking in the moving picture show business and would like to have you advise as to the following, if possible:

About how much should the monthly expense be on a show. seating 1,000 people, aside from the rent of the buildings.

About how much would the monthly film rent amount to if the show only ran from about 7 to 11 p. m., and each show lasting about one and one-half hours, using one ordinary comic film, one dramatic film and a film of world events, etc.

What would you advise in the way of equipment for such a show; or kindly give me the names of some books dealing with the above if possible.

Thanking you for your kind attention in the above, I remain, L. J. FISCHER.

So far as an inquiry of this nature may be answered, you will find the answer on page 783 of the Moving Picture World of January 31.

The best possible guide to the purchase of equipment that is equipment is to be found in our advertising pages. The concern that talks to our readers through our advertising columns must be reliable to be admitted to those columns and it must manufacture something mighty good to be able to keep selling it to the critical subscribers who look to our columns for the latest and best in the field of pictures.

Take No Chances.

Of course, there are a few good concerns who do not advertise with us, but the majority are with us, and you will take no chances by confining your purchase to our advertisers.

The Exhibitors' Library, consisting of "Modern Theatre Construction," price $3, will tell you how to plan and arrange your house; Richardson's Handbook, price $4, will tell you all about projection; Hallberg's "Motion Picture Electricity," price $2.50, will aid you in arranging your electrical equipment, and Sargent's "Picture Theatre Advertising," price $2, will show you how to fill your house with patrons.

The entire library costs but $11.50 delivered and it will smooth out a lot of bumps from your path.

The newsstand price of Moving Picture Picture World is 15 cents. The subscription price is $3 the year. Subscribe direct, save $4.80 and miss no issues.

A SMALL INVESTMENT—LARGE RETURNS—

This Machine is designed to apply a wax compound to the margin of New Films, to prevent damage during the first few runs thru the Projecting Machine.

The collecting of emulsion from "green" films on aperture plate and tension springs of the projector is in many cases causing untold damage to the film and excessive wear to the projector as well as marring the presentation on the screen by jumping.

Proper Waxing of New Films—

Prolongs the life of the Film.
Eliminates excessive wear on Projecting Machine.
Insures Steady Pictures on the screen.
Prevents tearing of sprocket holes by emulsion deposits.

AND

Saves the film from having Oil squirted all over it by some Operator trying to get "green" film thru his machine without a stop.

The Werner Film Waxing Machine applies the Compound accurately to the margin of the film and positively will not spread wax onto the picture.

A PERFECT DRESS IS ONE THAT ATTRACTIVELY SUGGESTS THE LOVELY LINES OF A SEDUCTIVE FIGURE UNDERNEATH IT.

FOR the film it exploits the RITCHEY poster performs a very similar service. It is designed and executed by men who have a sound and comprehensive knowledge of crowd psychology. Therefore it invariably suggests that the photo-play it advertises is one that must be seen. Because of the consummate artistry of its rendition it does more than suggest. It absolutely convinces! Having done that, perforce it sells the maximum number of admissions.

And that is a test that every exhibitor can apply to RITCHEY posters, he doesn't have to take our word for it. He can count the box-office receipts!

The essential function of the RITCHEY poster is to sell the maximum number of tickets. It does that, not sometime, but all the time, and it does it because every phase of its execution is in the hands of the greatest poster advertising experts in the world!

Their concentrated efforts, under absolutely incomparable direction, have resulted in making the RITCHEY trade mark as valuable as the sterling stamp is on silver!

SIMPLEX SELLS ON MERIT ALONE

Wherever Motion Picture Machines are discussed the supremacy of the Simplex is conceded~

That's why a perusal of the ever growing list of Simplex users is like calling the roll of the leaders in all branches of the Motion Picture Industry.

These results have only been obtained after convincing the trade that our policy of building the finest projector and selling it on merit alone was to be an established one.

Realizing that when building our Simplex product we put a generous 100 per cent value into it our trade does not expect us to depart from our established policy of selling through our distributing forces at a figure that not only insures machine valuation but service as well.

"MY LADY'S GARTER"

From the Knee of a Countess to the Hands of a Crook

UNDER the eyes of a dozen guards the garter—England's most priceless treasure—stolen from the British Museum. Who had it?

That is the start of the most thrilling and absorbing story Jacques Futrelle ever wrote.

First published in the Saturday Evening Post, it was one of the biggest successes that magazine ever had. In book form it was a tremendous seller.

NOW in the hands of Maurice Tourneur, who has given new life to so many masterpieces, "My Lady's Garter" is far more thrilling, more absorbing, than in the book.

With a wonderful cast, headed by Sylvia Bremer and Wyndham Standing, it means money to every exhibitor in the country.

"The Fortune Hunter"

A Fortune—

Or the Girl He Loved—

WHICH?

He can have one or the other, but not both. He had started out after the fortune—and he could have annexed this very easily. Then when he practically had it within his grasp, he wasn't sure that it was worth it.

"The Fortune Hunter" is life in the living—the crying need that all of us feel for the things that we want most and seldom get.

It's a picture that palpitates with drama and bristles with humor. It's the unusual—the Leap Year Picture.

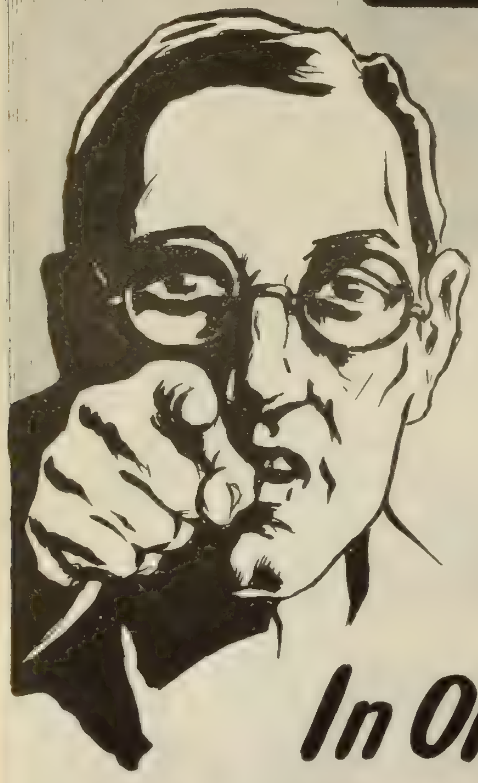
The Truth about



THE Sultan of Turkey once remarked that it was known to all grown men that one of two horses could always run faster than the other—so why all the excitement about horse races?

The same is true of News Reels. There can be but one "best." There always is one "best." One that gives your theatre more scoops and more beats and more subjects in the course of a week than any other Service. Once you know which News Service this is, there is no longer need for argument. Competition, so far as you are concerned, is deader than the Sultan of Turkey's horse-race. Here are the facts as to the BIG THREE:

In Only 8 Months, 31 Scoops!

BETWEEN May 1st and December 1st, 1919, a period of eight months, the Big Three, the Service that gives you the cream of the news three times a week, gave you no less than 31 separate and distinct scoops. Seven of these were in May—five were in June—four were in July—two were in August—five were in September—three were in October—three in November, and two in December. This makes an average of four absolutely exclusive pictures a month and proves that you can depend on the Big Three for just this kind of news service month in and month out.

62 Days ahead!

NEXT to scooping your competitor comes "beating him to it," and just as a sample the Big Three offers the fact that on April 23rd it released a picture of the Government's Aviation Orientator that was sixty-two days ahead of all competitors. Previous to that, on March 26th, it released a picture of Great Britain's Airship R-33, that was sixty days ahead.

THE BIG

the News Reels

We beat all competitors in Number of Subjects shown

FROM May 1st, 1919, to December 31st, a period of eight months, our nearest competitor released sixty-nine issues, at the rate of two a week. These sixty-nine issues contained, in all, 546 subjects—a pretty fair record as news-gathering and news-picturing goes—except for the following fact:

IN the same eight months International released 106 Issues, containing 917 subjects, or seventy per cent. more than its competitor. In other words, if you were showing the Big Three you had nearly two chances to one of showing a big news picture ahead of your competitor, leaving out the fact that the Big Three would probably beat its competitor anyway.

We beat all competitors in the Dates of Mutual Subjects

AS stated above, our nearest competitor issued in eight months 546 subjects. Of these International was ahead on 129 in the date of showing—in other words, was ahead to the extent of twenty-three per cent. in the dates of showings of mutual subjects. Now compare this with our competitor's showing on mutual subjects, as given in the next column.

IN the same period of eight months, International issued 917 subjects. Of these, our nearest competitor was ahead in only 4 2/10%—in other words, International was nearly six times as enterprising as its nearest competitor in showing your people the news while it's news, the pictures they want to see.

We Thank You!

THE things that really count in this world are those you can't buy—things there isn't money enough on earth to buy. Hence Realart finds more satisfaction in these few voluntary lines from THE EXHIBITORS HERALD of January 3, 1920, than could be squeezed from realms of inspired publicity:

> " 'What kind of pictures will they make?' is the natural exhibitorial question when a new producing company is launched. 'What kind of ad. service will they give?' is a question once unvoiced that is coming to be of more and more importance....It may now be recorded.....that the press material provided with Realart Pictures is altogether in keeping with the announced policy of that organization.....Add that the material is at once artistic and practical, that its appeal is directed to no single class, that the exhibitor of high and low estate can use it with equal facility, and the quality of Realart advertising material is established."

But Realart's service men don't claim all the credit! There's something, you know, in having pictures to work with that are themselves an inspiration to unusual endeavor.

"Pollyanna" is the best known, most-talked-about little lady in the world today. Just a tender little wisp of a girl, but her "glad" message is reaching out wherever human hearts are beating.

Just announce "Pollyanna" to your audience—and see what fame and popularity really mean. You'll be glad then, too.

"Romance"

brings to the screen an exquisite creation.

The drama-world of two continents knows that Doris Keane is "Romance"—and "Romance" is Doris Keane.

The play, especially written for Miss Keane by Edward Sheldon, played a year in New York, a whole season in Chicago, a special engagement in Boston and three and a half years in London. And always the artistry, the charm, the rare beauty of Miss Keane made "Romance" a vivid memory-haunting creation.

Of all the plays of recent years, none has been more sought after for screen presentation than "Romance." United Artists Corporation is to bring it to motion picture audiences, with Doris Keane herself in the role that has made her beloved the world over.

The Time is Up!

What are you going to do about it? We are aiming straight at you Mr. Exhibitor. We've only one subject to talk about—

"Comedyart" Pictures

FROM time to time in these pages we have endeavored to convince you that you must not overlook "Comedyart" Pictures, that wonderful combination of comedy, scenic art, and "Memories," a triumvirate triumphant.

Sales have started with a tremendous rush. The releasing date is almost at hand. Now then—are you going to adopt the "waiting policy" or are you going to be among those on the ground floor?

Preparation is Half the Battle and "Comedyart" is the Forerunner of Preparedness

MR. EXHIBITOR you must act now. The opportunity is yours to grasp, to hold and to profit thereby. You have our stamped addressed postcard so your reply is prepaid. Therefore it costs you nothing to find out. Will you write us today?

COMEDYART

PRODUCTIONS

Consider These Facts

"COMEDYART" Pictures are 2000 feet in length, a combination that establishes a perfect balance for your feature. There is nothing like "Comedyart." It is supreme, powerful, convincing.

What is "Comedyart"

IT has three component parts—1400 feet of comedy, 400 feet of scenic art and 200 feet of "memories."

The Comedies

Variety is the fundamental principle of the comedies. Something different, absorbing—always with a punch. "Sameness" is forgotten, unknown in "Comedyart."

The Scenic Art

Incomparable inspiring beauty marks each foot of Scenic Art. Who can resist the impelling force of Nature? Who can resist the feast of unmatched artistry of color in Scenic Art? There is no other method of tinting and toning that will compare with what we have to offer.

Memories

The heritage of the masses rich and poor alike, is the "memory" of the yesterdays. It is a little short subject, at once appealing, refreshing, invigorating. Acknowledged to be a super-idea that is in advance of the times.

This is the hat she wore. You could find better ones in an ash can, but it was the best she had.

This is the suit case she carried to New York. It held mighty little and that little of little value.

This is the gown she wore. She had no other. It was worth about $1.69, but money can't buy a heart so brave as that which beat beneath it.

This is the card that took her to New York. He was almost a total stranger but she went to him and told him she needed a protector and he was IT.

Mrs. Sidney Drew presents John Cumberland in Two Reel Comedies of a new kind.

MRS. DREW has created a new style of comedy, one that is true to life; one that reaches the heart. Her comedies may be seen by the whole family; never is there anything to offend; always there is the quiet humor of the brighter side of life.

John Cumberland is the star; the public remembers him in "Twin Beds," "Baby Mine," "Fair and Warmer," "Up in Mabel's Room" and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath."

The production is of the very best. The comedies in every way are adapted to the most particular audiences in the best class of houses.

The first Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedy is "The Charming Mrs. Chase," from the well known "After Thirty" story by Julian Street. The second is "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton," also by Mr. Street.

All Set for Utica

IN the 1919 convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the State of New York 281 votes were counted on one of the motions submitted to the body. That figure indicated the largest convention ever held in the history of the industry. This year the officers of the organization believe the number of exhibitors assembling at Utica on March 9 and 10 will be in excess of that showing.

From Rochester it is reported twenty-seven out of the twenty-nine motion picture showmen in the municipality will attend. From the Borough of the Bronx, in the northern part of New York City, a dozen exhibitors have made reservations. Reports coming into New York from the interior of the state indicate that the managers of houses large and small are planning to get into Utica for the two big days.

There will be an election of officers as one of the incidents. There will be discussion of the hampering measures already introduced into the New York legislature and of others threatened. Among these are the attacks on the existing Sunday law, put on the statute books last year; a law that heartened the friends of liberalism in every state in the Union.

If you are a New York exhibitor go to Utica and lend your influence to the state organization.

Public Indifferent as to "Ending"

AN experiment at Loew's Stillman in Cleveland to determine whether the public preferred a "happy ending" or the more sombre one called for by an adherence to the author's script resulted in no decision. In Metro's "The Right of Way" the producer had prepared two interpretations of the story's finale. For a certain number of days the Stillman's management showed the "happy" finish and for an even number of performances the play as the author conceived it. A careful watch kept on the comments of those leaving the house indicated that the author's idea of the fitness of things had as many partisans as did the alternative suggested by the producer.

The experiment may be useful as tending to weaken the exhibitor's belief that he must "send 'em away smiling." If a book or a play containing an unpleasant finish is by the public at large declared to be big and strong in spite of that factor it is a safe conclusion the author has logic on his side. The business of the screen as of the stage is to portray life—and life contains targedies. Let us have the truth, whether its color be gray or golden.

Sunday Opening Gaining

TWO recent decisions in Indiana courts contained encouragement for motion picture men, and both of the cases had to do with Sunday opening. A jury in Marion exonerated Dolly Spurr and her brother Howard of the charge of desecrating the Sabbath. The action was based on the opening of their theatres last October 12.

In Kokomo City Court Judge Wills declared obsolete the law under which managers of local theatres had been tried for desecration of the Sabbath. Judge Wills in his decision pointed out he was not attempting to pass on the legality of operating motion picture shows on Sundays at all hours or in all communities, but was confining himself solely to the situation in Kokomo. His suggestion that pictures to a certain extent are engaged in the distribution of local, state and national news is novel and, even better, has a basis in fact. Practically the whole town was on the side of the theatre men. Not the least important of the witnesses for the defense were the manufacturers who testified as to the difficulty encountered in holding skilled labor in the city owing to the absence of proper Sunday recreation.

In New Jersey on March 8 there will be a hearing on the proposed moderation of the blue laws to the extent of permitting the opening of the motion pictures of the state on Sunday afternoons and evenings. Dr. Hespe is representing the exhibitors and he is receiving aid from sources outside of the picture industry. One of these agencies is the Motion Picture Bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Lehr's Philosophy

BACK in New York from a sixteen months' stay on the Coast Abraham Lehr talks entertainingly of his "philosophy of the screen," as that philosophy has been developed in close contact with the workers in the studios. Not in the slightest degree does Mr. Lehr minimize the importance of the author; in fact, he accentuates it. But he does illuminate the statement by insisting that every one, whether in major or minor position, who contributes to the animation of the dominating idea is entitled to be ranked as a co-author. In this category he places an assistant carpenter who may construct a set that happens to catch just the atmosphere needed to give life and reality to a certain siuation.

Mr. Lehr is particularly happy in his expression when he says that "one of the really hopeful indications of the day is the opening up of the studio doors and windows to let in the sunlight and fresh air of inspiration. If the change can be expressed in a single word I would say the motion picture business has become 'receptive'."

There have been directors in the past—there still may be some of them at large and active—who insisted a player was in a measure an automaton taken under his supervision for the sole purpose of doing what he was told to do when and as he was instructed to do it; that there should be no advance information as to the plot; that there should be no opportunity for a display of initiative. At the studio with which Mr. Lehr is associated it is plain there is not room for men of this sort. "No individual is allowed to feel that he is just a cog in the wheel," he says. "He is part of the creative brain power that goes into a picture."

One of the stimulating impressions gained from a perusal of Mr. Lehr's remarks is his conviction that the advance in photoplay making is not confined to a part of the industry but extends all through it, that there really is an "opening of a new era in production."

◆

AS an aid to those many exhibitors who bank strongly on the opinions of reviewers the Moving Picture World has undertaken to collate from the five journals exclusively devoted to motion pictures brief extracts which in its judgment best indicate the verdict of the writers. It will be our aim to seek out the spirit of the reviews and set these forth for the benefit of our readers. We believe the department will fill a requirement of busy showmen.

Mayflower Attorney Denies Tucker Won Point in Suit

PUBLISHED statements attributed to George Loane Tucker's attorney that the decision of Justice Platzek in the Tucker-Mayflower suit was a victory for Mr. Tucker have been vigorously denied by Alfred Beekman, attorney for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Mr. Beekman said the decision did not give Mr. Tucker the right to produce motion pictures as he saw fit until the trial of the case, as was claimed in the statement credited to Mr. Tucker's attorney, but that the effect of Justice Platzek's ruling was to deny the application for an injunction asked by Mr. Tucker against the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

In this injunction Mr. Tucker asked that Mayflower and Famous Players be enjoined from showing "The Miracle Man" prior to the final trial, which will probably take place in April. He also asked that Mayflower be prevented from cutting the negative of "Ladies Must Live," Mr. Tucker's second picture under his Mayflower contract; also that Mayflower be prohibited from stating that he is in that company's employ.

"Under Justice Platzek's ruling," said Mr. Beekman, "we still have the privilege of applying for an injunction against Mr. Tucker to restrain him from directing pictures for himself or for others upon the ground that it violates his contract with Mayflower. That phase of the litigation has in no sense been passed upon and is still open for determination should we decide to bring it to the attention of the court at any time before the trial."

Boston Censor Declares for Action by Municipalities

"MUNICIPAL censorship is the most feasible and sensible solution of the motion picture regulation problem," declared John M. Casey, Boston's official censor under Mayor Peters.

"Our present Massachusetts laws provide for this," he continued, "so you see there is no need of a state censorship board, as proposed to the legislature. The systematic inspection of films in co-operation with the National Board of Review and based upon its weekly bulletin service, is to my mind far more effective from the standpoint of the best public interest than could be any possible form of censorship.

"At a recent conference of New York State mayors the question of film regulation was advanced and the Massachusetts system was voted as the best regulation of any of the many systems which were advanced. So our municipal censorship treatment is to be installed throughout New York State."

Defendants File Answer in Westcotts' $1,000,000 Suit

AN answer to the amended complaint has been filed in the action for $1,000,000 damages brought by Eugene A. Westcott, manager of the Rochester Film Exchange, and his wife, Cora Westcott, against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and Irving I. Brown. The defendants admit having entered the home of Westcott, but claim that entrance was made legally and that the door was battered in only after entrance was refused.

Westcott was arrested last summer after his place of business and residence had been raided by police acting on a warrant secured by Irving I. Brown, an agent of the national association. Westcott secured bail and when his case came up before two grand juries the authorities were unable to locate Brown. Westcott began an action against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and Brown. He also swore out a warrant for Brown's arrest, alleging false arrest and malicious prosecution.

Westcott alleges that his business has been ruined, that his losses are due to the unwarranted actions of the defendants and their agents. Under the law, if a verdict for this amount was returned, the court would double it. Two like suits are pending against the same defendants, brought by John R. Van Arnam, of Syracuse, an exchangeman, and Hans Frohman, of New York, a broker, as the result of a raid in Syracuse last summer. Each asks for damages in the amount of $1,000,000. If all three plaintiffs should happen to win their suits and be awarded verdicts in the amount they ask, it would mean that the defendants would have to pay $6,000,000, in addition to the costs of the actions.

Admission Tax Collections Show Big Increase in Year

COLLECTIONS of admission taxes during December were more than double those of the same month of 1918, according to the monthly report of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and were nearly $2,000,000 greater than those collected during the preceding month.

A total of $7,268,688.41 was turned into the government during the month, according to Commissioner Daniel C. Roper, as compared with $5,877,692.43 during the month of November and $3,453,747.94 during December, 1918.

Rentals of moving picture films netted the government $435,454.86 during the month, as compared with $362,506.66 in November, while, in addition, $275,409.94 was received from the seating tax, a decided increase over the $59,364.76 reported for November.

Total collections for the month were $1,030,684,083.41, as compared with $163,736,297.48 for November, and $193,997,066.65 in December, 1918.

Proposed Tax Bill Would Bear Heavily on Film Industry

THE repeal of the existing excess profits tax and the substitution therefor of a general merchandise tax, together with the imposition of a stamp tax on all bank checks, drafts and other similar negotiable paper, previously proposed, is contemplated in a bill just introduced in the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., by Congressman Ernest R. Ackerman, of New Jersey. Under this latter proposal, Mr. Ackerman estimates that the Government can collect approximately $2,000,000,000 and can, therefore, "get along without legislation that stunts industry and discourages capital at a time when a maximum amount of production in all lines is necessary.

General Merchandise Tax.

The Ackerman bill provides that on and after July 1, next, there shall be levied a tax of 25 cents on each $100, or fractional part thereof, worth of sales, or turn-over, of all articles of merchandise sold for cash, or any consideration being of or representing the equal cash value. The tax would be paid quarterly by the vendor. Any person failing to make a proper return would be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to an additional tax of 50 per cent. of the amount that should have been paid.

Another bill introduced by Mr. Ackerman contemplates the assessment of a tax of 1 cent on each 100 matches sold at retail, to be paid by affixing stamps to the carton in which the matches are contained. It is estimated that $12,000,000 in revenue would be derived from such a tax.

Incorporations in New York Show a Surprising Slump

COMPARED to a few months ago, when concerns were incorporating at the rate of a dozen or more each week in New York State for the purpose of engaging in the motion picture business, the past week has witnessed a decided slump in the number incorporating at Albany.

Among those, however, that have filed the necessary papers of incorporation during the last week are:

The S. M. Distributing Company, consisting of Morris Eskin, Louis Halle and Wendell McMahill, all of New York, the capital stock being but $500; Projectocator Film Corporation, $250,000, Thos. W. G. Donovan, Brooklyn, F. L. Brown, Brookline, John Penny, New York City; Burton King Productions, $1,000, Burton King, I. E. Chadwick and E. D. Barron, all of New York; Rolter Corporation, $1,000, R. L. Noah, B. J. Blickman and L. J. Rosenblum, all of New York; P. W. Pictures, Inc., $50,000, E. B. Wilson, K. F. Clark and H. M. Volckening, all of New York; Film Booking Offices, $10,000, Nancy Katz, L. J. Cohen, Henry Margoshes, all of Brooklyn; Empire State Film Corporation, $10,000, Nancy Katz, Jennie Dutsch, L. J. Cohen, Brooklyn; O'Brien Productions, $300,000, E. J. Kelly, D. F. Woolley and J. B. O'Brien, all of New York.

In addition, two motion picture theatres filed papers of incorporation the past week, these being the Kingsway Theatre, of Brooklyn, capitalized at $400,000, with Max Barr, Adolph Barr and John Manheimer being named as directors, and McKenna's Plaza Theatre, Bayside, L. I., $50,000, with J. F. and Z. C. McKenna and J. C. McKnight as directors.

Americanization Committee Outlines Production Plans

A LETTER to all motion picture producing companies and to the stars and directors associated with them has been written by Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, chairman of the Motion Picture Committee on Americanism, which also includes Adolph Zukor, in charge of productions; Lewis J. Selznick, in charge of distribution; Harry M. Crandall, in charge of exhibition, and President William W. Brady, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The letter promises a financial return on Americanization pictures to the amount of the negative and prints' costs. The campaign plan is to promote the production of fifty-one one-reel or two-reel subjects on original American themes, similar to the Liberty Loan stories which were so generally praised. The films will be released at the rate of one a week for one year, to the number of 100 copies of each. Therefore, 2,600 prints of interesting and absorbing Americanism stories will be in circulation within six months.

Under the plans of the committee no profit for the production or distribution is to be taken. It is agreed that the producer may select such distributing channels for his product as he desires, but the division of rental is to be 50 per cent. to the producer, to cover the cost of production; 35 per cent. to the distributor, and 15 per cent. to the general expense fund of the committee in charge.

All films will be placed on their merits in competition with each other. It will be the function of the distributor of each picture to give it proper advertising.

Mastercraft Company Charges Manipulation of Its Funds

CHARGING that its affairs were exploited, the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation of Medford, Mass., has brought suit in the Suffolk County Superior Court at Boston against Raymond L. Cleveland, his wife and his father, William A. Cleveland. The suit charges that Mastercraft was mismanaged for the benefit of the Filmland City Operating Company, a company promoted by the Clevelands. A receiver is asked for the Filmland company and an injunction is requested, restraining banks having deposits of the Mastercraft corporation from paying any of these funds to the Clevelands.

Asking that the bill of sale transferring the assets of Mastercraft to Filmland be destroyed, the bill seeks to have the court determine the amount of losses to the plaintiff corporation through alleged manipulations by the Clevelands and by certain banks should they be found to be involved. The bill, filed by Attorney Samuel L. Bailen, names the Massachusetts Trust Company, of Boston; the Third National Bank, of Springfield, Mass.; the People's Trust Company, of New Haven, and the First National Bank, of Hartford, as known depositories of Mastercraft funds.

Saenger Amusement Company Holds Business Convention

MOTION PICTURE interest in and near New Orleans for this month centered in the annual managers' convention of the Saenger Amusement Company. It was held in New Orleans at the Saenger general office building for four days, commencing February 16. Some seventy-five theatre managers with department heads of the administration offices of the Saenger company were in attendance.

The meetings were practically all of a business nature, the managers being assigned regular periods for studying the various lines and angles of the motion picture business under the Saenger department heads.

The general sessions were directly in charge of E. V. Richards, general manager; President Julian Saenger, Maurice Barr, manager of the Liberty Theatre, New Orleans; G. J. Dureau, in charge of the booking department, and E. M. Clarke, special representative. Outsiders who addressed the general meetings were John S. Bleecker, manager of the New Orleans railways, and Charles Rosen, prominent New Orleans attorney.

Mr. Rosen lauded the part played by the motion picture industry in the war and the work that it is doing at the present time. "The motion picture," he said, "is the greatest stabilizer in the United States in these days of stress and of that radicalism that is threatening the world."

Quebec Exhibitors Launch Their Own Film Exchange

THE exhibitors in the Province of Quebec have decided to open their own film exchange. They came to the conclusion that this was necessary in order to protect their interests, on account of so many manufacturers, producers and distributors opening up theatres in direct opposition to them, they have explained.

They have taken out a dominion charter, the title of the company being The Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit, Ltd. Stock is now being offered for sale at a par value of $100 a share, preferred stock bearing 7 per cent. interest. One share of common stock is given to each subscriber as a bonus with every share of preferred stock subscribed for.

There are now over 50 per cent. of the theatres in Montreal which are shareholders in the company, and a considerable number throughout the province.

It is the intention of the Circuit to open up a chain of exchanges throughout Canada which will be managed by competent film exchange managers.

"The Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit is an exhibitors' organization, as it will be owned and controlled exclusively by theatre owners and managers," said Harry Pulos, of the Midway Theatre, Montreal, who is president.

Joseph Stern Plans to Erect 3,300-House in Newark

NEWARK, N. J., awaits with interest the erection of what will be its largest motion picture theatre. It will be located on Ferry street between Polk and Merchant, near Wilson, and will seat 3,300 people, 2,300 of whom will sit in orchestra seats. The owner will be Joseph Stern, proprietor of more than half a dozen motion picture theatres in Newark and its suburbs, and the cost will be $350,000. It will be named the Capitol Theatre, and will have a $20,000 organ and a ten-piece orchestra.

Mr. Stern owns the City Theatre, Roseville; Plaza, Springfield and Fairmount avenues; Bellevue, at Belleville and Bloomfield avenues; Grand and Casino, Kearny, and Lincoln and Empire, in Bloomfield. He is president of the Essex County Exhibitors League and chairman of the legislative committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New Jersey. He began in business ten years ago and has grown up with the industry in Newark.

Ground for the Capitol Theatre will be broken within a month.

Mary Pickford Gets Divorce from Owen Moore in Nevada

MARY PICKFORD was awarded a divorce from Owen Moore on March 2, at Minden, a small town near Carson City, Nev., on grounds of desertion. She had been staying at the Campbell ranch at Genoa, near there, since February 15. Moore was not in court, being represented by attorney. Miss Pickford's mother, Mrs. Smith, accompanied her.

The actress said that Mr. Moore had deserted her on several occasions and had only returned in response to her solicitations, but that about a year ago he left her and refused to return. She said she was looking for a quiet place to live and intended to remain near Minden for a long time and to make the state her permanent home. She wept freely while testifying.

Mr. Moore arrived at Virginia City a few days before the court action, saying he intended to take snow pictures for a coming production. He drove over to Minden for hotel accommodations and was served with the papers while at luncheon.

Harry Bugie Leaves Film Business.

Harry A. Bugie, until recently exchange manager for Pathe in Atlanta, has left film work to become associated with Cincinnati headquarters of Dwyer Brother & Co., and is now actively engaged in his new work. While he is "out of films," Mr. Bugie is not entirely disassociated with the business, as Dwyer Brothers & Co. specialize in seats and accessories for moving picture theatres.

New Foundland Theatre Owner Killed.

M. B. Hicks, owner of the Bonavista Theatre, Bonavista, New Foundland, was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of his shotgun when he went partridge shooting. His body was not found until searchers had been hunting for him for more than twenty-four hours.

Mr. Hick's loss will be keenly felt in the community where entertainment means so much to the people, who appreciate such courage and enterprise as displayed by their fellow townsman and benefactor.

Happy That Famous Players Has Demonstrated Reliability in Production—Will Keep on Making Only Big Pictures, With Long List of Artists to Draw From—to Visit English Studio and Plan Increased Foreign Activity.

By ADOLPH ZUKOR.

President Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

I AM leaving for Europe in a most contended frame of mind, for I believe the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is now ready to meet the demands of what I am confident will be the most prosperous year that motion picture exhibitors ever have enjoyed.

It will be a year of unprecedented profit for theatres that can supply the public's rapidly increasing demand for genuinely fine motion pictures. Success, in turn, will come to the producer who best can furnish these theatres with the quality of product, week after week, that these theatres must have.

There is no profit in poor pictures or in poor theatres. You can't make a production that is too good for the public, for now they are ready to pay increased prices for increased quality. The producer and the exhibitor who recognizes this can work together for mutual benefit. The successful exhibitor needs a constant influx of big productions, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is now equipped in every department of its vast organization to furnish him the productions and the service that will bring him profit.

Public Wants Big Productions.

We have demonstrated our reliability. We have recently given to the public, through the great motion picture theatres of the country, such Paramount Artcraft productions as Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," "Everywoman," directed by George Melford; "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore; George Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance," William D. Taylor's production of "Huckleberry Finn," and scores of the same quality.

We have demonstrated that the public wants big productions, and that the crowds will come to see a great attraction, a great story, superbly produced, adequately acted and properly exhibited.

Jesse L. Lasky, in charge of production, has organized a producing force whose activities extend around the world. It is a solid unit, a permanent organization of the greatest creative artists the world has ever known. A huge corps of directors, actors, stage directors and designers are combining their talent and are producing a never-ending stream of pictures of the type I have named.

Will Make Only Big Pictures.

This production department is of a size capable of turning out 200 feature pictures a year, if made on the ordinary production schedule, but will make only half that number. It will be hampered by no limit, and each director will be asked to use all the time he believes is necessary for making each production a perfect one.

Realizing that there is profit for the exhibitor and for ourselves only in big pictures, we shall make nothing but big pictures. We have the facilities, the personnel and the financial means to carry out our plans.

Our distributing department has obtained the widest possible distribution for our product, and from now on it is dedicating its time to perpetuate that market by creating permanent affiliations with exhibitors.

Already thousands of important exhibitors have effected permanent arrangements for the showing of all our product. They have confidence that we can supply them with the productions they need to insure their success, and have decided that a permanent franchise for showing Paramount Artcraft is a guarantee of big profits as long as that franchise exists.

Many theatres are being converted into long run houses, dedicated entirely to the showing of our best pictures at higher prices for engagements of weeks and months. Among these theatres are Phil Gleichman's Broadway-Strand in Detroit, Marcus Loew's Euclid in Cleveland, Grauman's Rialto in Los Angeles, Tom Moore's Garden in Washington, Bernard Depkin's Wizard in Baltimore, Jacob Lourie's Park in Boston, Spyros Skourae's West End Lyric in St. Louis, Jones' Linnick and Schaefer's Randolph in Chicago, the Stanley Booking Company's Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia, Frank Newman's Royal in Kansas City, George Carpenter's Paramount-Empress in Salt Lake City, Ralph Thayer's Rialto in New Haven, Hulsey's Queen theatres in Dallas and Houston, Hulsey's Palace in Fort Worth, J. A. Partington's Imperial in San Francisco, Southern Enterprises' Rialto in Atlanta, Ellison & Greaves theatres in Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo. The Criterion Theatre in New York City will soon be converted into a theatre for long run showings of Paramount Artcraft Pictures, with presentations arranged by Hugo Riesenfeld.

To Depend on Paramount Artcraft.

Hundreds of theatres are making permanent arrangements to depend upon Paramount Artcraft Pictures for the backbone of their programs. Some of these theatres are Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo, the Stanley theatres in Pennsylvania, the Simpson theatres in Rochester, Ruben & Finkelstein theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul, the Strand in Newark, the Harris and Libson theatres in Cincinnati, the Harris and Davis theatres in Pittsburgh, the Jensen and Von Herburg theatres in Seattle, Portland and Butte, the A. H. Blank theatres in Omaha and Des Moines, the Sanger Amusement Company in New Orleans, the Lubliner and Trinz, Balaban and Katz and Asher Brothers theatres in Chicago, the Koplar-Cornwall theatres in St. Louis.

This list includes only a few of the theatres in the more important theatres. The complete list is unending.

2,200 Theatres Playing Percentage.

More than 2,200 theatres are playing our productions on a percentage basis, realizing that the percentage is the most equitable plan for film rental. The percentage system guarantees that the exhibitor shall never overpay for a production as well as that he shall not underpay.

Our enormous producing organization is now working to furnish productions for the public that is seeking the finest entertainment at these splendid theatres. The support given us by exhibitors and public is justifying our efforts to produce the highest quality pictures, and our production policy is guided only by the demands of the public and our franchise holders.

Our exploitation force has been increased. We are now furnishing special exploitation service to every exhibitor who needs it, and the results are justifying our efforts. We are showing exhibitors throughout the country how to increase their earnings manyfold through the medium of proper exploitation.

To Continue National Advertising.

Our national advertising will be continued. It has built up the reputation of Paramount Artcraft Pictures and has transmitted that reputation to every theatre that advertises Paramount Artcraft. This advertising is insurance for the holder of Paramount Artcraft franchise, adding daily to the value of the right he holds to advertise that he shows Paramount Artcraft Pictures. National advertising has taught the public to look for Paramount pictures.

We are constantly endeavoring to improve our exchange service to our customers. Recently we have opened exchanges in Oklahoma City and in Charlotte, N. C., in order to better serve exhibitors. We shall soon add exchanges in Indianapolis and in Albany, making a total of thirty exchanges. It will not be long before this number will be increased to perhaps fifty exchanges—fifty service stations for supplying exhibitors not only with films, but with ideas for presenting pictures and for exploiting them. Our whole idea is based on service for the theatres showing our pictures.

Ours is an organization of permanent service, and we are now in a position to give the greatest service ever known to those theatres that are joining with us in our efforts to furnish the public with the best in motion picture entertainment. We shall profit only as the theatres profit, and our entire plan and all our efforts are to be devoted to building business for the exhibitor.

Many Productions Ready.

Our supply of material for production is unlimited. Current and near future releases give an indication of the strength of the productions we are releasing. They include Elsie Ferguson in Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's famous play, "His House in Order"; W. Somerset Maugham's play, "Jack Straw"; Dorothy Gish in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town"; Walace Reid in "Excuse My Dust"; Charles Ray in "Alarm Clock Andy"; Marion Davies in "April Folly"; Maurice Tourneur's production of Jacques Futrelle's great mystery story, "My Lady's Garter," and Marguerite Clark in "Easy to Get."

Other pictures which already have been produced for Paramount release include Maurice Tourneur's wonderful screen translation of Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal story, "Treasure Island"; Robert Warwick in "Thou Art the Man"; "The Cost," a picturization of David Graham Phillip's most widely real novel, featuring Violet Heming; Enid Bennet, Thomas H. Ince's star, in "The False Road," and William S. Hart in a big, wonderful play which Mr. Hart produced himself, called "The Toll Gate." Besides these we have just completed or are working on a large number of big productions which will be released in the future.

Syd Chaplin Completing Comedy.

Sydney Chaplin has nearly completed the first great comedy for Paramount-Artcraft, called "One Hundred Million," which is expected to be one of the comedy sensations of screen history. Lois Weber is completing the first of a series of big special productions for Paramount-Artcraft. William S. Hart is now producing his own pictures and has built up a splendid organization that is making the finest productions Mr. Hart ever appeared in. He is devoting many months to each of his pictures, the first of which is "The Toll Gate."

Sir James M. Barrie is writing a story, as yet unnamed, for a Paramount-Artcraft picture. We also own his "Peter Pan," "The Little Minister," and "What Every Woman Knows." We own the motion picture rights to "Amos Judd," John Ames Mitchell's famous story; "All in a Night," by Samuel Merwin; "The Frontier of the Stars," by Albert Payson Terhune; "Rozanne Ozanne," by Cynthia Stockley; "Free Air," by Sinclair; "The Black Bag" and "The Husbands of Edith," by George Barr McCutcheon; "Where Julia Rules" and "What Happened to Jones," by George Broadhurst; "The Builder of Bridges," and "The Princess of New York," by Cosmo Hamilton.

Short Subjects Still on List.

Purchase also has been made of Hartley Manners "Peg O' My Heart"; Augustus Thomas' play, "The Witching Hour"; Edward Knoblach's play, "The Shulamite"; Booth Tarkington's best known book, "The Conquest of Canaan"; "A Celebrated Case," one of the best known plays in the English language; the motion picture rights to the original book and play, "Aphrodite," as written by Pierre Louvs and Pierre Frondise; Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea"; Marie Corelli's "The Sorrows of Satan"; Peter B. Kyne's famous book, "Cappy Ricks"; Dullaurier's "Peter Ibbetson"; David Belasco's great play, "The Heart of Maryland"; "The Crimson Alibi"; "The Charm School," and "The Great Day," the immense Drury Lane melodrama.

Besides these feature productions, of course, we will continue to release the Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies, the Paramount-Arbuckle Comedies, the Paramount Magazine and the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures.

Long List of Players.

I have given a list of plays which we own. To insure the best possible interpretation of these plays and stories for the screen the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has the exclusive services of the greatest galaxy of stars and directors that has even been assembled by a motion picture company. Stars and leading players appearing in Paramount-Artcraft Pictures include Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, Enid Bennett, Billie Burke, Sydney Chaplin, Marguerite Clark, Ethel Clayton, Marion Davies, Dorothy Dalton, Elliott Dexter, Elsie Ferguson, Dorothy Gish, William S. Hart, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, Mae Murray, Thomas Meighan, David Powell, Wallace Reid, Charles Ray, Gloria Swanson, Lila Lee, Frank Losee, Theodore Roberts, Tom Forman, Raymond Hatton, Percy Marmont, William P. Carleton, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley, Margaret Loomis, Anna Q. Nilsson, Charles Ogle, Rosemary Theby, Lois Wilson, Mabel Julienne Scott, Monte Blue, J. M. Dumont, Jack Holt, Wallace Beery, Noah Berry, Harrison Ford, Holmes E. Herbert, Irving Cumming, Alfred Hickman, Theodore Kosloff, Craufford Kent, Walter Hiers, Maym Kelso, Arthur Rankin, Ralph Graves, Mildred Reardon, Julia Faye, Robert Cain and Lucien Littlefield.

DeMille Heads Directors.

Directors who will create pictures for Paramount include Cecil B. DeMille, William De Mille, George Fitzmaurice, William D. Taylor, George Melford, Hugh Ford, Harley Knoles, Tom Forman, John Robertson, Charles Maigne, Walter Edwards, Joseph Henaberry, Donald Crisp, Elmer Clifton, Sam Wood, Lambert Hilyer, James Cruze and others whose names are to be announced in the near future.

The cleverest and most resourceful of all the trained writers for the screen will translate the dramatic situations of these plays and novels into terms of motion pictures. Scenarists who will write for Paramount pictures will include Ouida Bergere, who has just been placed under a long-term contract; Eve Unsell, who is now in London; Clara Beranger, Walter Woods, Elmer Harris, Sada Cowan, Olga Printzlau, Jeanie Macpherson, Salisbury Field, the well-known dramatist; Luther Reed, Beulah Marie Dix, Marion Fairfax, Eugenie Mangus Ingleton, Julia Crawford Ivers Kathryne Stuart, Tom Forman and others.

Seven Studios for Workshops.

Seven big studios will furnish the workshops of these stars and directors—although, of course, the whole world is the workshop of the F. P. L. director when he seeks the correct location for a certain scene. Operations of the new $2,000,000 Famous Players-Lasky Corporation studio in Long Island City are nearing completion, and the actual staging of pictures will be under way there May 1. In addition to this new studio, which will be the most complete and up-to-date institution of its kind in the world and will have a ground area of 140,000 square-feet, we shall continue to use, of course, the Famous Lasky studios in Hollywood, known all over the world as the birthplace of motion pictures as we know them today.

Paramount Pictures will be made in the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Fifty-sixth street, Manhattan; at the Amsterdam Opera House, in Forty-fourth street, and at the Yonkers studio in Yonkers. In addition we are using the Morosco studio in Los Angeles. Then, of course, there are the Mack Sennett studios.

Will Produce Soon in London.

I am looking forward with great pleasure to visiting our newest studio in London—where the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., will have its producing headquarters. Labor difficulties have delayed the opening of this new studio, which is situated at Islington, a suburb of London, and is under the management of Milton E. Hoffman. Production work will begin this spring in the London studios, with Marie Corelli's famous story, "The Sorrows of Satan,"

Fore!

Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in their Paramount comedy, "Teasing the Soil."

Many thousands of dollars have been expended in making alterations and improvements, and when completed, I am informed, the studio will compare favorably with the company's New York and Los Angeles studios. An interesting development in connection with this studio is the establishment in Paris of a fashion bureau which will insure the very latest Parisian fashions for all the feminine stars and players in Paramount pictures.

Large Supply of Dramatic Material.

No outline of Famous Players-Lasky's plans can be complete without mention of this company's interests in the production of legitimate drama. By the acquisition of a controlling interests in Charles Frohman, Inc., which was founded by that master of the theatre, the late Charles Frohman, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has insured for itself an invaluable supply of dramatic material, not only for production on the stage, but also for motion pictures.

Through Charles Frohman, Inc., we own Sir James M. Barrie's play, "Dear Brutus," in which William Gillette is scoring a big success this season; Arnold Bennett's play, "Sacred and Profane Love," which marked Elsie Ferguson's return to the spoken drama and which probably will be produced for the screen with Miss Ferguson in the role she has created; Lee Atkins's play, "Declasse," in which Ethel Barrymore is achieving the triumph of her career, and the Otis Skinner play, "Pietro."

In association with John Williams we own Elmer Rice's play "For the Defense," in which Richard Bennett starred, and the Brieux play, "The Letter of the Law," which with Lionel Barrymore as the star, is creating a sensation at the Criterion Theatre. In association with John Williams we also have contracted for Anne Crawford Flexner's play, "All Souls' Eve," and a play based on Vincente Ibanez's great book, "Blood and Sand." Besides these plays we own Edwin Milton Royle's newest play, "The Aftermath."

Wide Foreign Distribution Planned.

All of these plays will furnish material for motion pictures, and because of the increased value which these productions will have through advertising and through the fact that their dramatic attractions are already established, they will make singularly good motion picture properties.

While I was arranging for this trip abroad I looked over plans which our foreign department has for the expansion of the already world-wide distributing activities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. We are already firmly established in all the leading countries of the world, either through our own branch offices, subsidiaries or through agencies, and arrangements are being perfected for the opening of Asia Minor, India and other territories to Paramount pictures during the coming months.

Fine Prospects for Foreign Business.

The prospects for the foreign business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were never better. Contracts signed to date and those in the process of being worked out give every assurance that the next few months will be a record breaker in the foreign field. Reports received from our various offices and agencies indicate a greatly increased demand for Paramount-Artcraft productions.

Industry Dividing Into Two Factions Declares Manager of First National

No Middle Road, No Impartial Zone, for Exhibitors and Producers, He Says

BY J. D. WILLIAMS.

THE present is the "great divide" for exhibitors and producers! Neither can be neutral. You are either an independent as an exhibitor or producer or you are a passive victim scheduled for annihilation with a weapon tried and proved in other industries and now being sharpened to razor edge by master grinders secretly at work in the motion picture business.

There is no middle road, no impartial zone, for exhibitors and producers in deciding between the two issues or factions into which the industry is resolving itself. If you want to be independent, with your success, your future and your business life in your own keeping, you have got to declare for independence and act for independence. If you prefer to remain passive, in an "it doesn't affect me" attitude, you no longer amount to anything as an industrial force. Your business life is doomed. And you won't find the finish a profitable one for yourself. You will be allowed to write your own death notice, but its text and terms will be dictated by others.

Says Trap Is Being Laid.

Present conditions which everyone recognizes, but which few have analyzed, prompt this statement of prophecy, and its accuracy and certainty of fulfillment can be proved. View for a moment the trend of events and activities in the theatre field, and study the trap that is being laid for the unwary exhibitors and the stars and producers who lack foresight and vision. Here we have the proposition of profits derived by producer-distributor concerns from hundreds of thousands of dollars in rentals from independent exhibitors being invested in theatres to be controlled by the producer-distributors and for the sole purpose of giving a life-and-death battle to the very men from whom they are obtaining an existence in their originally chosen branch of the industry.

"Situation Menacing and Disastrous."

How much longer are you, as an exhibitor, going to tolerate and support a plan which has for its goal the determination to drive you from the business, if it can? How much longer are you going to patronize a system that is making you its tool only until its competitive machine is completed and ready to be put in motion across the street or next door to your theatre?

Are you going to sit back and wait, doubting and lacking in brain action until you are suddenly notified that your film service will be discontinued on such and such a date, because the producer-distributor faction from which you have been booking has just bought a neighboring theatre and wants the service for its own screen? Or are you going to throw your strength into a demand for absolute theatre independence, using the greatest weapon you have to drive the invaders from a branch of the business which has been and which by every right and creed of successful enterprise always should remain exclusively your field?

The time has come for a real showdown, not only from exhibitors, but from independent stars and producers and those who want to be independent. The situation is as menacing and disastrous for one as the other, with the major danger, if it can be apportioned, leading to the stars and producers.

Figure it out in simple terms. You want a theatre market. Without it your work has no value and no chance to repay your costs or return a profit. Unless there is an immediate showdown that will compel producer-distributors to get out and stay out of exhibiting the result and its complete domination of your talent and genius is obvious.

Will Continue to Get Theatres.

These producer-distributors will continue to invest the profits they are making on rentals from present-day independent exhibitors and buy, lease or build more theatres. Every time they open a theatre controlled by them they take their own film service away from a competing independent exhibitor who has supported them for years in that particular neighborhood or locality and book it for their own screen.

In a year, perhaps two years, such a combine would have a national chain of houses, and be in excellent position through control of a goodly part of the theatre market, to dictate to you what you could and could not do as stars and as producers. You would be limited in the amount of money you could spend for a production. You would be allowed to produce only certain stories. Your income would be fixed for you. Your talent would have no value beyond what the directors of such a combine saw fit to give it. And if you don't like the terms you can get out of the business.

Calls for Mutual Support.

Certain stars and producers have foreseen this condition, and they have become independent, determined to market their pictures only through channels that do not seek to exploit them to acquire a monopoly in the two most important branches of the business. They are helping, wonderfully, in the fight to keep the theatre independent and free from producer-distributor dictation. As producers they are not trying to usurp the exhibitor's place. They are devoting all their energies to making the best productions of which they are capable, and with the knowledge that the independent exhibitor channels through which their pictures reach the public are pledged not to invade the producing field they are shrewdly content to preserve and intensify the "great divide" between the two.

Claire Anderson

Appearing with Frank Mayo in Universal's "The Girl in Number 29."

The time has come, and it is now, when producers who want independence and a competitive market, and exhibitors who want to conduct their houses in opposition to exhibitors and not in opposition to producer-distributors, must support one another and co-operate to the absolute exclusion of every proposition which seeks to throttle the theatre market as a certain means of controlling and subsidizing stars and directors of ability. There is no organization of independent exhibitors of any consequence in existence today that has gone into production in the least degree. But we do have the contrast of producer-distributor concerns of consequence making their way into exhibiting and "biting the hand that feeds them."

Declares Menace Is Real.

The menace is real, and its future is not pleasant to contemplate from the viewpoint of the independent exhibitor and independent producer, but there is a sure way to put an end to it for all time. Call for a showdown, individually and collectively. The moment you learn, as an exhibitor, that a produced-exhibitor whose releases you are showing is planning its own theatre in opposition to you or any other exhibitor, complete your present contract and refuse to renew, making it very plain why you refuse. There is enough good independently made film available to make such a move practicable. You'll find hearty support and co-operation awaiting you from the sincerely independent producers. It is a matter so big and so important that it deserves the concerted action of every exhibitors' league and association in the country.

Official notice should be served on every producer-distributor concern operating or acquiring theatres to sell out its holdings to independent exhibitors, and to function in the future only as producer-distributors, or lose the patronage of every independent exhibitor who has the vision to refuse to contribute his rentals to sources that use the profits on them for creating opposition.

Give the free-agent stars and producers your support. They deserve it for the exceptional quality of their work. Check a list of the real big successes of the last two years, and you will find that 80 per cent. of them were made by independent producers. And they are not trying to acquire theatres of their own to compete with you. They are helping you to preserve your independence, and you, in turn, must let your rentals go where they will be reinvested in bigger and better pictures and not in theatres.

Marcus Loew Plans Great Increase in Film Production for Metro Corporation

THAT the Metro Film Corporation will enlarge and increase the number and quality of its output to an enormous extent, and that he is bringing into picture production those big ideas which have marked his career as a showman, is indicated in an interview with Marcus Loew, whose corporation now owns 100 per cent of the Metro Film Corporation.

The infusion of unlimited capital and the ability greatly to enlarge the Metro company will result in production of nothing but the finest and costliest features, produced on an elaborate and spectacular scale; the building of a $2,000,000 studio on Long Island, and the increase in the number of features a year to such an extent that between fifty and seventy-five pictures will be released during the coming season.

The main facts brought out in the interview with Mr. Loew indicate that the day of the small picture, in his opinion, is over; that only big pictures with big production will be made, and that he will bring to producing pictures that same daring and ability to execute on an enormous scale which makes Loew one of the biggest individual theatre owners and exhibitors in the world. The plans revealed in the interview are merely preliminary, for Metro will advance steadily as a producing organization.

"I purchased Metro and determined to make pictures primarily to protect our own interests," said Mr. Loew. "We have millions of dollars tied up in theatre properties and we must have the finest entertainment in the world to offer our people. For that reason we want absolutely to assure ourselves of a supply of such entertainment in the form of the best pictures. If we make some of them ourselves, and spend thousands to secure the very finest, we know we can secure what we want.

To Build Big Eastern Plant.

"We will soon start work on the biggest studio ever built in the East. It will be on Long Island, and will allow twelve companies to work at once. It will cost close to $2,000,000. We are getting our Sixty-first street studio ready for immediate production and have greatly enlarged the West Coast studios. While in Los Angeles we purchased a ranch of fifty-nine acres, giving us plenty of room for production and the building of enormous sets and scenes.

"The day of the small picture is done. The public now is so discriminating that no longer will it be satisfied with merely an ordinary picture, fairly entertaining, without a big production. I believe firmly in lavish production. I believe that every dollar spent on a picture, discreetly of course, will come back through rentals. Offer the public a weak story, but a monster production, and the public will not complain. Offer a great story and a great production and you have something worth while.

"All the pictures being made now by Metro are of this type. I saw completed parts of several productions while I was in Los Angeles, and they were wonderful. I never saw such a remarkable collection of great pictures together. 'Old Lady 31' is almost finished and is a great story as well as a massive production. Bert Lytell's 'Jimmy Valentine,' great as the story is, also has a wonderful production. I believe that 'The Heart of a Child,' with Nazimova, will be a sensation. 'Shore Acres,' starring Alice Lake, is the biggest thing I ever saw. May Allison's picture, 'The Cheater,' is another big picture. Each of these pictures cost at least $200,000. I don't believe we will ever make a picture for less than this amount, and many will run over.

"We will make between fifty and seventy-five pictures during the coming year. About $15,000,000 will be spent on production, but it will be spent advisedly, by men who know, and every dollar's worth of value will show in the picture. We won't spend anything that will not show. A few years ago we could make a picture for $30,000 or $40,000, but now it can't be done. Formerly six companies could work in a certain space, now only two can work. Everything else is on the same massive scale."

Mr. Loew then discussed the value of a star, and stated that a star is necessary, although a bad story and a bad picture can injure a star. He plans a happy combination of a star surrounded by a magnificent production and a great story. Talking about the value of stage plays and books, he said that the price of even mediocre stage plays, or even failures, have risen to such an extent that he feels he doesn't want to pay the price, and prefers good original stories. Metro has engaged Bayard Veiller for a term of years to write for the screen.

Marcus Loew

Plans great increase in Metro production scope.

"We paid $75,000 for 'Polly With a Past,'" said Mr. Loew, "but it's worth it because the play was a big success and Ina Claire will appear in the screen version."

All the Ibanez novels, secured by Metro, will be made in the East. Other stars will be distributed between the East and West Coast studios, and sent from one to the other as conditions dictate.

Mr. Loew plans to work the two organizations, Loew and Metro, into a cohesive whole.

"Metro is a separate organization and will remain so to a great extent. The men who handle its affairs agree with us absolutely, and have been working along these lines before we had anything to do with Metro. They will continue to remain in charge. It has always been my theory that we should advance our people from the ranks, for long service with the organization makes for loyalty, and loyalty is what we are after."

Building Forty Theatres.

Loew discussed briefly the extent of the theatre building operations of his company.

"We are building forty theatres now," said Mr. Loew, "and have bought ground for many more. Theatres now under construction will open rapidly during the coming few months. It has taken a long time to plan for this, and some of the houses now going up have been schemes of mine for four or five years. We are building theatres which in some cases are the most marvelous ever dreamed of. Millions will be spent, but the public will get what it wants and the money will come back again.

"We are building one in Newark and in St. Louis, three in Los Angeles, three in San Francisco, two in Memphis, also in Toronto, Ottawa, Windsor, Buffalo, Indianapolis, New York, Brooklyn and other cities. The present day tendency of the American public is toward amusements and plenty of it. Whereas in former years theatre-going was a luxury and an event to look forward to, today it is a vital necessity in every life."

Resolutions Express Regret Over Death of Major Pullman

ON Tuesday, February 24, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the District of Columbia met at the Metropolitan Theatre Building and adopted the following resolution, which will be engrossed and delivered to the family of the late Major Raymond Pullman and to the District of Columbia Police Department:

Whereas the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association has heard of the death of Raymond Pullman, major and superintendent of police in the District of Columbia,

And whereas, the association feels that in his untimely and sudden death the nation and District of Columbia has lost the services of an upright citizen, and a capable and energetic official, whose efforts for the good of the country and of this community have always been characterized by the highest sense of honor and sincerity,

And whereas, this association has, in his death, lost a friend whose unselfish advice and sympathetic counsel have oft assisted their deliberations,

Be it therefore resolved, that the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the District of Columbia extends to the family of Major Pullman their entire sympathy in the hour of their bereavement and that the secretary of the association be instructed to transmit to them an engrossed copy of these resolutions, and to inscribe the same upon the minutes of the association,

And be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be passed to the district commissioners, with the request that the same be filed among the archives of the police department.

Republicans See in John J. McInerney Future New York Lieutenant-Governor

A BOOM to make John J. McInerney the next lieutenant-governor of New York State seems destined to meet with success. If it does, it will be because the powers that be in politics have at last awakened to the mighty part which the motion picture screen may have to do with future elections. A candidate with a clean record, a successful man who can command the support of the picture fans, and, who—something not to be overlooked—has the confidence and good-will of the exhibitors who own the screens, is about what the Republican dopesters are said to have in mind when they began to mention Mr. McInerney.

Mr. McInerney is a Republican, a former Assemblyman and prominent as an attorney throughout the state. Of late years he has been closely connected with the motion picture industry and the automobile industry in the capacity of legal counsel. His friends in these industries, in view of the fact that many think he is just naturally heading for the gubernatorial chair, say that now is a good time to shove him in.

John J. McInerney.

No information has been given out by the state leaders to the effect that Mr. McInerney will be the Republican candidate for the office of lieutenant-governor, but his name is linked prominently with that office. In Albany and elsewhere where the dopesters are trying to compile a slate that will meet with popular approval by the voters, Mr. McInerney's name has been frequently mentioned for a place on the ticket.

Mr. McInerney has not expressed his personal views on the matter, publicly at least. He is a busy man—too busy to seek office. It is doubtful if he would sacrifice his growing interests in the business world for a political career, but his many friends hope that he might be prevailed upon to do so.

Ten years ago, after a whirlwind career as one of the most successful criminal lawyers in the state, Mr. McInerney served several terms in the Assembly, representing a Monroe county district. Then he retired from the political arena and his legal practice has made him famous and wealthy. He is general counsel for the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors League and attorney for the Theft Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, as well as holding many other commissions from the industry.

Utica Exhibitor Convention Promises to Break Records

THE preparations have been completed and next Tuesday, March 9, at Utica, N. Y., the curtain will rise on what may be the biggest convention of exhibitors ever held anywhere in the country. State Treasurer W. H. Linton, who has thrown his whole heart and soul into the work of preparation, is somewhat tired but extremely happy. According to Mr. Linton, the two biggest hotels in Utica are practically reserved for the delegates to the convention and the overflow is filling every other hotel in the city.

At least more than half a dozen stars of national reputation have been secured. Their names will be announced at the convention.

The banquet promises to be an affair of considerable importance. Senator George F. Thompson and Assemblyman Charles D. Donohue, who were the sponsors of the Sunday opening bill in the last session of the legislature, has signified their intention of attending. It is hoped the governor can attend. Among other speakers whose presence is probable are Speaker Thaddeus C. Sweet, Senators James W. Wadsworth, Jr., and William M. Calder, and Mayor Lunn, of Schenectady. The toastmaster will be State Senator James J. Walker. The president and Lieutenant Governor Harry Walker, of Binghamton, will represent the State Senate. One of the engrossing topics that will be discussed will be the question of Americanization work.

Business Program Devised.

A complete program has been mapped out for the convention, and according to State President Sydney S. Cohen, it will be a business convention from start to finish. The demands for booths continued during the week and the following have been added to the concerns which were published in last week's issue as having hired space: Fox Film Corporation., Realart Pitcures, Metro Pictures Corporation, Pathe Exchange and Vitagraph.

James J. O'Connor, mayor of Utica, will open the convention with an address of welcome.

Rochester Wants Next Convention.

Rochester is to make a determined bid for the next session of the state league. A delegation from the Kodak City, thirty strong, will at least make a strong effort to stampede the Utica convention on March 9 and 10 to vote to have the next annual gathering in Rochester.

The delegation from Rochester will include William A. Calihan, vice-president of the state body; Irving H. Salyerds, state organizer; John J. McInerney, general counsel for the state body; Erwin J. W. Huber, managing editor and treasurer of the Pictureplay News, and a representative group of exhibitors. George Blair, sales manager of the Motion Picture Film Division of the Eastman Kodak Company, is expected to make the trip and may add the invitation of his company to that of the Chamber of Commerce and the city to the convention.

Absolute Business Inactivity Prevails as Fort Worth Enforces Sunday Closing

People Rage at Threatened Prosecution of Theatres Under Texas Blue Laws and Flock to Dallas for Amusements—Sunday Papers May Be Discontinued and Church Choir Leaders Forced to Sing Without Salary

THE unpopular and generally disregarded Texas state law which forbids the operation of moving picture theatres on Sundays was made effective for the first time in two years at Forth Worth on Sunday, February 22.

Although business organizations such as the Fort Worth Advertising League had gone on record as opposed to Sunday closing, the demands of an organization known as the Law Enforcement League caused the county officials to serve notice that proprietors of moving picture shows operating on Sunday would be prosecuted. At the request of citizens wishing to see all the Blue Laws enforced without discrimination, absolute business inactivity was effected in Fort Worth during the day.

Theatres, garages, drug stores, building operations, gasoline stations, shoe-shining parlors, cigar stands, cold drink establishments and other places of business which had formerly operated on Sunday were shut tight. Complaint was universal.

No Medicines for the Sick.

Sick people were unable to secure drugs from the drug stores, automobiles stalled in the streets through lack of gasoline, garage doors were locked and the owners of stored cars were unable to secure them until after Sunday midnight. The restaurants were the only places of business operating, and it is understood that the Restaurant Men's Association will close their eating places on the Sundays to come unless the rigor of the Blue Laws affecting picture shows is relaxed.

It has been announced that moving picture shows would be kept open on Sunday and the matter contested in the courts, but at the last moment the proprietors changed their minds. Groups of indignant theatregoers found signs on the ticket windows of the shows, such as: "Hush! Don't Make Any Noise. Fort Worth is Dead." "Alas, Poor Movie, We Knew You Well." "We Fought for Liberty and Get This." "Closed in Sympathy with the Law Enforcement League."

The picture shows and theatres were open in Dallas, thirty miles away, and Fort Worth amusement seekers by the thousand thronged interurban cars and made the pilgrimage to the sister city.

"Alas, Poor Movie!"

Groups of indignant theatregoers found these signs on ticket windows:

"Alas, Poor Movie, We Knew You Well."

"Hush, Don't Make Any Noise. Fort Worth Is Dead."

"We Fought for Liberty and Get This."

"Closed in Sympathy with the Law Enforcement League."

Under the interpretation of the Texas Blue Laws, complaints are to be filed against salaried choir leaders in various churches who may sing on Sunday unless they give their services free. The question as to the legality of printing Sunday newspapers is also to be investigated. Since the theatres have been closed through an agitation directed particularly against them, those interested in the matter say that they are determined that every Blue Law on the statute book shall be enforced. Music in the hotels during meal times on Sundays is also to be suppressed.

Proprietors of Fort Worth theatres estimated that $15,000 in cash, which would have been spent in their city on Sunday for amusements, went out of town. Dallas theatre owners for the present are reaping a harvest but expect a similar campaign in their home city.

The state law of Texas forbids the operation of any business on a Sunday. When the army camps were located in many Texas cities, the military authorities asked the civil authorities to permit the moving picture shows to open so that the men might have wholesome amusement. Now that demobilization has been effected, the Sunday closing law is being evoked.

Five to One for Sunday Opening.

Dallas is in a peculiar position as to the closing of theatres on Sunday. Four years ago the citizens of the town voted for Sunday amusement at a ratio of about five to one. Fifteen thousand votes were cast. This vote is claimed to legalize Sunday amusements in Dallas under a section of the state constitution which allows cities of over 100,000 people in Texas some small degree of home rule. Opponents of Sunday shows claim that no such measure can be effective in opposition to a well founded state law. A warm contest is expected in Dallas should the already discussed move for Sunday closing come to a head.

Other large cities in Texas, with the exception of Austin, the state capital, permit Sunday amusements. Texas towns being inland, and for the most part in a flat and geographically uninteresting country, have few outdoor recreational advantages. The working people are almost wholly dependent for their Sunday amusement on the moving picture show. Any movement to close the theatres is a vastly unpopular one in the larger cities.

Associated Exhibitors' Power Is Shown in Analysis by General Manager Quimby

THE national power and deep and far-reaching purpose of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., are set forth by Fred C. Quimby, general manager, in a careful analysis which emphasizes the first announcements of the powerful combination of interests and shows that the new factor in the motion picture industry, with its 250 first-run theatres and the assurance of 8,000 smaller houses, came into being as an active, operating giant of strength, sinewed by unlimited capital and directed by shrewd minds in exhibition, distribution and finance.

The men back of it have dealt and are dealing with a public of millions of theatregoers and while being practical men they are nevertheless moved by a fine idealism in seeking the perfect thing and perfect conditions for the handling of it.

First Insight of the "Idea."

All this is made impressively apparent in the statement of Mr. Quimby, recently director of exchanges for Pathe, and an authority on exhibition, exploitation and selling. He gives the first insight of the "idea" back of the newly formed exhibitors' combination and explains how the new organization, in the very beginning, has profited by the mistakes of previous organizations so that it is absolutely lacking in any element of experiment.

Messmore Kendall, its president and also president of the Capitol Theatre Corporation, New York, who is associated with large capital, with Edwin Bowes, of New York, vice-president, submitted the financial scheme to the most astute minds in finance; James Q. Clemmer, of Seattle, second vice-president and Harry Crandall, of Washington, treasurer, with other big exhibitors studied the problem from the angle of the showman's interest, and Mr. Quimby gave his intimate experience to the adjustment of distribution and selling.

Pathe to Distribute.

Pathe Exchange, with its conceded high efficiency in its system of branches, has been selected as the medium of distribution, and Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of that organization, is a member of the board of directors of the big exhibitor body.

The Associated Exhibitors will soon make an announcement, which, in the beginning, will show the largeness of its program for the acquisition of the very best productions, and individual stars.

Mr. Quimby thus outlines the plan:

"Various organizations have been formed for the purpose of giving exhibitors the opportunity of participating in a plan that would give them protection and result in many other mutual advantages. These plans have met with varied degrees of success and many of them, while containing great merit, were formed in such a manner as to leave loop-holes that proved them ineffectual in some way or another.

Profits by Past Mistakes.

"The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has profited by the mistakes and partial successes of all of these various organizations. In 'the perfect plan' it believes that the solution of virtually all exhibitor problems has been arrived at.

"The exhibitors' sub-franchise, which is part of the plan of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will be equitable and sound in its application to every exhibitor—not only to exhibitors holding immediate franchises in the association, but also to every exhibitor who becomes part of the enterprise through the possession of a sub-franchise.

"Under the plan of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., all franchise holders enter into an agreement on an equal basis. There will not be a single exhibitor who will have a better proposition than any other franchise holder. Every one comes in on an equal share of everything.

Appeals to All Members of Industry.

"The plan will have a tremendous appeal for the really talented director who is a producer of big, special productions. In Associated Exhibitors, Inc., he will find an organization that is capable of marketing his product in a manner that will meet the artistic and commercial value of his work. Associated Exhibitors, Inc., assures such a producer a ready-made audience, high-class presentation, full protection and appreciation for his part in the work.

"To stars of renown the plan also offers the best possible medium of reaching the largest audience; it permits them to know that their triumphs shall receive the full amount of appreciation. Also, it gives them the knowledge that their works shall be offered to the public through the medium of the screens of the foremost theatres of the country, for premiere showings in the most prominent theatres throughout the country are guaranteed even before the picture is produced.

Eliminating the Middleman.

"And the producer who spends thousands of dollars making a truly commendable picture is also certain of the full benefits that accrue from exhibitor co-operation. This is true because the producer can know, even beforehand, that in dealing with Associated Exhibitors, Inc., he is dealing with from 9,000 to 10,000 exhibitors in the United States.

"From the producer's end the plan can be likened, in a sense, to the proposition of a manufacturer selling his product to the ultimate consumer through a representative body of consumers, as opposed to the more costly and less profitable scheme, in merchandising, of selling the product to the consumer through a middleman who must get a profit merely for handling the goods.

"A very easily understood simile is the plan of community stores. The employes' associations of many big corporations have formed their own stores for the purchase and subsequent sale to members of foodstuffs, and even in these days of high prices it has been found that the elimination of the middleman has resulted profitably.

"And so it is with Associated Exhibitors, Inc.—in a tremendously bigger way. The organization is merely the physical representative of every one of its members, not only permitting its members economically to buy product, but also to make a profit for themselves, and at the same time furnishing protection against the pernicious forces working against the individual in an effort to obtain a monopoly."

H. I. Day, Ex-Buck Private, Now International Publicist

HARRY IRVING DAY, director of publicity and advertising of International Film Service, Inc., first became acquainted with type, layouts and such things in a large advertising agency, where he learned the game from the ground up. After a long period of faithful service with another advertising agency, he went into the motion picture game via the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He spent five years with Paramount-Artcraft doing a variety of things, handling among them trade and national advertising copy, editing Progress-Advance, and Paramount Pep and Picture Progress.

Then war clouds gathered on the horizon and Harry went in as a buck private. He came out as a first lieutenant. From the army he went to Goldwyn where he did sales promotion work, and then into his present job, where he has entire supervision of the advertising and publicity. The campaigns on "The Miracle of Love" and "The Cinema Murder" were gotten out by Mr. Day. Under Mr. Day's supervision the department of advertising and publicity is subdivided with the advertising end in Mr. Day's personal charge and the publicity end in the charge of Arthur M. Brilant.

Billie Burke's Views on Prudence and on Being Too Well Disguised

BY EDWARD WEITZEL

SHE was leaning over a balcony railing watching Hugh Ford direct a scene in Tom Meighan's new picture when I glanced up and saw the coat and trousers which had caused all the trouble. They covered, but did not adorn the trim figure of Miss Billie Burke. I had been given their history the day before and their relation to "Away Went Prudence," and told how, although "the apparel oft proclaims the man," it had failed to tell the truth in this case, but got away with the bluff just the same.

It came about in this fashion:

One day last week I dropped in at the Famous Players studio and found director John Robinson over in a carefully screened off corner of the building, busy with a scene of "Away Went Prudence," the Billie Burke picture now in the making. The environment, sartorial and otherwise, was a new one for Miss Burke. Accustomed to seeing her on the stage or in photoplays gowned in the most fetching and expensive of creations and employed in the amusingly romantic pusuit of setting some poor chap's brains to wobbling and his heart to dancing for love of her, it came as a surprise to behold the enslaving heroine of a hundred comedies, more or less, in entirely different surroundings, and wearing garments known as plain but substantial. She was at her old trick of subjugating a male being's heart, of course; but was making an equally willing captive of the devotion of one of her own sex at the same time.

Away Went—Prudence and the Davenport

The Lure Which Is Billie's.

Seated at a table in the living room of a neat but modest home the star who is the Prudence of the picture, was the object of the adoring glances of a boy and a girl, both in their early teens. The three were being helped to bountiful plates of steaming soup by the mother of the children, a pleasant-faced Irish woman of the laundress type. I could not hear what Miss Burke was saying to the youngsters, but she was chatting away as if her one thought in life was to be nice to those children, and was enjoying her task. The scene was repeated several times, and her smile and beguiling animation were as spontaneous as ever.

There was a wait of a few minutes presently for Miss Burke, and I walked over to where she stood. I had intended to ask her about her own part, but she at once started to talk about the youthful actors.

"Aren't they nice children?" she exclaimed. "I'm supposed to be quite fond of them in the story, and it isn't a bit of an effort."

"Where did they get them?" I asked.

"From the Rehearsal Club," was the reply. "All of our children come from there. It's a wonderful institution and I'm getting up a benefit performance for it. Bishop Greer's daughter is at the head of the club, you know. It looks after the children and helps to educate them and should be encouraged by every professional."

Prudence Over-reaches Herself.

"Tell me something about Prudence, and why she went away," I requested.

"That was the reason—away went prudence."

"You mean, she was Prudence by name but not prudent by nature?"

"Yes. The double play in the title is quite clever, isn't it?"

"Unusually so. But what makes her act so imprudently?"

"I mustn't reveal too much of the plot; but she decides to run away and have her friends think that she's been kidnapped."

"Does the scheme work out as Prudence planned?"

No one ever saw the corners of Billie Burke's mouth run a race with her eyes to decide which set of features could put the most drollery into a roguish expression, and forget how she looked. The race started afresh as she replied:

"It not only works out, but it overruns her imagination of what such an affair would be like. It turns out to be the real thing—the kidnapping, I mean—and Prudence finds herself in tough society before she gets back home."

"That home, I take it, is one of wealth and unlimited credit at all the most expensive dealers in feminine fashions?"

"Oh, yes! the story must start and end right," said Miss Burke, meaningly. "I don't mind plain clothes in some of the scenes and I'm rather proud of myself in the boy's suit I wear; but Prudence has the normal woman's love of fine frocks, and I've done my best to suit her taste in the matter."

The Too Perfect Disguise.

Director Robinson and the cameraman appeared to have about completed their changes in the set and the arrangement of the lights and were glancing in our direction, but that boy's suit promised something interesting and I made haste to start an investigation:

"What do you and the boy's suit do, Miss Burke—slide down a water spout together?"

"Not exactly; but it gets me into all sorts of trouble. In fact, it's such a born trouble maker that it started to make things unpleasant for me before I got over to the set and began work with it the first day I put it on."

I looked over at the director to see if time was up. A forgotten "prop" favored me.

"How was that?" I asked eagerly.

"It disguised me too perfectly. I had the cap pulled down low and was 'chivied about a bit,' as they say in England, by several of the stage hands because I happened to get in their way. Once when I was watching another company work I was told, with more force than politeness, that my room was better than my company."

"You must have found it amusing?"

"I did, and not nearly as embarrassing as the actress I heard about in England who was playing Shakespeare Jarvis in 'The Lights o' London' found a similar mistake. The play was touring the provinces and one night she walked over to the peephole in the curtain while the stage was dimly lighted, and started to survey the house. One of the stage hands caught sight of what he supposed was an 'extra' boy, violating a sacred law of the theatre. He was a man of action, not of words. He stole softly behind the culprit, raised his foot and planted a kick that horrified the stage hand when the 'boy' turned around and began to relieve her feelings."

Snapshots of Miss Ziegfeld.

The arrival of a friend of Miss Burke's put an end to the interview, but she was back in a moment with two snapshots of a certain little Miss Ziegfeld of whom she is extremely fond.

"See the pictures of my baby that have just been brought me. They were taken last summer at the seashore. My! doesn't she look serious? . . . Ready, Mr. Robinson? . . . Excuse me."

A moment later Billie Burke was again seated in the home of the laundress, chatting pleasantly with the woman's two children, who were once more gazing at her with adoring eyes.

Industry Scores Many Points Against Censorship at Second Boston Hearing

Morris Wolf, Former Attorney General of Pennsylvania, Makes Decided Impression by Pointing Out Failure of Boards in His State and Ohio—National Board of Review Secretary Denies Control by Industry

APPARENTLY fighting a losing battle, advocates of the bill to provide a censorship commission for Massachusetts were hard put to answer the flood of logic offered by opponents of the bill, representing the motion picture industry, at the second hearing, held on Tuesday, March 2, at Boston.

The star speaker for the opposition was Morris Wolf, formerly attorney general of Pennsylvania. He was applauded time and again by more than a thousand spectators crowded in the auditorium of the State House.

Mr. Wolf made a decided impression upon the committee with the statement that only one state has followed the example of Pennsylvania in establishing a censorship board, while the bill has been before twenty-three states, going to prove, he said, that the example set by his state has not come up to expectations.

Adopted Without Opposition.

"No one can tell you why we have a censorship law," he said.

"Unlike Massachusetts, we held no hearings upon this matter. So when the censor plan came before our legislative body, no one appeared in opposition. No one, as far as I can find, knew that such a bill was in project. The only man active in the matter was the one in favor of the bill, a man who later was appointed as censor at a salary of $4,000.

"It has been said here that the motion picture business has prospered in our state, but that prosperity is not due to censorship. In fact, censorship by a state group has proved a hardship, and the business has prospered in spite of it.

Fear for Morals of Others.

"The cutting of pictures reduces their artistic and literary features. You cannot cut, twist and distort a picture without doing this. The result is we have pictures without logic. They make the pictures so they are interesting to only one class of people, and those people are the ones who do not attend the motion picture houses at all; people who do not go to houses where pictures are shown and who are proud of it. People of that kind do not understand the antics of Charlie Chaplin and the other features which so many hundreds of thousands of other people enjoy.

"The censors who see these pictures to cut, are not afraid of their own morals. They are afraid of other people's. This is the essential vice in censorship. You will be surprised to see the foolish things which have been done by these censors.

A Court of Three for Ten Million.

"On the question of what is moral or immoral, no one person can ever agree. For instance, there are six pictures showing in Ohio that we say are immoral in Pennsylvania."

Attorney Wolf, in enumerating these plays, drew a laugh from the spectators when he listed two of them in sequence, "Mary's Ankle" and "Dangerous Hours."

"It is a vicious matter to leave to three people to determine what is right for ten millions of people to see.

"According to the censors, we of Pennsylvania should be considerably more moral than the people of Massachusetts, for we have had 54,000 cuts made in our films, in pictures which were shown without these cuts in Massachusetts. And yet you people here would not like to admit that we are more moral for all this cutting.

Humorous Sidelights at the Bay State Hearing

HUMOR and sarcasm vied with logic at the hearing. Attorney Wolf was one of the star speakers for the industry.

Pointing out a number of absurdities in the work of the Pennsylvania censors, he told of that board's evident desire to prevent scandal by marrying principals in the first reel. He also told of what lengths the board carried its opposition to all indications or hints of approaching maternity, saying that it cut out one scene showing a respectable married woman sewing baby clothes.

"The reason for the deletion," he said, "is that the board says children believe in storks and it would be a pity to disillusion them. If that is so, babies brought by storks in the Pennsylvania climate certainly need clothes."

"The censors who see these pictures to cut are not afraid of their own morals; they are afraid of other people's," Mr. Wolf also said. "Here is one order which reads: 'Cut the length of kiss eight feet.'"

"When you are attempting to remedy this matter with a commission you are attempting to kill a fly with a trip-hammer," another speaker said.

"Cut the Kiss."

"The work of censors is childish," ridiculous and ludicrous. And while on the subject of these cuts, here is one order which reads, 'cut the length of kiss eight feet.' They seem amusing to listen to, but they are disastrous to the industry. The expense of such cuts is great."

Judge J. Albert Brackett, in charge of the opposition, introduced Mayor Walter H. Creamer, of Lynn, the first speaker. The mayor said that the bill is a remedy worse than the disease, as it would give autocratic and arbitrary powers to a commission.

What Lynn Did.

"We met this problem in Lynn," he continued, "by my appointment of a committee of twenty-three men and women and later by a committee of 244 to regulate the motion picture houses. The committee visits all the motion picture houses, and their work has proved effective. We should hesitate before we censor too much in American life. This bill is an entering wedge. If it is kept up we shall soon have a censorship of free speech. When you are attempting to remedy this matter with a commission, you are attempting to kill a fly with a trip-hammer."

That Massachusetts cities have all the laws necessary to safeguard the morals of the community, was the declaration of Mayor Charles E. McCarthy, of Marlboro.

"I have never heard a protest in my city of any of the motion pictures shown there, and we are satisfied that we can take care of the question without further legislation," he said.

Ohio Is Dissatisfied.

Judge Brackett then submitted letters and reports which, he said, prove that Ohio is dissatisfied with its censorship board and that the people are to vote on a referendum this autumn as to whether the board will be continued or not.

Charges that paid woman lobbyists were among the proponents of the bill were made by State Representative F. B. Phinney, of Boston, a member of the committee on mercantile affairs, injecting a dramatic climax into the closing hour of the session.

The charge was made while Miss Amy Woods was speaking for the bill. She appeared as secretary of the Massachusetts Committee on Moving Pictures.

"Isn't it a fact, Miss Woods, that some of the women whose names appear here as the executive committee of this state committee in favor of the censorship bill, are paid lobbyists, registered at the State House as legislative agents as a matter of business?" he asked.

Charges Paid Lobbyists.

There was an intense silence in the auditorium.

"I do not know," replied Miss Woods. "If you tell me their names I can give you what information I have. For myself, my salary is paid by the League for Preventive Work."

"Well, I see on this list the name of Mrs. Wenona Osborne Pinkham, who, I believe, is registered as a lobbyist," answered Mr. Phinney.

"Mrs. Pinkham, I believe, is secretary of the League of Women Voters," Miss Woods responded, "but I do not know of any one who is paid to come here to support this bill."

The industry had other powerful allies besides Mr. Wolf in the persons of Dr. Orin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Review; Attorney Hiram Miller, representing the exhibitors, and Miss Marion Howard Brazier, a Boston clubwoman.

Speaking for the Professional Women's Club, Miss Brazier characterized the proponents of the bill as "amalgamated reformers" and said that the people objected to having a few men and women try to tell them what they should and should not see.

Denies Control by Industry.

Dr. Cocks outlined the organization of the National Board of Review and emphatically declared that all attempts to show that the board is controlled by the industry are false and malicious. He told how the board is paid a flat sum a reel for each picture it reviews, whether the picture is accepted or rejected.

"Those who search for something which is obscene in motion pictures, day in and day out, become pathological and it becomes pathological for them to censor," he said.

Attorney Miller said that the hearing was only a duplicate of a hearing held five years ago, with the same arguments and the same measure.

"The only difference," said Mr. Miller, "is that the committee personnel is changed and there is a whole new group of reformers in place of the old group of reformers who then appeared in favor of the bill.

"To grant this bill would bring upon the state a new case of arrested development. It would mean a state control of public opinion."

Labor Wants Freedom from Censorship.

Charles E. Sands, representing the Central Labor Union, of Springfield, Mass., said that labor is opposed to the bill and believes in free speech, a free press and free motion pictures. He said that the working people are entirely capable of taking care of their own morals if left alone by would-be reformers.

At one point in the session, Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, secretary of the Pennsylvania board, who furnished some amusement at the hearing the previous week, could not refrain from melodramatically interrupting Mr. Wolf during his "roast" on the board's work. He failed to answer Mr. Wolf's arguments and failed to present any new arguments himself, and so he was asked to sit down.

French Minister Advocates Conservatoire of Pictures

THE formation of a conservatoire to encourage art and perfect the mechanism of moving pictures is urged by M. Honnorat, minister of public instruction, in Paris, according to a special cable dispatch published in the New York Times of Thursday, March 4. The article describes the aspirations of the minister as to the placing of motion pictures on the same plane as the theatre and opera, and the teaching of action, production, scenic arrangement and all other crafts necessary to making a finished film.

M. Honnorat believes that private firms should found such a school in common in Paris, pointing out that they have "plenty of money" and that the state would give them financial assistance if necessary. He would have a number of paid instructors, but he would also count upon the free services of the most successful actors and actresses. He hopes to form a national library of the best films produced both by the conservatoire and private firms.

M. Honnorat adds that one of the greatest arguments in favor of the establishment of a conservatoire is that "the moving picture is the best means of international publicity."

Powers Film Products Wins Suit Over Stock Purchase

A DECISION has been handed down in the Supreme Court at Rochester by Justice Adolph J. Rodenbeck in the case of Thomas E. Donovan against the Powers Film Products, Inc., sustaining the demurrer of the latter to the complaint of the former. The plaintiffs are brokers, to whom the Powers company gave an option to purchase certain shares of stock within periods of one and two years.

Justice Rodenbeck holds that the option was not good as a subscription to the stock, in that 10 per cent. of the amount required to be paid in at the time of absorbing was not so paid. The court also rules that there is an ascertainable value for the stock and the plaintiffs are therefore not entitled to specific performance of the option by the delivery of stock called for.

The action grew out of the selling of stock in The Powers Film Products, Inc., last year, at a time when Powers stock rapidly advanced from $7 a share to more than $25 and was then withdrawn from the market. The stock was sold through the Donovan firm in Rochester, New York and elsewhere. It found a brisk sale in Rochester and elsewhere and at stated periods made substantial advances in price.

When the stock was withdrawn the Powers company published an announcement that no more would be sold for the time being. The Donovan firm claims that its agreement with the Powers company entitled them to further shares. The Powers company then published a statement to the effect that it had no authorized stock selling agents, and that if at any future time Powers stock was offered to the public it would be through the Powers company and not through brokers. The Donovan company objected to this also, and the suit resulted.

The Powers company in the action maintained that there was no law by which it could be compelled to issue or sell stock.

National Academy of Motion Pictures Will Have Auditorium Seating 3,300

DEFINITE plans for the construction of the National Academy of Motion Pictures at Rochester, N. Y., have been completed and have been outlined by George Eastman, head of the Eastman Kodak Company, who is financing the project. Ground was broken some time ago and with the arrival of spring it is expected that the construction work will be pushed rapidly. Engineers are now occupied in tabulating figures for the 2,000 tons of structural steel which will go into the building, and contracts are to be let for the major construction soon.

The large auditorium is to seat 3,300 people, showing motion pictures to the accompaniment of a symphony orchestra on six days of the week. On Wednesday evening the auditorium will be given over to orchestra concerts and visiting musical artists. Pictures will be changed twice weekly, the first bill being shown on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, and the second bill on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

To Project 157 Feet.

Pictures will be projected to the screen at a distance of 157 feet from the operating booth and at an angle of fifteen degrees, which is said to be ideal for optical effects. The stage will be ninety-one feet wide and forty-two feet deep. There will be no boxes in the theatre. The ground floor will seat 1,840 persons and there will be 1,100 seats in the balcony. On the mezzanine floor there will be seats for 350 subscribers. These subscribers will have their own private en-

Says Public Is Becoming More Critical and Producers Should Heed Its Opinion

ABRAHAM LEHR, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, after sixteen months on the Coast, is in the East. Accompanied by Samuel Goldwyn, he reached New York last week after weeks of application to the task of building up the great producing organization at the Culver City Studios.

As the associate of authors, directors, actors, and, in fact, the technical experts concerned in every department of photoplay production, from the time the idea for a story is conceived until the completed print is distributed to exhibitors, Mr. Lehr has kept in closest touch with all the elements that contribute to the making of a photoplay. He speaks with the authority of actual experience.

When asked to express his views on production tendencies, Mr. Lehr frankly admitted photoplays are not perfect today, that even in the light of decades to come they may not be considered good.

Public Opinion Should Guide.

Before explaining what may be termed his philosophy of the screen, Mr. Lehr expressed it as his belief that one of the big mistakes of the past has been the failure of the producer to take the public into his confidence; in other words, to invite and be guided by public opinion in the selection of subjects and in their treatment. Producers have worked too much under cover, behind locked doors, as it were, and in soundproof rooms where the voice of the public could not be heard. Too frequently they have been so concerned with the technique of picture making that they have been impervious to fresh, live ideas, without which mere technique is a dead thing.

"One of the really hopeful indications of the day," said Mr. Lehr, "is the opening of the studio doors and windows to let in the sunlight and fresh air of inspiration. If the change can be expressed in a single word, I would say that the motion picture business has become 'receptive.' Forward looking producers are ready to forget precedent and welcome ideas from any source. It is their task, and the task of those who surround them, to assimilate these ideas and give them concrete expression.

Public Becoming More Critical.

"The opening of the new era in production finds all the creative forces in the industry keyed up to high artistic effort, and ready to regard technique as a means to an end and not an end in itself. The public, each year becoming more critical and exacting, is largely responsible for the new impetus to artistic accomplishment, and much credit also should go to exhibitors who have learned to reflect the views of their audiences and communicate them to the producer.

"The value of the author has been sadly underestimated, particularly when it is considered that the heart of a picture is the idea on which it is founded." And here Mr. Lehr came to his "philosophy on the screen." It is the animation of an idea. He holds that everyone who contributes to that animation is a co-author, even to the assistant carpenter who may construct a set that happens to catch just the atmosphere needed to give life and reality to a certain situation.

All Are Part Authors of Picture.

"Too much importance cannot be credited to the author and the brain group surrounding him," continued Mr. Lehr. "The director, continuity writer, art director, actors, cameramen, scenic artists, even the electricians and carpenters, are part authors of a picture, and everyone of them should be familiar with the idea the picture aims to express.

"Valuable contributions to a production are likely to come from the most unexpected sources, providing each individual concerned in the making of a picture knows the purpose of the story. Merely following direction is not enough if the best results are to be secured from a combination of brains all inspired with the same idea. Out at Culver City we are striving to make this unity of aim and effort the guiding spirit of the studio. No individual is allowed to feel that he is just a cog in the wheel. He is a part of the creative brain power that goes into a picture.

"If I were a director, I would never undertake the production of a story without first writing clearly and fully a description of the idea behind it. Then I would make certain that every member of my producing company assimilated the idea before we started work on the picture."

Mr. Lehr did not explain the purpose of his trip East and was indefinite about the time of his return to the Culver City Studios.

Theatre Owners Wire Mary Pickford.

The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of Greater New York has sent the following telegram to Mary Pickford at Hollywood, Cal.:

"The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of Greater New York announces with pleasure that your selling organization has abandoned the percentage plan of booking your pictures, which plan this organization in common with other exhibitor organizations throughout the country has deemed unfair and injurious to the interests of the entire film industry, affecting alike exhibitor, producer, star and others employed in serving the public with the people's favorite entertainment—the motion picture."

Clara Beranger Writes Stage Play.

Again a prominent screen writer will have a play produced on the spoken stage. This time it is Clara Beranger, well-known continuity and scenario writer who has contributed screen successes for John Barrymore, Marguerite Clark and other popular picture stars. Miss Beranger, in collaboration with Forest Halsey, has written a play entitled "The Unwanted One," which was produced for the first time on any stage at Hartford, Conn., on Friday, February 27. It is scheduled for a New York showing at a prominent New York theatre on Easter Monday.

In the School of Music, housed in the same building, there will be accommodations for 2,500 people; in the school part of the building will be an auditorium having 500 seats. Between the motion picture auditorium and the school proper there will be a corridor on the first and second floors, twenty-five feet wide and nearly 200 feet long. On the walls of these corridors will be displayed the works of American painters. The works will not be catalogued, but explanatory panels will be placed on the walls beside them. The paintings will be changed from time to time.

The drawing of the building shows another building in the rear which projects several stories above the main building. This building in the rear is not to be built at present, but plans will be worked out so that it can be added at any time. It is designed to house the overflow and provide additional quarters for the work of the institution when such conditions shall make the extra space desirable.

Schoenbaum Made Director of Pathescope Publicity

THE appointment by Willard B. Cook, president of the Pathescope Company of America, Inc., of M. H. Schoenbaum as director of Pathescope publicity is of interest. Very few, however, know that Mr. Schoenbaum originally came to this country some seven years ago from Pathe Freres of Paris because of the Pathescope.

Even in those early days his faith in the Pathescope was an absolute religion.

Before coming to America, Mr. Schoenbaum had been fighting for the Pathescope cause in England, Germany, Scandinavia, Switzerland and other European countries. The beginning of 1913 found him at the Patent Office in Washington, where he appeared personally before Commissioner Moore and where his presence for seventeen days won for Pathe five patents for which famous lawyers of both hemispheres had been fighting in vain for three years previously.

When the Pathescope was first demonstrated before the Franklin Institute in 1914, Mr. Schoenbaum accompanied Mr. Cook to Philadelphia, anxious to learn the opinion of the American savants in regard to the new system. Today his faith and enthusiasm in the Pathescope are justified by its success, and he proposes to "tell the world" about it through his copy.

Richard Barthelmess and Lillian Gish Will Be in Griffith's "Way Down East"

THE announcement that Richard Barthelmess will play opposite Lillian Gish in the D. W. Griffith screen version of "Way Down East" clearly indicates Mr. Griffith's intention to make this one of the really notable productions of the year. Through his admirable work in "Broken Blossoms" and "Scarlet Days," Mr. Barthelmess has taken his rightful place among the distinguished artists of the screen. As David Bartlett in "Way Down East" he should prove a most convincing champion of the rights of Anna Moore (Miss Gish).

It is a pleasure to chronicle the assembling of a group of players whose individual talents merit the highest classification. Aside from Miss Gish and Mr. Barthelmess, the cast for "Way Down East" will include Burr McIntosh in his original role of Squire Bartlett, Edgar Nelson as Hi Holler, the chore boy; Clarine Seymour as Kate Brewster, Vivie Ogden as Martha Perkins, the village gossip; Creighton Hale as Professor Sterling, Porter Strong as Seth Holcomb (originally played by John Bunny) and George Neville as Reuben Whipple, the town constable.

While a number of parts still are to be filled, the above group of players is sufficiently representative to establish the company as among the most eminent ever assembled for a single production.

It already has been recorded that Mr. Griffith paid to William A. Brady the tidy sum of $175,000 for the motion picture rights to Lottie Blair Parker's story. Judging by the salaries represented in the aggregation of players engaged to interpret "Way Down East," it seems destined to take its place in the very front rank.

Le Guere to Combine Work.

George Le Guere, now playing the juvenile character lead in the Harvard play, "Mama's Affair," running at the Fulton Theatre, will combine his work on the stage with work before the camera. He is being considered for a forthcoming Vitagraph production. Mr. Le Guere was last seen in pictures in Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton.

Robertson-Cole Branch Heads to Hear Company's Plans at New York Convention

THE first semi-annual convention of the branch managers and field supervisors of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on March 16, 17, 18 and 19. This session is being held so that the men who represent Robertson-Cole in the field can receive first hand information as to the future policy of Robertson-Cole.

As soon as Robertson-Cole announced its intention to invade the film business their motto of close exhibitor-producer cooperation has been carried out to the letter and in spirit. It is to further acquaint the exhibitor who shows the biggest pictures that Robertson-Cole wants to familiarize its representatives so that the plans for the season of 1920-21 will be divulged in detail to those who are firm believers in the Robertson-Cole policy of fair play.

Send Call to Managers.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation this week sent invitations to the twenty-six branch managers and three supervisors. In asking them to this session, Mr. Kirkpatrick made it clear that the trip across the country to New York was not a "jaunt," but four days in which to learn more about the Robertson-Cole method of doing business.

"Robertson-Cole is not in the film business as a gamble, but established on sound business principles," said Mr. Kirkpatrick in discussing the first semi-annual convention. "Our organization has grown so rapidly in the past year, and particularly within the last three months, that it is necessary to have a heart-to-heart talk with the men who represent us in the field.

"There is nothing secret in the manner of conducting our business. We place our cards on the table at all times. Promises we make in announcements are backed with cold, hard cash. We work just as hard for the exhibitor and the public as we work for ourselves. They are our partners.

Branch Heads to Get Full Data.

"We are proud of the fact that the series of big announcements made by Robertson-Cole in the past month has greatly enriched the prestige of Robertson-Cole. We believe in taking the exhibitor into our confidence and for this reason we are going to tell our representatives everything we know so that the fame of our future productions will be sent broadcast and the man who plays only the best productions will know just what to expect from Robertson-Cole.

"The exhibitor has taken more than kindly to Robertson-Cole productions in the first year of our business life as a releasing firm. We are proud to point to our record, and that in spite of our infancy we are in a prominent position. We must remain there, and we have planned to go further by again demonstrating that the Robertson-Cole standard is the business standard, fostered by clean, honest methods and commanded by men who have made good in the field and who have the right to engineer from the home office.

Showmen Give 100 Per Cent. Deposits.

"That the exhibitor has faith unsolicited in Robertson-Cole is best evidenced by the manner in which they have given us 100 per cent. deposits on all bookings. They realize that we want protection and that they in turn are secured by pictures which have a 100 per cent. box office value. Banks in all parts of the country carry this separate account, and our contracts with the exhibitors prohibit us from drawing one penny on this advance until the service covered by these advance deposits is complete

"Robertson-Cole is spending large sums in giving exhibitors the Robertson-Cole standard of production. For this reason, it is fair to show the branch managers who in turn can relay this information to the exhibitor and secure further co-operation so that we may lay foundation for further expenditures which will be in keeping with a better class of pictures.

Managers Will Be Kept Busy.

"From the time the managers arrive in New York City until their trains pull out of the station bringing them to their respective branches, it will be hustle and bustle. We have arranged a program which will give them a better insight into the methods pursued by Robertson-Cole in climbing to its present high position.

A. S. Kirkpatrick

Vice-president and general manager of Robertson-Cole, who will preside at the R-C convention.

"In other words, the branch managers, when they leave the city, will know as much about Robertson-Cole business as we know. That is our policy of letting the public know just what we are doing, what we intend to do, and to show them just what part they will play in the advancement of the Robertson-Cole standard of merit and box office value."

Neilan Denies He Has Closed Foreign Rights on His Product

MARSHALL NEILAN has issued a statement in which he emphasized the fact that he has closed no arrangements for foreign rights on his productions as might have been inferred in an advertisement which appeared in the trade papers recently. Marshall Neilan productions will be sold to foreign markets via First National Exhibitors Circuit in a manner similar to that emplayed in distributing this product throughout the United States.

Mr. Neilan's statement follows: "From an advertisement which recently appeared in trade papers it might be inferred that arrangements had been concluded for the foreign rights to my product. This is not so. Rights to no foreign countries on Marshall Neilan Productions have as yet been closed, although we have many offers which are now under consideration.

"The product of this organization for foreign markets will be distributed through the First National Exhibitors Circuit in a manner similar to that employed in the United States. Each production will be sold as an individual unit and each sale will be made subject to our approval."

Dwyer Brothers, Inc., Cincinnati Simplex Distributors, Expand

AMONG the accessory news of the week comes the story from Cincinnati telling of a generous expansion program incorporated by the Dwyer Brothers & Co., Simplex Distributors for Southern Ohio and the entire state of Kentucky.

Dwyer Brothers & Company recently took a five year lease on a large space ground floor with entrance at 520 and 522 Broadway, which will afford them fine window display space. Dwyer Brothers is laying plans to make its new store one of the biggest and finest equipment institutions in the country.

The new store will be equipped with a modern projection room, modern repair department and complete film laboratory for making commercial motion pictures.

Dwyer Brothers & Co. was recently reorganized and incorporated for $200,000, the new officers being Leo E. Dwyer, president; Dr. Otto Dieckman, vice-president; Fred P. Dwyer, secretary; Charles Weigel, treasurer and assistant secretary.

Oscar Lund Leaves for Europe.

Oscar Lund, a director identified with Fox, World and Metro successes, left suddenly for Europe upon cable advice from his mother, whom he will meet in London at the Eccentric Club. Mr. Lund has not seen his mother in sixteen years. They will travel together in Europe for a couple of months, and then repair to Stockholm, Sweden, Oscar's birthplace, to settle up affairs according to the will of his father, who died some years ago. A man does not become of age in Sweden until he is thirty-five. That is why Oscar has waited "over here" until he was acknowledged a grown man "over there."

Glantzberg Back from Trip.

Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has just returned to New York from the South, where he spent the past five or six weeks looking over the Southern territory. There is considerable activity being shown throughout the South on the proposition of ventilation and cooling. Because of this fact, Mr. Glantzberg was able to close many sales for the Typhoon Cooling System for both new and old theatres.

The New York office of the Typhoon Company has so far this week received orders for the Typhoon Cooling System for the following theatres: Palace Theatre, Burlington, Iowa; Montgomery Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.; Opera House, Wilson, N. C.; Acme Theatre, Goldsboro, N. C.; Grand Theatre, Kinston, N. C.

Technical Army of 700 Is Seen Daily at Work in Universal's Western Studio

THE average exhibitor does not have an inkling regarding the really enormous organization which goes to make up a big production. Universal officials point out that there are 700 people at work daily at Universal City, exclusive of the actors and actresses. This army is composed of skilled workers of all trades, and the success of Universal-Jewel productions, as well as the lesser lights turned out by this company, are largely dependent on this working corps.

Expense or work is not spared to make Universal sets as perfect as is humanly possible. All the technical brains available are put into their construction. No detail is overlooked. The exterior and interior sets are either the exact reproductions from famous paintings and places, or they are the advanced visions of architectural geniuses.

A complete model of every set is designed before it is made up for a real moving picture set. This involves a good deal of planning. The color combinations used on the exteriors and interiors of Universal sets are studies in themselves. A staff of artists is employed to attend to this alone.

Everything Highly Specialized.

Every color photographs a different hue. Red, for instance, appears on the screen as a deep black. Yellow photographs clear white. Blue shows almost white on the screen.

The "props," made up of furniture, fittings and the thousand and one things which are used in pictures, occupy a separate department of unusual size at Universal City. The artistic taste of the property men in selecting the material for the directors and keeping everything in good taste goes a long way toward injecting quality into the pictures.

A staff of tailors and designers is responsible for the costumes. This is a matter of extreme importance, for if the picture is an old-fashioned or a costume play, hats, shoes and the little niceties of the costume must be actual reproductions of those worn in the period utilized in the story.

It is these little things which make the filming of pictures very expensive. Thousands of dollars are spent weekly in buying antiques and modern furniture, lamps, draperies, etc. Some of this material is used over and over again but much of it is disposed of after its initial use.

Each detail of a Universal picture is absolutely correct, assert Universal officials. A skilled worker is in back of every perfect detail. It is a tremendous organization, a super-skilled and a highly paid army, but it earns its keep, because it is the immensity of it which makes for quality, and quality in motion pictures more than pays for everything else.

Mastbaum Circuit Joins National Picture Theatres

THE Mastbaum circuit of theatres has joined National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president. This is one of the largest circuits in the country and has theatres in many of the eastern states.

Harvey B. Day, National representative in Philadelphia, was instrumental in the signing up of the Mastbaum circuit.

Among the recent additions to the National field force are Syd Rosenthal, of Cleveland, and Ira Aronson, of Pittsburgh, the former as National's Cleveland branch representative and the latter as field representative in the Pittsburgh territory. Mr. Rosenthal was formerly Cleveland manager for United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and has been in the territory four years.

During his first week with National Mr. Rosenthal closed franchise contracts with several of the most important accounts in the Cleveland territory, among them the Schade Theatre, of Sandusky, and the Dome Theatre, of Youngstown, Ohio.

Mr. Aronson, during his first three days with National, closed first-run franchises in three of the largest towns in western Pennsylvania, and has since closed additional important contracts. He also was formerly with United.

Still another new recruit to National's forces is B. R. Keller, manager of the Seattle branch. Mr. Keller has just completed a trip through Oregon, where he closed a number of National franchises and reports that the exhibitors of the Seattle territory are strong for the co-operative plan.

Mr. Selznick's brother, Phil Selznick, has just been appointed National's manager in Kansas City. He recently returned from Australia, where he closed several important deals for the handling of Selznick pictures. He reports that the exhibitors there are keenly interested in the National.

Court Frees Sabbath "Desecrators," Holding That Films Disseminate News

DECLARING that the Indiana law under which managers and operators of motion picture shows are prosecuted for desecration of the Sabbath is obsolete, Charles H. Wills, judge of the City Court at Kokomo, Ind., Saturday, February 28, discharged the managers of the Kokomo motion picture theatres who were arrested the previous Sunday when they attempted to open their theatres for Sunday entertainments.

The case was tried on Thursday and Judge Wills took the matter under advisement until Saturday afternoon. As a result of the decision the theatre men expected to reopen their theatres on Sunday.

Engaged in Distribution of News.

In announcing his decision, Judge Wills said he was not attempting to decide the legality of operating motion picture shows on Sunday at all hours and in all communities, but was deciding the case on the law and evidence as they apply to Kokomo. He said he believed that strict enforcement of the law would close many classes of business which now operate on Sunday and which are regarded as necessities.

"The picture shows as now operated," he said, "are engaged to a certain extent in the distribution of local, state and national news and there is a reasonable doubt as to whether or not the operators of motion picture shows come within the exception of the statute exempting those persons from prosecution who are engaged in the publication and distribution of news."

The defendants in the case were John Shirk, manager of the Sipe Theatre; A. P. Nelson, manager of the Star; J. E. Whitely, manager of the Colonial; S. C. Blande, manager of the Grand; John Shirk, manager of the Pictureland; Martin F. Gruenwald, manager of the Victory, and Ivan W. Arnold, manager of the Isis.

Labor Wants Recreation.

When the case was called to trial practically every manufacturer in the city took the stand and testified in favor of Sunday shows. The manufacturers testified that they were unable to hold skilled labor in the city because of the lack of proper Sunday recreation, and for that reason held that Sunday motion picture shows should be construed as a moral necessity and exempted from prosecution under the law.

The witnesses for the state advanced opinions that Sunday motion picture shows are not a moral necessity. Two ministers and two policemen were the chief witnesses for the state.

Showmen to Benefit by Bookstore Tie-up on Two Paramount-Artcraft Productions

"Straight? It Must Be So!"
A moment from Basil King's Goldwyn, "The Street Called Straight," Showing Charles Clary being consoled.

SPECIAL exploitation facilities are available to exhibitors showing Dorothy Dalton in the Ince-Paramount production, "Black Is White" and the Maurice Tourneur picture, "My Lady's Garter," two pictures on the Paramount-Artcraft schedule. As the result of arrangements just concluded between Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the A. L. Burt Publishing Company, theatre managers in every part of the country will be able to arrange special book window displays on these two productions. The A. L. Burt Company has issued instructions to all its dealers and agents advising them of the tie-up so that they would have sufficient time to profit by the showing of these pictures in their neighborhood.

At the same time Famous Players-Lasky issued instructions to its twenty-eight exploitation representatives in the field, announcing the arrangement and urging prompt action to give the local exhibitor every opportunity to reap the full benefit.

"Black Is White" is founded on the romance by George Barr McCutcheon, author of some sixty novels, notably the Graustark series.

"My Lady's Garter" is the picture version of Jacques Futrelle's well-known mystery story. It was originally published as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post.

Writing on Wall at N. E. A. Meet Spells Success for Films as Visual Educator

BY MARGARET I. MACDONALD.

Covering The Educational Field

SHOWING its conviction that the field of non-theatrical pictures is one requiring all the attention possible, Moving Picture World sent its educational authority, Margaret I. MacDonald, to represent it at the Cleveland conference of the National Educational Association.

The accompanying story from Miss MacDonald proves that the field opened by the National University Extension conference on visual instruction justified every attention paid it by Moving Picture World.

The educational picture is the coming factor in the industry. This publication intends to develop its growth and distribution as largely as possible.

THE most important issue of the National Education Association convention at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, as far as the moving picture industry is concerned, was the getting together of educator and producer in the formation of a platform of co-operation on the production of films for the schools. Inasmuch as the grievance on both sides, as long as the moving picture has existed, has been the lack of this co-operation, the event must be hailed as the forerunner of big things.

To the average observer it might seem that the issue is still rather vague. Of the ten to twelve thousand delegates that swarmed the streets of Cleveland during the week of February 23, it was only a chosen few who attended the meeting on visual education, held in the Hotel Hollenden on Wednesday afternoon, February 25—three hundred at the most.

Addresses Cut Short.

L. N. Hines, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Indianapolis, Ind., chairman of the occasion, was over scrupulous with regard to time limitations on the rendering of papers and addresses on the subject of visual education, with the result that carefully prepared discourses were headed off just as they were approaching what might be called the "punch of the story." The subject is an important one, and speakers should have been given a little more "rope" in order to bring what they had to say thoroughly home to the audience.

As it was, an excellent paper by Charles Roach, Assistant Professor in charge of Instruction Service, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, on "Visual Education in Community Center Work" was received enthusiastically, along with an address on "Concreteness in Education" by John H. Francis, Superintendent of Schools, Columbus, Ohio, and a paper by J. Paul Goode, University of Chicago, on "The Economic Side of Visual Education."

Equipment to Be Standardized.

The round table discussion led by Frank A. Gause, Superintendent of Schools, Bay City, Mich., was entered into eagerly, not alone by those interested in the moving picture side of visual education, but also by those who had in the past found the stereoscope, lantern slide and other forms of visual education efficient aids in teaching A motion was made regarding the advising of schools to adopt machines using standard width film was temporarily sidetracked along with another which proposed a committee of educators to study the needs of the schools and pass the information along to the producer.

The only motion which carried was proposed by W. H. Dudley, Chief of the Bureau of Visual Instruction, University of Wisconsin, and provided for the standardization of equipment. Unfortunately for the matter under discussion there was much talk with little action, and nothing definite was arrived at.

Adjourned too Hastily.

In spite of the inspiring character of addresses and suggestions, in spite of premeditated efforts on the part of a few ardent visual educationists, the meeting was hastily adjourned "until next year," amid murmurs of disappointment from the progressives of the group.

But the end was not yet, for there was still another loophole by which an inning might be had. The dinner at the Hollenden announced for 6:30 of the same day, afforded the opportunity. A group of between thirty and forty persons attended the cafeteria dinner which was preferred by way of expediency.

Before the last few "swallows" had been cleared from the plates of the latest comers, W. H. Dudley, one of the prime movers in the visual education issue, was appointed chairman, and the business of further discussion was again under way, so eager were the pioneers of the great question to formulate some definite plan, whereby a forward movement might be made, centering in the contact of consumer with producer, and the establishment of a clearing house for the educational-film product already on the producer's shelves.

Idealist Meets Commercial Man.

To the onlooker, the situation was an interesting one from more than one angle, for here was the theorist, the man of ideals, the dreamer as it were, face to face with the busines man probably for the first time in the history of visual education. There was evident a great effort on the part of each to be understood by the other, and perhaps there was a tiny bit of suspicion on the part of the educator that the overzealous commercial man might have "an axe to grind." At any rate after much discussion and msiunderstanding of certain phraseology used in the wording of proposals, and resultant explanations, after rather tiresome repetitions, a motion and its two amendments were seconded and carried.

We had now come to the climax of the situation—something had really happened. It made hearts beat faster in anticipation of at least a partial realization of dreams long deferred. The abrupt closing of the cafeteria at 8 p. m. caused the meeting to adjourn to a room on one of the upper floors of the hotel, where the rather confused discussion continued until nearly ten o'clock, without progressing much further.

To Prepare Platform.

The motion with its two amendments called for the appointment of a committee of nine educators who were enjoined to call into conference men of the commercial side, for the purpose of preparing a platform of action for a national visual education association, which is to be an entirely separate organization from the N. E. A., the first report of the committee to be given in not more than two months' time if possible.

The idea advanced first as a proposal by Arthur J. Klein, Executive Secretary of the National University Extension Association, was later put in the form of a motion by J. H. Wilson, Detroit Public Schools, to which was added two amendments by Carl Carson, one of the pioneers of visual education, and Don Carlos Ellis of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal. The amendments provided for the participation of industrial interests in the conference, and a time limit for the first report of the conference.

Try to Speed Up.

In apprehension of the long delays and inaction which usually attend the best intentions of persons not conversant with the rapid methods of modern business, Bernard De Vry, of the De Vry Corporation, Chicago, made an effort to stimulate the meeting to immediate action. The attempt was in vain, however, and the actual transaction of business confined itself to the appointment of W. H. Dudley, as chairman of the committee which was to be appointed by him at his leisure.

Better Organization Next Year.

Wherever one went during the term of the convention, the moving picture was endeavoring to call attention to its efficiency in the educational field; and it is a safe prophecy that by the time another year has rolled around the scene of the annual meeting together of the nation's educators will be still more plentifully studded with gems of the camera. It is also to be hoped that at that time the motion picture trade will be more fully represented, and that co-operation between the educator and the producer will be more fully established.

The question of the psychological soundness of the appeal of the moving picture, as expressed by Charles Roach of the State College of Iowa, the fact that big business is guided by dollars not sentiment, that it has been discovered that thousands of dollars can be saved in school work by the use of visual aids, that visual equipment compels careful daily preparation on the part of the teacher, and insures higher marks for the pupils, are reasons why the educator cannot longer afford to stand aloof from the producer of motion pictures.

"The moving picture justifies its presence in the school by the time it saves," is a wise remark which also must be attributed to Mr. Roach. It is bound, therefore, sooner or later; to become the most honored servant of the educator.

A question which promises to become a live issue in the near future, and in all probability a bitterly contested one, is a contemplated effort to bring about the adoption in the schools of machines using only the narrow width "non-flam" film. The fire hazard of the inflammable film seemed to be a mattter of more or less general discussion at the convention and was no doubt considerably overdrawn. The fact remains that the attention of the educational public is riveted on this particular feature of the moving picture, and will no doubt make it an issue in the larger adoption of the film for school use.

Anne Luther Will Be Featured One in Wisteria Production, "Why Women Sin"

THE always productive combination of a popular star in an effective presentation of popular photodrama will again be offered to picture showmen by Wistaria Production, Inc., in William Murphy's melodrama, "Why Women Sin." This title was originally used in presenting the stage offering on which the picture is based.

Wistaria decided to retain the stage title despite the fact that it is, in a large measure, a misnomer. There is nothing either in plot or action to fulfill in the least any ideas that the character of the picture reflects any socially prescribed undertakings.

"Why Women Sin" is a melodrama of speed and stirring action, set in the elaborateness that picture production allows in excess of stage creations—great numbers being involved in the big scenes, while heavy sets and impressive exteriors lend enchantment to the dramatic developments.

Cast of Excellence Provided.

In casting "Why Women Sin" Director General Burton King chose not alone Anne Luther as an ideal screen personality to fit the star role, but selected the individual support with view to their adaptability to the roles assigned to them. Claire Whitney will head the players who will support Miss Luther, others cast for prominent and essential roles being Charles Gerard, E. J. Radcliffe, J. W. Johnston, Al Hart and Baby Ivy Ward.

One of the big scenes is an event in a Parisian cabaret, and for this action Mlle. Nana and Mons. Alexis were selected to do their dancing specialty. In vaudeville Mlle. Nana has an enviable reputation as an eccentric dancer and with Mons. Alexis she features the "Apache" dance in the Parisian dance hall scene.

Offered to State Right Buyers.

"Why Women Sin" will be distributed to picture showmen on the state right system, with Jacques Kopstein director of the sales. Prints are ready for showings to buyers and another announcement will be made of the date when the feature will be screened for preview.

Frank T. Gallagher, president and treasurer of Wistaria Productions, Inc., is another man of big business who are interesting themselves in the screen. Mr. Gallagher is in business under the firm name of the Goodwin-Gallagher Sand and Gravel Co., supplying the largest building contractors in the East. He is finding in Wistaria productions an opportunity to enlarge and develop new interests in an attractive field.

Picture showmen are reminded that "Why Women Sin" has an advertising value to be revived from its success upon the stage. The William C. Murphy melodrama was long a successful attraction on the road, playing season after season in the larger cities and principal one-night stands.

As a screen attraction much is expected of it—for Anne Luther in a good screen drama may be depended upon to attract favorable attention.

Picker Opens Rio Theatre; a 3,000-Seat House

DAVID V. PICKER, a prominent New York exhibitor who operates a chain of theatres in the Bronx and upper Manhattan, opened his new Rio Theatre on Broadway at 159th to 160th streets on Thursday evening, March 4. The opening attraction was Basil King's story, "The Street Called Straight," a Goldwyn production.

The Rio occupies nearly a whole city block having a seating capacity of 3,000 persons. In its luxurious appointments and latest improved equipment it ranks among the finest theatres in the country, where the motion picture is presented in truly artistic fashion.

A large concert orchestra composed of solo artists under the direction of an eminent conductor is one of the features of the house. The very latest scenic and lighting devices have been installed and several innovations in the matter of presenting a diversified program are promised.

The Rio will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Picker with Francis A. Mangan assisting as production manager.

Sunshine Special Is Hailed as Del Ruth's Best Picture

THE completion of the five-reel Sunshine Special at the West Coast studios of Fox Film Corporation brings into the limelight once more an author and director of almost boundless energy. Hampton Del Ruth, in the production of the big Fox comedy, is said to have carried to a brilliant consummation an undertaking which put his mettle to a decisive test.

Hampton Del Ruth

Whose five-reel Sunshine special is predicted a "knockout."

Mr. Del Ruth not only is the immediate supervisor of the funfest, but is the author of it. The narrative framework of the picture originated with him, and many of the most sensational features he improvised as the filming progressed and revealed new possibilities for mirth-making.

While he was directing the screening of the special he permitted no let-up in the making of the regular two-reel Sunshine releases, retaining his personal supervision of them with unabated enthusiasm and assiduity.

His career, despite occasional rebuffs, has been a steady ascent. In his work with Fox Film Corporation he has attained the apex of that career. The Sunshine Comedies have become internationally known, and in the five-reel special he gives an example of what can be done in the comedy line for the screen. The producer claims that it is by far the greatest thing ever attempted in that field.

All Foreign Rights on "Sky Eye" Sold.

Mr. David J. Mountain, special representative for William Steiner, announces the following leases on "Sky Eye": Spain and Portugal, to Salm, Ltd.; Scandinavian, to the Scandinavian Film Agency; France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Central Powers and Balkans, to Chester Beecroft; Philippine Islands, to L. H. Allen; India, Burma, Ceylon, China, Japan, Dutch East Indies and Straits Settlements, to the International Variety and Theatrical Agency.

This closes the entire foreign territory on "Sky Eye."

"Eyes of Youth" Reaches Fourth Week in Baltimore

ONE of the most remarkable accomplishments ever noted in the history of amusements at Baltimore, Md., is the run of Clara Kimball Young's production, "Eyes of Youth," at the Blue Mouse Theatre. Arthur B. Price, owner and manager of the Blue Mouse, originally booked "Eyes of Youth" for a week's run. At the end of the first week, business had reached such a stage that it was held over for the second week.

The Blue Mouse Theatre has but 400 seats and is in the heart of the shopping district, which, at night, is not the most traveled thoroughfare. However, during the first two weeks of "Eyes of Youth" the business during the evening hours was greater, if anything, than during the day, and on three occasions during the second week midnight performances were necessary to take care of the tickets sold.

Noting no decrease in business toward the end of the second week, Mr. Price decided to hold the picture over a third week. Last Saturday, when business leaped again, making midnight performances necessary, it was decided to hold "Eyes of Youth" over for still another week, and on Tuesday Mr. Price wired Equity that the first two days of the fourth week were the largest of any, and he now thought he would run it two additional weeks, and then bring it back in the summer for an additional week.

"Eyes of Youth" has been a consistent pulling power throughout the entire country, and now "The Forbidden Woman," which opened at the Capitol Theatre, New York, to record business, has broken the record of "Eyes of Youth" at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, for the following wire was received at the Equity offices this week from Jack Callicott, managing director: "'Forbidden Woman' opened yesterday to absolute capacity business topping 'Eyes of Youth.' Indications for a sellout week. A bully production. Miss Young more popular than ever."

Goldwyn Signs Football Star.

Maurice B. Flynn, better known as "Lefty" Flynn, former Yale football star, has signed his name to a contract which means that he will remain with the Goldwyn Repertory Players at the Culver City Studios.

Mr. Flynn has done excellent work in a number of the Goldwyn productions, his most recent appearance being in "Roads of Destiny," an adaptation of the play by Channing Pollock, starring Pauline Frederick. During the comparatively short period that Mr. Flynn has been in motion pictures, he has proven his adaptability to screen work and his fitness for big roles.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

ANOTHER inch and two or three fractions of precipitation has been added to the future of the summer squash and the cauliflower, and we are having sunshine again.

The crux of the flu epidemic has passed and the dread of dark theatres that has been hovering over us is gone. Ten thousand tourists have turned their faces to the East in the past fortnight, and the bulge in the walls of the hotels and apartment houses is subsiding.

This does not mean that travelers can walk right up to the desk and say, "Gimme a good room and bath," and get it. But it does make it better for the early riser, who can now eat his matitudinal mush without the accompanying snores of the overflow parked in the dining room.

Jesse L. Lasky is paying one of his periodical visits to Filmland. Pat Dowling, wearing a look of sophistication and a hard-boiled hat, has come back from New York with a lot of good dope for the Boosters' Club about the storm-driven East.

Who Told Him That?

Maurice Maeterlinck, who is to form another link to Goldwyn's already long chain of Eminent Authors, arrived Monday.

Almost one of the first statements made by the great poet and mystic after setting foot in our fair city was that he was surprised to find that the motion picture was regarded as a second rate art in this country.

M. Maeterlinck does not hold this view of motion pictures. He only decries the false valuation (he thinks) we give them, and he puts the film drama in its rightful place as "The art of the future, which will appeal both to the sophisticated and the naive audience."

What I would like to know is, where did the great poet get the impression that the movies are looked upon as a second-rate art in this country? Has he been talking of our American authors who have had their writings politely but firmly refused by the producers? Or was he entertained by the Authors' League while he was in New York?

Bill Opens Up at Last.

I went down to see Bill Hart this week and found him in a talkative mood—about his work, I mean. Bill will talk about any subject under the sun, but when it comes to boosting his own pictures, he's one of the cat's-got-my-tongue kind of persons. Several times in the past, while standing around watching Bill work, I have ventured the remark that the action engaged on looked interesting, and indicated a good film, and he would always say, "Well, it's fair, but I won't say much about it until I hear what the fans have got to say; they are the best judges."

This time, however, Bill opened up.

"I have just finished my best story," he said, and then he told me the story of "The Toll Gate," and after listening to it, I'm inclined to say that Bill is right.

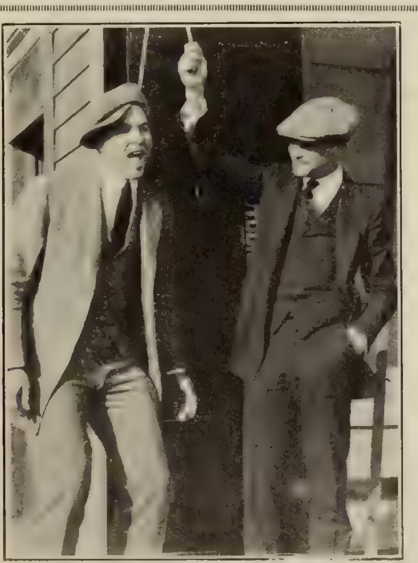
Bill was getting ready to go away on location up near Truckee when I went into his dressing room, and he stopped lacing up his best western shirt, and reeled off the story—from the time he plunged into a real whirlpool in a real underground river up near Sonora, and almost lost his life and the life of the Pinto pony to get a thrilling opening—to the last action taken down near the Mexican border.

Somebody Kids Maeterlinck; Hart Waxes Talkative; Hampton Slips in High Speed

BY GIEBLER.

"The Toll Gate" is what most anybody would call a humdinger, and it's all western, the kind of stuff that is best suited to Mr. Hart's delineation. There is enough action in it for half a dozen ordinary films, and two or three places in the story are so tender that I had to blow my nose to keep Bill from seeing that I am kind of chicken-hearted when I listen to soft pedal stuff.

Anna Q. Nilsson plays the opposite lead to Hart in "The Toll Gate," and Joe Singleton and Jack Richardson have big parts, and there's a clever kid named Richard Hedrick in the cast. Lambert Hillyer directed the action, and Joe August, as usual, handled the camera.



Getting the Hang of Things

An Amiable Moon and Well-Trained Clouds

Another day, I went out to Jesse D. Hampton's new studio, away out on Santa Monica Boulevard, and Jesse took me over on a stage where Henry King was making moonshine.

No, gentle reader, I do not mean household hooch, or any one of the various kinds of home brews. Mr. King was directing H. B. Warner and Anna Q. Nilsson in a film called "Behind the Red Curtain," in a set representing a garden with a pergola and a lot of flowers and trees, and one of the best behaved moons and some of the most perfectly trained clouds I've ever seen.

All Mr. King had to do was to say, "All right, Bill, let her shine," and the moon would start in shedding its beneficent and romantic rays all over the garden. Then the clouds would go into action and pass gently before the face of the moon, softening the lunar rays and making the scene more romantic.

Hampton Plans Big Specials.

In addition to Mr. Warner, who is the star, and Miss Nilsson, his leading lady, Walter Taylor, Adele Farrington, Thomas Guise, Augustus Phillips, Lillian Rich, Frank Leigh, Eddy Burns, Howard Davies and Dorothy Hagar, all have good parts in "Behind the Red Curtain," which will be the first of six special productions featuring H. B. Warner to be released on the Pathe program.

Mr. Hampton is arranging for a series of special productions to be directed by Henry King and Robert Thornby. The story and the director will be featured in these films, and all-star casts will be used for the interpretation.

Books written by John Galsworthy, William J. Locke, Jerome K. Jerome, F. Hopkinson Smith, Frank H. Spearman and other equally well-known authors, will be used as scenario material. Work will begin on the new series at once.

Fred Makes Dave Act.

After leaving the Hampton plant I stopped at John Jasper's Hollywood studios, and had a pleasant session with the members of the D. N. Schwab organization. A nice, friendly bunch of folks.

The Schwab company is making films with David Butler as the star, and they are using Sophie Kerr's Satevepost story, "Sitting on the World," for the first production.

Dave Butler has a great part in the story, and he's doing full justice to it, as anyone who remembers his work as Mons. Bebe in Griffith's "Greatest Thing in Life," and in other films, knows he is capable of doing.

But, for that matter, Dave's got to act whether he wants to or not, in this picture. His father, Fred S. Butler, stage director at the Morosco Theatre, and one of the best known legitimate directors in the country, is an official of the Schwab organization, and on top of that he's directing the picture, so you see Dave's simply got to act or get in bad with Dad.

Taming the Temperamental.

While we were standing around between scenes we got to talking about this, and Dore N. Schwab, the big boss of the studio, came along and said: "I'll show you what we do with players when they get temperamental around here," and he led Dave to where a long rope with a noose in the end was dangling from a rafter in a set, adjusted the noose over Dave's head and shut off his wind so that poor Dave couldn't tell anybody what he thought of the situation.

Lillian Hall, who went some in her part of "Going Some" at Goldwyn, is playing opposite Dave in "Sitting on the World." Harry Todd and Eugenie Besserer do a father and mother part; Fred Bond is the rascal. Murdock McQuarrie is helping direct, and Hugh McClung is doing the camera work.

To Make Five-Reelers.

Texas Guinan, who will soon complete her contract for a series of two-reel westerns with the Bulls-Eye Corporation, will next been seen in a series of five-reel features for the same company. Jay Hunt, her present director, will be in charge of the new productions.

BAYARD VEILLER, author of stage melodramas that have chilled the spines of thousands, has joined the writing forces of Metro's organization and will turn his product to screen production hereafter. His first story will be a heavy-going drama for Bert Lytell. You will recall Veiller as the author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair."

Pictures are going to church. Members of Boyle Heights Methodist Episcopal Church, Los Angeles, according to Moving Picture World, have approved a plan to hold regular motion picture entertainments at the church and have voted a special appropriation to secure and install a projection machine forthwith.

Six motion picture stars, Mary Miles Minter, Gloria Swanson, Pauline Frederick, Bebe Daniels, Lew Cody and Douglas MacLean acted as auctioneers at Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, for the benefit entertainment of the Los Angeles Post, American Legion.

T. Roy Barnes is playing for the first time in motion pictures—and playing the lead at that. The well-known variety entertainer is at the Goldwyn studio, appearing in "Scratch My Back," by Rupert Hughes. . Barnes had to his credit, twenty-four hours after he passed through the studio gate, a new name for motion pictures. He dubbed them "the jumping tintypes." ?

Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki, film stars, are planning to visits their parents in Japan during the coming summer. They are each busy making a lot of moving picture dramas to last while they are away.

Marshall Neilan, according to Moving Picture World, has purchased the film rights to Booth Tarkington's "Penrod" stories, now being done on the stage.

Agnes Christine Johnson, scenario writer of recent Mary Pickford and Charles Ray productions, is to be married in June to Frank Dazey, son of Charles Dazey, the playwright. "In Old Kentucky," most successful of the Dazey stage plays, is now going the rounds of the world's screens, with Anita Stewart playing Madge Brierly and riding "Queen Bess" to needful victory in the Kentucky Oaks.

Lois Weber, skillful woman director, has transferred her activities to Paramount-Artcraft pictures and will present as her first production "What Do Men Want?" If the matter is fully covered and finally settled the film is sure to be a great success and add materially to domestic felicity.

Edith Hallor is to be starred in another Lawrence Weber production, "Just Outside the Door." It was taken from the Jules Eckert Goodman story, and the continuity was prepared by Harvey Thew.

Several hundred children, many of them accompanied by parents applied to Director George Irving for roles in "Children of Destiny," thinking it was a "kid" picture.

Robert Ellis, who directed Eugene O'Brien in "A Fool and His Money," donned the uniform of an Italian military officer and acted the part. The man who was cast for the role was busy in court explaining the workings of a kitchen "still" he had been operating at home.

COMING TO THE SCREEN.

Film Version of Plays, Popular Books and Original Scenarios for the "Fans."

"Just Outside the Door" (Republic).
"Children of Destiny" (Selznick).
"The North Wind's Malice" (Goldwyn).
"Love Among the Chickens" (Selznick).
"The Honor of the House" (Selznick).
"The Devil's Pass-Key" (Universal).
"The Temple of Dawn" (Metro).
"Scratch My Back" (Goldwyn).
"Trimmed with Red" (Goldwyn).
"Dangerous Paradise" (Selznick).
"Young America" (Paramount).
"Penrod" Stories (Neilan).
"The Furnace" (Paramount).
"The Fighter" (Selznick).
"The Girl from the Sky" (Vitagraph).
"Athalie" (Mayflower).
"The Virgin of Stamboul" (Universal).
"Little Miss By-the-Day" (Realart).
"Sinners" (Realart).
"The Road to Divorce" (Universal).

In reviewing silver screen affairs of ten years ago, Moving Picture World recalls the production of "Hiawatha," with Florence Lawrence and King Baggot stars, under the management of Carl Laemmle, now president of Universal. "Hiawatha" would be more interesting now, revived under the newer methods of film production.

Corinne Griffith has just entered into a new contract that will continue her as a star of Vitagraph presentations for some time to come. Miss Griffith is working at the Brooklyn studio, on a dramatic feature soon to be announced.

Gloria Hope will be Owen Moore's leading woman in the forthcoming Selznick production, "His Word of Honor." The scenario was made from a story by Edgar Franklyn.

According to Moving Picture World Madlaine Traverse is engaged to marry an aviator whose name she refuses to disclose. That puts everybody up in the air along with the prospective bridegroom.

Alice Brady, who starred upon the stage in "Sinners," is preparing the Owen Davis melodrama for screen presentation. Miss Brady is a Realart star on the silver screen.

Bringing the Canadian Mounted Police to the screen, Marshall Neilan's presentation of "The River's End," began circulating for a pre-release week at New York's Strand. It is declared that the picture broke a house record for receipts that has stood for six years—with Sunday and Washington's Birthday crowds to "put it across."

Arline Pretty has been signed by Myron Selznick to star in a series of photoplays, starting with a Willard Mack story, "The Prince of Pines." Miss Pretty will play neither a prince or a pine—but she will be the leading woman in Director Brunton George's company.

Annette Kellerman is preparing a screen feature in which the famous mermaid becomes a regular actress of emotional temperament. Very likely the plot will lead her into the sea for a few high dives and swimming stunts—but the ocean will be photographed along with the stunts so that the famous one-piece-suit bathing beauty can take it with her.

Sylvia Breamer will star in Mayflower productions under supervision of M. Sidney A. Franklin, having the leading role in Robert W. Chambers' "Athalie" as her initial screening.

H. H. Van Loan, who formerly served as publicity promoter for Universal films, has turned to scenario writing and lately sold, at a goodly figure, the script of "The Virgin of Stamboul" to his former employers. You never can tell what a newspaperman may be doing next.

Having tried the experiment of making two endings to "The Right of Way," Metro and Metro's star, Bert Lytell, are "up in the air." The public likes both the "regular" ending to the story and also fancied the "happy ending" that was supplied. It was a novel departure in film making that seems to have pleased enough to satisfy everybody—but the producer.

Clara Kimball Young has followed her former screen success, "The Eyes of Youth" with a still more-popular novelty, "The Forbidden Woman." And she is now working on a third screen originality.

Vitagraph is screening a version of the Gouverneur Morris novel, "Trumpet Island" under the film-title of "The Girl from the Sky." Book titles, as frequently observed, are not always suited to screen versions of the same works.

Miss Peggy will become Mrs. Pegge when Peggy O'Dare, of Eddie Polo's company, marries N. O. K. Pegge, of San Francisco. Moving Picture World makes the announcement in a recent issue.

So filled with visitors is Los Angeles this season that property men around the film studios are reaping a small fortune leasing space on moving picture furniture for night's lodgings, according to a report that may have origin in the fancy of some paragrapher.

Betty Compson has formed her own producing company and will soon announce her plans and the title of her first production.

Anna Q. Nilsson, screen queen, will make a trip to Stockholm, Sweden, this coming summer to visit her parents, whom she has not seen for fifteen years.

Ralph Bushman, seventeen year old son of Francis X. Bushman, will play in Christie Comedies.

"The Land of Opportunity," in which Ralph Ince was the star and director, was the first motion picture to be shown in the Hall of Congress. It is being exploited by the film industry as an "Americanization" subject.

The estate of a famous chewing gum magnate in Pasadena, Cal., was used for the filming of scenes for "Children of Destiny." The mansion served as the exterior of a private gambling house in France.

Screen rights to "The Furnace" have been secured by Famous Players-Lasky for a William D. Taylor production. This will be a photoplay for entertainment purposes and not an "industrial" to instruct the suburbanites in the art of keeping from freezing to death through the trickery of heating apparatuses.

Constance Binney has completed her second screen production for Realart. It is titled "The Stolen Kiss," and was produced with the novel, "Little Miss By-the-Day" as its basis. This stage celebrity has "repeated" as a popular favorite in her screen work.

The transformation of a Los Angeles newsboy into a film actor has been accomplished in the screen version of "Huckleberry Finn," fine visualization of Mark Twain's juvenile classic. Lewis Sargent is the lad's name, and he has become at once a permanent star of the screen. His next piece will be "Young America," now being filmed by Director William D. Taylor for Famous Players-Lasky.

Eugene O'Brien has just completed his fifth film as a star, "A Fool and His Money," adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's well read novel. Film "fans" are assured that they will not be dislocated according to the title, says Moving Picture World.

Dorothy Phillips will star in the Holubar productions, which will be known as the Phillips-Holubar Productions. Since leaving Universal this pair of artists have received numerous offers from film producing concerns, but until the Kauffman plan was presented none seemed to know just what they were looking for. Exceptionally attractive salaries have been stipulated for, besides a certain percentage of the earnings of the films, in the Kauffman contract. Pending the erection of the new Kauffman studio, to be built during the summer, work will be started on the first Phillips-Holubar production at one of the community studios in Hollywood.

Nehls, of Chicago, general manager of the American Film Company, has arrived on the West Coast to determine upon the nature of the future productions to be turned out of the American plant at Santa Barbara. His decision, according to announcements, may be in favor of all-star productions, now so popular with many producing companies. After William Russell and Mary Miles Minter left the American fold, there remained only the Margarita Fisher company at work at the studio, but since she, too, has gone, the plant is temporarily deserted.

Cameo Productions Organized.

The site is the one formerly occupied by the scenic railway, and is directly on the ocean front. The building will be a three-story structure, with a frontage of 106 feet by 175 feet in depth, and will be of brick and concrete construction. Special lighting effects will be used, and the furnishings planned for the theatre will cost approximately $35,000.

Doris Keane Soon to Make Screen Debut in "Romance"

HERALDED as one of America's greatest emotional stage actresses and whose years of earnest effort have brought her her deserved reward, Doris Keane will soon make her bow to screen lovers in "Romance," the love story by Edward Sheldon, which Hiram Abrams of United Artists says will be released within a few weeks.

By no means an unknown quantity to the American amusement loving public, Miss Keane awaited the opportunity to make her screen debut a sensational one, and it will be in her stage success of the past six years that she will first make her bow to the lovers of the screen.

During the past seven years Miss Keane appeared for a season in New York, a year and a half in Chicago, a season in Boston and almost four years in London, in the play "Romance," and her work in this stage piece has been a great achievement.

It was in "Romance" that Miss Keane came into her own. In the part of Rita Cavallini, the Italian opera singer, she concentrated all of the qualities which have made her work distinguished in the past—emotional strength, a genius for comedy, a rare fascination of manner and simple and unforced pathos. Her success has been overwhelming and her Cavallini has been one of the most notable impersonations of the last decade, and her play one of the most successful.

Change Title of Olive Thomas Film.

Announcement was made from the Selznick offices this week that the title of the next Olive Thomas production has been changed from "The Flapper" to "Dangerous Paradise." This new title, the report says, permits more exploitation and is more attractive.

Independent Film Exchange Men Form Co-operative Organization in Chicago

TO form an organization of independent exchangemen representative of 100 per cent. of the United States, so far as the distribution of films is concerned, representatives of the largest and most important film exchanges met in convention at Chicago on February 24, 25, 26 and 27.

While the details of the meetings and many of the social features of the convention were planned by the officials of the Capital Film Company, it was made plain at the opening session of the convention that the Capital company ceased to be a factor in the business of the convention.

Balloting for the officers of the convention resulted in the following selections: A. A. Millman, of Philadelphia, chairman; Gene Pearce, of New Orleans, treasurer, and Dave Chatkin, of San Francisco, secretary; ways and means committee, R. D. Lewis, Oklahoma City, chairman; A. A. Millman, Philadelphia; Gene Pearce, New Orleans; Al Kahn, Kansas City; Dave Chatkin, San Francisco; E. J. Farrell, Boston; R. C. Cropper, Chicago, and Harry A. Kyler, Denver.

Lay Groundwork for National Movement.

The ground work of a national movement having as its objectives the protection and encouragement of independent producers was effectively laid, and it was determined to fight for independent success by all means and with every resource at the command of the organization.

It was also decided to form a co-operative body which will settle all boundary disputes, proportion the cost of negatives by territories, and arrange for the raising of any financial support that may be necessary at any time for the furtherance of the legitimate objects of the organization.

The delegates to the convention were: Gene Pearce and H. J. Hermann, Pearce Film Company, New Orleans; H. E. Coffey, Empire Film Distributing Company, Washington; A. A. Millman, Capital Film Exchange, Philadelphia; Al Kahn, Crescent Film Company, Kansas City; H. A. Kyler, Supreme Photoplays Corporation, Denver; Dave Mundstuk, Strand Features, Detroit; Dave Chatkin, Consolidated Film Corporation, San Francisco; W. A. Baier, W. A. Baier Film Company, Oklahoma City; S. Saniel, S. & S. Film & Supply Company, Pittsburgh; R. D. Lewis, R. D. Lewis Film Company, Oklahoma City; T. W. Berstein, National Film Company, Los Angeles; Joe Brandt, National Film Corporation, New York; William Steiner, San Antonio; R. A. Kipling, Los Angeles; C. M. Giffin, Los Angeles; Neal Hart, Capital's famous western star, and A. V. Lee, Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y. J. S. McQUADE.

"Nobody's Child" Is Title of First Jose Collins Film

THE latest addition to Pioneer's list of spring attractions will be "Nobody's Child," in which Jose Collins appears as an opera singer, who, in her climb to fame, sacrifices love, home and the greater things in life to the fulfillment of her ambition.

"Nobody's Child" was adapted from the play, "The Whirlpool," presented in this country and in England, and directed by George Edwardes Hall.

Miss Collins is supported by Godfrey Tearle, J. Fisher White, Christine Maitland, Bruce Winston, Frances Wetheral and Saba Raleigh.

The story, while tensely dramatic, at no time falls back upon melodramatic situations to carry its points.

"Nobody's Child" will probably be the third of the Pioneer's spring offerings to be released. The first will be Mary Anderson in "Bubbles," followed by Marie Doro in "Midnight Frolics."

The Convention of Independent Exchange Men, Chicago, February 24-27.

Planned by the Capital Film Company, this conclave developed ideas for a national organization of independent producers and distributors, a co-operative body bound together for mutual protection and benefit.

Jans and Backer Report Several Sales Also Start on Extended Trip to West

HERMAN F. JANS, president, and F. E. Backer, general sales manager of Jans Pictures, Inc., will leave soon for an extended trip through the West. They will include the key cities of the Western state rights territory, their purpose being to establish a chain of state rights buyers to handle the series of Olive Tell features, the first of which, "Love Without Question," has just been completed by B. A. Rolfe.

Messrs. Jans and Backer hope to interview the majority of important exhibitors as well as state rights buyers before returning East. They will travel as far West as the Pacific Coast. From practically all of this territory bids and inquiries as to this series have been received.

In this connection it is announced that much territory has already been contracted for, including New York to Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, and Northern New Jersey to the New Jersey Rolfe Film Company, while the Minter United Amusements of Detroit has bought the Michigan rights.

Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia territory contracts were closed with the Baltimore State Right Company, and Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia, Pa., has purchased Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. Foreign rights, with the exception of Canada, are controlled by the Export and Import Film Corporation. Canadian Rights are controlled by Jules and J. J. Allen.

It is Mr. Jans' belief that the short time in which the above mentioned territory was sold proves his contention that they have been successful in producing a photodrama that is of unusual interest and sure to arouse the curiosity of the public.

Gaumont Announces Sales on "Husbands and Wives"

GAUMONT COMPANY reports the sale of territory on "Husbands and Wives," featuring Vivian Martin and adapted from the Corra Harris novel, "Making Her His Wife," as follows: First National Exchange New York and Buffalo for New York; First National Exchange Pittsburgh for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; First National, Washington, D. C., for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

D. Lewis Film Company, Dallas and Oklahoma City for Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma; Exhibitors Distributing Corporation for Canada.

Clark-Cornelius Corporation, Atlanta, for the Southeastern States; Fantanelle Feature Film Company, Omaha, for Iowa and Nebraska; Pearce Films, New Orleans for Louisiana and Mississippi; Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, for Illinois and Indiana. It is expected that the remaining territory will be disposed of within a short time.

Fidelity Pictures Announces Several Territorial Sales

THE Fidelity Pictures have already closed several territories on its initial feature "The Married Virgin." Sol Lesser has secured California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington. Oregon, Idaho and Montana, as well as the Hawaiian Islands, and New York City and Northern New Jersey will be handled by Producers Feature Service of 729 Seventh avenue, while Circle Film Attractions of Pittsburgh have bought the rights to Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The Greater Productions of Des Moines recently closed for Iowa and Nebraska.

Deals now pending for the remaining sections of the country are expected to result in sales which will give the "Married Virgin" a full hundred per cent. distribution within the next few weeks.

The Fidelity Pictures, which is slightly more than a month old, is now busily engaged in building up a sales organization with which to handle the list of offerings which will shortly be released.

Jerome Lewis and William G. Smith are the directing heads of the Fidelity. Both have had long training in both theatrical and film fields, and announce their determined effort to develop an organization along conservative and constructive lines to take its place among the foremost.

"The Scarlet Dragon" to Be Next Park-Whiteside Picture

THE second production of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, to be distributed through Photoplay Libraries, Inc., will be "The Scarlet Dragon," announced as dealing sociologically with the subject of commercialized vice. This picture will have the same personnel as the first release, "Empty Arms."

Gail Kane, the star, is cast as a girl who combats the efforts of a crime juggernaut to find her sister, who has been caught in the whirlpool. The featured players are Thurston Hall and J. Herbert Frank, while the supporting cast includes William Bechtel, Norbert Wicki, Nellie Burt, Paul Lane and Rene Gerard.

It is stated that the big feature of the production will be a lavish scene in a Chinese cabaret, with Ted Lewis, vaudeville headliner and member of the cast of "Greenwich Village Follies" with his jazz band; also Mlle. Dazie, well-known dancer now appearing in "Aphrodite," together with a Nubian dancer and several beauties from Broadway cabarets.

The interiors are being designed by A. Bela Viragh-Flower, and the camera handled by George Benoit who photographed such productions as "The Honor System" and "On With the Dance."

Character Signs Paul Gilmore for a Series of Productions

THE Character Pictures Corporation has signed a long term contract to feature Paul Gilmore, the well known stage star, in a series of special productions. Mr. Gilmore has become known to theatregoers throughout the country by his performances in such successes as "The Better 'Ole," "The Miracle Man," "Experience," "The Garden of Allah," etc. For several years he has toured the United States and Canada at the head of his own companies until he has gained for himself a worthwhile prestige and following.

Several attractive offers for the current season had been made Mr. Gilmore by stage producers, but he was persuaded to sign with Character Pictures for a screen career. He recently toured the country with "The Better 'Ole," playing the principal part of Old Bill and drew forth unusually favorable notices from the press. He is not a newcomer to the screen, having already been featured with success by Triangle, Metro and Pathe in such pictures as "Rosemary," "The Other Girl," "The Penitentes" and others.

Character Pictures has planned for Mr. Gilmore a special series of six-reel features along somewhat different lines than anything heretofore attempted by other players. Character feels that in Paul Gilmore it has an actor of proved popularity whose long career fits him admirably to do some big things.

Popular stage plays and novels will be purchased for Mr. Gilmore and nothing will be spared to bring them up to the highest standards of the screen.

Newspaper Campaign for "Hallroom Boys" "Oh, Baby!" To Be First of New Series

IN co-operation with the syndicate controlling the H. A. McGill strip appearing in a number of daily newspapers dealing with the adventures of Percy and Ferdie Hall Room, Jack and Harry Cohn, prodcuers of the Hall Room Boy comedies, have started a campaign of newspaper exploitation.

Fifty-five newspapers have already contracted for the cartoon series, and this additional publicity, it is believed, will enhance the value of and interest in the screen version. The motion pictures are not cartoons. Percy Hall Room is portrayed by Neely Edwards, who is featured in the series, and Hugh Fay plays Ferdie.

This co-operative plans appears to be meeting with favor, as the readers watch the papers for the new antics of this comic pair and then see on the screen the characters for which they watch in the daily press.

"Mopping Up."

Giving the kiddo many reasons to cry for mother in "Oh, Baby!" the Hallroom Boys' comedy released by Jack and Harry Cohn.

"Oh, Baby!" First of New "Hall Rooms."

From the coast, where he is supervising the production of Hall Room Boys Comedies, Harry Cohn, of the firm Jack and Harry Cohn, has sent to New York the names of the next three comedies to be released.

The first of these is "Oh, Baby!" in which Percy and Ferdie Hall Room are dismayed and bewildered in suddenly having foisted upon them a baby. Their trials and tribulations are said to make one of the most laughable stories these two have ever appeared in.

"Oh, Baby!" marks the advent of a new kind of comedy in this series, according to Jack Cohn. While losing none of their refinement and wholesomeness, enough slapstick and "hokum" has been introduced to get the laughs. The next one will be "This Way Out," to be followed by "The Line is Busy." "Oh, Baby!" will be ready for a New York showing this week.

"The Great Reward" Is Title of Burston's Latest Serial

THE title of the latest Burston serial, which stars Frances Ford, supported by Ella Hall, is "The Great Reward." Mr. Kohn is a San Francisco man, with offices both in his home city and Los Angeles. He recently began producing at the National studios with Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling Bill" Jones as his leading stars, and states that three other units will be added before July.

"The short-subject release has at last come into its own. This applies both to comedy-dramatic pictures as well as slapstick and 'situation' comedies," continued Mr. Kohn. "We will exploit our productions in order to make the exhibitors understand that we are giving real worth for their money."

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Managerial Differences With Chicago Operators End In Permanent Arbitration

IN accordance with my night dispatch of Monday, February 23, a notice was handed every moving picture operator working in Chicago theatres, either at the matinee or night show, to the effect that their services would no longer be required after Sunday, February 29. This notice read in part:

> We are compelled to do this because of the fact that the organization to which you belong is very unfair in their treatment of the theatres in general.
>
> Their demands to the theatres to employ men who are not needed, just so that some unemployed men in your organization may be paid, regardless of the theatres' need of them, is unwarranted.
>
> The theatres of the city of Chicago have unanimously decided that this method of procedure cannot continue. We, however, are willing to continue employing you provided we can get a fair adjustment from members of your organization other than your present business agents.
>
> There is no personal feeling in giving you this notice, as every exhibitor in the city of Chicago is doing the same thing at the same time.

It was also understood that after Sunday, February 29, Chicago film exchanges would refuse to book any films in Chicago or in that part of Cook County served by Chicago exchanges.

Business Manager Maloy, of Chicago Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., countered this by threatening injunctions on all film companies whose exchanges refused to deliver films to theatres that were open after Sunday, February 29. He also stated that a boycott would be established in New York City on such companies, which would prevent their film from being used in picture theatres throughout the United States and Canada.

New Agreement Demanded.

Business Manager Atkinson of the A. A. A. demanded for the A. A. A. that a new arbitration agreement must be drawn up and agreed to before the theatres would reopen. This agreement would include the following provisos:

> That theatre owners will not employ extra operators unless needed.
>
> That the present business heads of the union shall be removed from office and more reasonable men appointed to succeed them.
>
> The suspension of stink bomb throwing in picture theatres.
>
> The attempt of the union to control the screen by the censorship of advertising matter must cease.

Business Agent Maloy, on behalf of the union, denied all the charges made and denied that the union was responsible for the present situation.

On Wednesday, February 25, it looked as if matters were a little more promising, notwithstanding the fact that Business Manager Atkinson of the A. A. A. and Business Manager Maloy of the union had declared they would have no further dealings with each other and that the fight would be to a finish. Indeed, if the wordy clashes in which both these officials engaged in the daily press had been omitted, the situation would have been considerably relived, so far as the chances of the adjustment of differences were concerned.

Thursday's chief features in the strife were the rehiring of all the discharged moving picture operators by Business Agent Maloy, who ordered them to report for work, at the respective theatres where they were formerly employed, Monday, March 1.

It was also given out that President Thomas J. Reynolds of the operators' union and Business Manager Maloy would leave on the Twentieth Century for New York City to consult with Charles C. Shay, president of the I. A. T. S. E. M. P. O., of the United States and Canada, as he had taken the matter out of their hands.

International Boycott Threatened.

This new turn in the determination of the issue was due to the disclosure that if certain film concerns refused to furnish films to independent theatres in Chicago, which would refuse to be governed by the ultimatum of the A. A. A., an international boycott against the product of such film concerns would be made, both in the United States and Canada, from the New York office of the operators' organization.

Another important feature of Thursday's events was a meeting of exhibitors and film exchange managers, called at Corinthian Hall, Masonic Temple, at 11 o'clock a. m. Attorney Lewis F. Jacobson, of the Allied Amusements Association, was chairman and about 230 persons were present.

Maurice Choynsky, president of the A. A. A., made a statement as to the issues involved, citing differences that have existed in the past up to the present dispute. He was followed by Sam Atkinson, vice-president and business manager of the A. A. A., who explained the present difficulties. He stated that the business manager of the operators' union did not like him and that he did not like the business manager, and told of what he was accomplishing as business manager of the A. A. A.

Harry Koffman then took the floor and announced that he had just been advised by telephone that Thomas Reynolds and Tom Maloy, president and business manager, respectively, of Local 110, were anxious to appear at the meeting and give their side of the question. Mr. Koffman made a motion that this be done. The motion was seconded by several of those present.

Situation Not Clear to Jones.

At this point Aaron J. Jones took the floor and announced that he had just returned from New York. While there he had heard about the pending differences; but it was not clear to him just what they were until after he had arrived. He stated that he had taken it upon himself, immediately after his arrival, to call Business Manager Maloy on the phone and invite him to his office. Mr. Maloy agreed.

Mr. Jones then said he had taken it upon himself to suggest to Mr. Maloy that a committee of five members of the A. A. A. should meet a committee of six members of the Union at his office, at 3 p. m., Thursday afternoon, February 26, for the purpose of arbitrating existing differences so as to permit business to go on uninterruptedly. Mr. Maloy had accepted the offer, he said.

After considerable discussion, in which several exhibitors took part, it was unanimously decided to have the two committees meet Thursday afternoon, at the hour named, at Mr. Jones' office, in the Rialto building.

On the exhibitors' committee were Aaron J. Jones, Joseph Trinz, Maurice Choynsky, Harold Hill and Sam Atkinson. Representing the operators were Thomas J Reynolds, Tom E. Maloy, Dick Green, international vice-president; Hal. Johnstone, secretary and treasurer, and F. H. Clifford and Sig Kaufman, members of the union.

Yep, It's All Too Plain: The Coppers Are Closing In.

Meeting Adjourned Till Friday.

The meeting was then adjourned until Friday morning, in the same hall. The arbitration committees, previously referred to, met in the private offices of Jones, Linick & Schaefer at the appointed hour, Thursday afternoon. In brief, the articles of agreement entered into at the meeting are as follows:

In the class of the de luxe theatres, called so by the union and including the Riviera, Pantheon, Howard, Central Park, Crystal and the Broadway Strand, which use electrical appliances for electrical effects, separate from spotlight and moving picture machines, two men shall be used for matinees and two for the night shift, making four in all daily. In theatres where the separate electrical effects are not used at matinees, but only at night, the extra operator must have the same pay as the regular night operator. Where separate electrical effects are used at matinees an extra man must be employed at the same weekly pay as the matinee operator.

The agreement also provides that in the future the union shall not arbitrarily pull off any man from his work in a theatre and that all grievances from either side must be submitted to a board of arbitration, comprised of the officers of the A. A. A. and the president and business agent of the union; also that a meeting of this arbitration board shall be held on Friday, every week, for the purpose of adjusting any grievances or differences that may arise.

These articles of agreement are in writing and are signed by all the members of the arbitration committees.

Thanks Exchange Managers.

At Friday morning's meeting in Corinthian Hall, Masonic Temple, a rousing vote of thanks was given the film exchange managers for their loyal co-operation with the A. A. A. in the trouble just happily ended. Joseph Friedman, president of the Chicago F. I. L. M. Association, thanked the meeting on behalf of his colleagues and assured exhibitors that any honest cause would receive the support of the exchange managers.

In response to a call, Nathan Ascher claimed that the fight was a victory for the A. A. A. and that the result could only have been accomplished by the film exchanges standing in with the exhibitors. He asserted that there are as many owners of theatres of small size, who are not members of the A. A. A., as there are owners of theatres who are members of the organization. Mr. Ascher expressed the opinion that if theatres had closed down in the threatened lockout of operators, the fight could not have been possibly won, as all the non-member theatres might have remained open; but that the co-operation of the film exchanges in refusing to book any films in Chicago, beginning Monday, March 1, would have made it imperative for all to close.

The writer holds that Aaron J. Jones deserves the hearty thanks of exhibitors and film exchange men in Chicago for his timely and successful plan of settling a serious dispute. His fine business acumen and prompt action delivered Chicago picture theatre owners and film exchanges and the business generally from what might easily have become a catastrophe.

Abe Stern in Chicago.

Abe Stern, vice-president and eastern manager of the Century Comedy Company, came into Chicago from New York last week to meet Mrs. Stern, who arrived from Los Angeles, after a stay of six months at Universal City. They will spend several weeks at French Lick Springs, Ind. Mr. Stern stated that the Century Comedy Company has practically monopolized the "lion comedy" production field. His company is now preparing elaborate comedies, in which from fifteen to twenty well-trained lions are used in each picture. He drew special attention to the Mrs. Joe Martin comedies.

"Who Am I?"

Which is the title of the fourth National Picture Theatres production.

E. H. Goldstein, general sales manager of Universal exchanges, who is making a trip through the central west, arrived in Chicago Friday, February 27. The object of Mr. Goldstein's present tour is to get all the exchange managers in this territory in readiness for Priscilla Dean's next production, "The Virgin of Stamboul."

"The Greatest Question" at Randolph.

D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Question," with such big favorites as Lillian Gish, Robert Harron and George Fawcett in the cast, was a big drawing card all through the week of Sunday, February 22, at the Randolph Theatre. It was supplemented by "A Twilight Baby," an entertaining comedy by Henry Lehrman.

The same bill has been retained for another week.

Lieutenant Locklear Says He Is in Love with Picture Work

LIEUT. ORMER LOCKLEAR, accompanied by his manager, Col. William Pickens, was in Chicago all last week, attracting the attention of thousands by his thrilling air feats, by way of advertising the first week's run of "The Great Air Robbery" at the Bandbox Theatre. It is almost needless to state that this house has been showing to "turn away" business daily.

Harry Rice, Universal's Chicago publicity manager, accompanied by the "Daredevil of the Skies," went over to the Congress Hotel one day during the week to make a call on William Mountain, vice-president and general manager of the Curtis Airplane Company. Harry had a moving picture machine under one arm and a film copy of "The Great Air Robbery" under the other as he met the Curtis magnate, and arrangements were made for a private showing of Locklear's great picture in the hotel.

Among the guests of Mr. Mountain, who viewed the picture, were Eddie Rickenbacker, "Ace of Aces," and the Grand Exalted Ruler of the Elks. After the films were run off Mr. Mountain was so pleased that he invited Lieut. Locklear and Col. Pickens, also Harry Rice and everyone concerned in the production of "The Great Air Robbery" to attend the coming airplane show in New York City, at his expense.

When seen last week, Lieut Locklear stated that he was infatuated with moving picture work and that he has made more real friends and has had greater happiness than he ever dreamed of since entering this field.

He appeared to be well satisfied that his future is assured in the moving picture business and he has fully made up his mind to remain in it. When he makes his next appearance on the screen he promises to surpass his feats in "The Great Air Robbery" by still more daring exploits, some that have never before been attempted by any other flyer.

Aurora's Beautiful Rialto Was Opened on February 23

AURORA, ILL., was the scene of one of the most memorable events in its history on Monday evening, February 23. This was the opening of the Rialto, a beautiful modern picture theatre seating 1,400 persons. This house was built by the Thielen-Rubens-Burford organization, which controls all the moving picture houses in Aurora, Elgin and Joliet.

The Rialto can boast of chaste architectural beauty and all modern improvements that conduce to the comfort and safety of its patrons. The lighting and heating systems, safety exits, ventilation, etc., were pronounced excellent by the first nighters. Over $100,000 was spent in the completed structure.

The opening night drew quite a gathering from a number of the leading Chicago exchanges. Among these visitors were Ben W. Beadell, manager, Eddie Silverman, assistant manager, and A. Steinberg, publicity representative, of Select's Chicago office; Manager Willard, of Realart's Chicago office; Paul Bush, manager of the Republic Exchange; Maurice Heilman, representing Universal; Frank J. Flaherty, manager Unity Photoplays; Jack O'Toole, manager United Picture Theatres, Inc.; Floyd Brockell, manager Greater Stars Productions; Mr. Goldman, manager American Film Co.; Percy Havill, Chicago salesman for Robertson-Cole, etc.

The occasion also brought out all the notables of Aurora and the surrounding country. The program was well chosen and offered fine opportunities to the well equipped orchestra, which has eight pieces and a fine organ.

A beautiful array of floral offerings was banked on the stage, the gifts for the occasion of Chicago exchange men and friends in Aurora, Joliet and Elgin.

After the show a banquet was given in the Aurora Hotel at 10:30 p. m., the guests including many prominent people of the home city, as well as the large Chicago contingent. Speeches and music were in order while the festivities lasted.

Request Brief History of "Dad" Comerford's Career

SINCE the lamented death of "Dad" Comerford, I have been requested to give a brief history of his career by an unknown friend, who furnished the particulars which are given here, and which will be preserved and treasured by his many friends.

Mr. Comerford was born in New York City and made his first appearance in stock at the Bowery Theatre, at an early age. Later, he was associated with the Harry Miner Enterprises.

In 1888 he married Miss Maysil, well known in the profession as leading woman and ingenue. Together they toured the country with Harry Miner's "Zitka" Company, J. Z. Little's "World," Edwin Arden's "Eagle's Nest" and Barred Out," etc. Mr. Comerford finally came to Chicago, where for a number of years he was manager of Rowland & Clifford's various enterprises.

Mr. Comerford made his first appearance in moving pictures, in the early days, with the Selig Polyscope Company. Then he joined the Essanay forces, and with that organization did his best work. He will be recalled for his fine character portrayals in "Graustark" and "Thirteen Down," with Francis X. Bushman; "The Sting of Victory," with Henry B. Walthall, and the archbishop to Viola Allen's "White Sister." He was the star in "At the Foot of the Hills" and "A Failure at Fifty," and he was the Judge in the "Mystery of Mary Page" serial, etc.

It will be remembered that Mr. Comerford secured the prize as the most popular old man of the screen, in the contest held several years ago, which was conducted for the most popular screen stars.

He is survived by his wife and two daughters, Sister Mary Vera, B.V.M., and Maizie Ysobel. Frances Mercedes, a third daughter, passed away three years ago.

Around Chicago Picture Theatres

Gold Not to Be Outclassed by Picture Theatres in the Loop

THE problems of the outlying theatre in maintaining its individuality and in keeping itself above the drowning waters of competition were touched on recently by Glen E. McDorman, manager of the Gold. This motion picture theatre, with a seating capacity of nearly 1,000, is located on Roosevelt road in West Chicago, forty-five minutes from State street, and is controlled by Samuel Abrahams, proprietor also of the Waverly on South Halsted.

Having obtained protection by contracts with the film exchanges, the Gold receives the first-run privilege on all pictures shown in its district, and endeavors to procure them as soon after their exhibition in the "loop" as possible. The type of photoplay which they aim to display can be judged from the two features which were shown during the first and second half of the week of February 23. These were, respectively, "The Sagebrusher," a Benjamin Hampton production released through W. K. Hodkinson, and "Flame of the Desert," produced by Goldwyn and starring Geraldine Farrar. Both of these are highly dramatic features selected with special regard for the preferences of Gold patrons.

For the last mentioned a special lobby display was arranged. The box office was draped in red and gold to suggest the "flame" while rows of palms and stretches of sand conveyed the idea of the desert. For two days previous an advertising scheme was effected with an adjacent music shop whereby a Victrola was procured and used on the Gold stage to play one of Farrar's records for inciting interest in the operatic-cinema star.

Patrons Is Best Press Agent.

Manager McDorman believes thoroughly in the "better pictures, better business" foundation for success.

"Publicity is great," he admitted, "but our patrons make the best press agents. If a picture is all that it should be, the first-nighters are going to tell the world about it."

A large percentage of Gold patrons consist of children, in fact there were so many of these juvenile fans that it was necessary to start the daily matinee plan to take care of them. This leaves the evening presentation almost exclusively for adults, although children are not barred. On one or two occasions, Mr. McDorman has co-operated with the schools in soliciting patrons. Thus on Lincoln's Birthday he distributed hundreds of souvenir cards with a picture and short biography of "Honest Abe" on the face of the card and a reproduction of Mabel Normand in "Pinto" as showing at the Gold on the back of it. The experiment proved profitable.

An up-to-date lighting device in the projection room is a further means of placing this theatre on a par with the more metropolitan ones. This arrangement provides for direct electrical currents instead of the customary alternating currents and in this way produces a brilliant white light on the screen, which is far superior to the dim, yellow light noticeable in most of the smaller houses. This necessitated an investment of some $2,000, but is bringing paying results.

How's This for an Ad—"'Knockout' Boots Are Best for Rough Stuff."

"Community Policy May Not Always Be Best," Corrigan

CATER to your neighborhood if it has good taste, otherwise don't," advises Manager Thomas J. Corrigan of the Marshall Square Theatre, one of the six owned by the Marshfield Amusement Company. "The community policy may not always be the best," he continued, "because it may not meet with the approval of your visitors from other sections of the city, and from other cities. If your nearest patrons prefer Western thrillers to society drama, and you plan your bookings accordingly, you may please that particular group but you have reckoned without your host from elsewhere."

Mr. Corrigan is especially fitted to voice his opinion on this subject because of the location of the Marshall Square, which is on Marshall Boulevard, one of the popular auto thoroughfares in Chicago. Much of the patronage consists of motorists and tourists who, attracted by the good-looking exterior of this theatre and still more by the standard of films indicated by the outside posters, are frequently tempted to stop and linger. And they constitute so important a part of the Marshall Square's clientele that Mr. Corrigan cannot afford to overlook them.

"Specials are our specialty," he said. "We make every effort to run as many 'supers' as possible." and a glimpse into his booking dates confirms this. During the week of February 23 two big productions were shown, including Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way," a Metro feature, and "Dangerous Hours," a Paramount, supervised by Thomas Ince. Near in the future others of equal or superior merit such as "Mary's Ankle" and "The Copperhead," both Paramount, will be exhibited. Of these pending attractions the spectator is never left in ignorance, for there are several tantalizing "trailers" shown at each presentation.

The Marshall Square with a seating capacity of 1,620 is the largest motion picture theatre on the Southwest side. It is comfortable, well ventilated, has a spacious lobby and an excellent arrangement of seats. Appropriate organ selections provided the accompaniment for the pictures during the daytime, and an eight-piece orchestra at night. This theatre belongs to the Marshfield Amusement Company, which not only controls several houses but owns all of them. Unlike other such corporations each Marshfield house is advertised singly in an effort to boost the theatre essentially rather than the company. The erection of four more houses, each to have a seating capacity of at least 3,000, is now being planned by the owners.

Robertson-Cole Gets Albert Capellani's "Fortune Teller;" Is Based on Wood's Play

ROBERTSON-COLE sprang another surprise in securing Albert Capellani's "The Fortune Teller" as a super-special release, in which Marjorie Rambeau is starred. The releasing of "The Fortune Teller" is a forerunner to the calibre of productions which are to be offered exhibitors by Robertson-Cole. Following closely upon the announcement that this Capellani feature had been secured comes the statement that the French director will produce a series of eight master productions for Robertson-Cole within the next two years.

Screen Version Is Elaborate.

The drawing power of "The Fortune Teller" can best be estimated in bringing to light the fact that "Out of the Fog" and "An Eye for an Eye," starring Nazimova, were two pictures which were in big demand.

"'The Fortune Teller' is a story which grips from the opening scenes until the final fade-out," said Mr. Capellani after completing the cutting of that production. "The plot comes from the celebrated A. A. Woods production which had a continued success on Broadway and at the leading theatres in the country.

"The spoken drama was indeed a great drawing power, but the time necessary to convey the beautiful thought of the story was too great for the legitimate stage. Realizing this, I was quick to take the story at a high figure and worked it to the limit to bring human interest and heart drama to the front via the film.

"Every man, woman and child who has seen 'The Fortune Teller' on the stage will demand to see the improvement made upon the story by the screen version. The elaborateness of the motherly character played by Miss Rambeau is shown to perfection in the silent drama.

Production Not Scheduled.

"I was so impressed with this picture that I did not allow any one to edit the film or to touch it after I had perfected arrangements with Robertson-Cole to release 'The Fortune Teller.' In this manner I can take the public into my confidence and without fear of contradiction foretell that this screen version of a big play, with a well-known star, will add another page to successful motion pictures."

Release Will Be Deferred.

Robertson-Cole will be in no hurry to release "The Fortune Teller." So that the routine work of the company might go on as usual and to prepare the way for another series of startling announcements, the publicity, exploitation and advertising of "The Fortune Teller" will be carried out by a special corps of experts.

The lobby and paper display will be the most elaborate ever printed by Robertson-Cole. The advertising will be centered upon no one point, but will be nationwide. Nothing will be left undone to release this photodrama in keeping with the announcement that it is the best ever offered to the public by Robertson-Cole.

President Thompson of Special Pictures Names Comedyart Distributing Porsonnel

COMPLETE arrangements for the physical distribution of the "Comedyart" releases of the Special Pictures Corporation have been almost perfected, according to announcement made at Los Angeles this week by Louis W. Thompson, president of the new organization, and Sol Lesser, under whose general supervision the physical distribution is to be carried on.

Among the more prominent exchanges through which "Comedyart" releases will be handled are Ascher brothers, for the territory adjacent to Chicago; Arthur S. Hyman, for Detroit and vicinity, and Ruben & Finklestein for the Minneapolis district.

Other exchange affiliations include the Criterion Film Co., Atlanta; Major Film Company, Boston; Gardiner Syndicate, Buffalo; Masterpiece Film Co., Cincinnati; Masterpiece Film Company, Cleveland; Henry Dolman, Indianapolis; Alexander Film Company, New York; Twentieth Century Film Company, Philadelphia; Supreme Photoplay Company, Pittsburgh; All Star Film Exchange, San Francisco and Los Angeles; M. Rosenberg, Seattle, and Snyder Film Attractions, Washington, D. C.

D. M. Thomas is special eastern representative, with supervision over the New York, Buffalo, Washington, Boston, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh exchanges. Working with him are Theodore Williams, with G. J. Corbett in the Boston territory; George Wright, Buffalo; Dave Silverman, Dave Gross and Julius Schwartz, New York; Harold Rodner, Philadelphia; Harry E. Reiff, Pittsburgh; Dave Mitchell, Washington, D. C.

Irving Unger is in charge of the Toronto territory; Louis J. Arado, St. Louis; Sol Davis, Dallas; and W. F. Coleman, Kansas City.

All exterior locations for B. A. Rolfe's second production to be released through Jans Pictures, entitled "Nothing a Year," have been filmed and work will begin immediately on the interiors at the Peerless Fort Lee studios.

One of the difficulties experienced by Director Rolfe was during the time of his filming the exterior views of the fashionable Fifth Avenue shops. In order to gain the desired effect he secured a police permit to use the new elevated traffic regulators along the avenue in order to perch the camera. Director Rolfe feels that the attention paid to detail will mean a lot to the value of the story.

Among Busy Exchangemen

Billy Watson with Robertson-Cole.

APPOINTMENT of Billy Watson, veteran Minneapolis motion picture house manager, as publicity and exploitation director, is announced by the Robertson-Cole Minneapolis exchange. Mr. Watson has for several years been manager of the New Garden Theatre, Minneapolis. Prior to that he was on the Orpheum stage. Later he managed a vaudeville house.

Quive Batting High.

Ralph Quive, Realart manager in Detroit, has booked first-run in Detroit at the Majestic Theatre, two more Realart star series pictures, "Erstwhile Susan" and "Anne of Green Gables." Tom Ealand, who books the Miles houses, which include the Majestic, will play "Soldiers of Fortune" first-run at that playhouse and then show it for a week at the Orpheum.

Author Visits Big V Exchange.

A recent visitor at the Detroit Vitagraph exchange to see Manager J. M. Duncan was Frederick Van Renssalaer Dey, the famous Nick Carter author. He came here to address a meeting of fathers and sons at the Detroit Board of Commerce and spent a few minutes talking "films" with Manager Duncan. Incidentally, he said that the first Harry Morey picture—the story of which he wrote, was very good.

Cohen Added to Realart's Sales Force.

Maurice Cohen, formerly connected with Universal and the Gardiner Film Syndicate, has been added to the sales force of Harry E. Wilkinson, the Buffalo manager of Realart Pictures Corporation.

A. R. Ninninger, formerly representative in Florida for Vitagraph, has taken the management of the Bonita Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

T. W. Brady, Buffalo manager for National Pictures, Inc., has returned to the office after being confined at his home for two weeks with a serious attack of grippe. Al Botham, booker at the Select office, has also returned following an attack of influenza.

B. C. Edlis, one of the best known film salesmen in the Pittsburgh territory, is now on the road for the Quality Film Corporation.

Ira Aronson, formerly special representative for the United Picture Theatres Corporation is now field representative for the National Picture Theatres, Inc., with headquarters at the Pittsburgh branch.

A. W. Woodward has joined the sales staff of Gardiner Pictures, Buffalo, in charge of Rochester and adjacent territory.

Atlanta's Colony of Exchangemen.

From a list published in Southern Picture News we are able to assemble some of the representatives who serve the trade in the Southeast with headquarters in Atlanta. Among the lot are listed:

Arthur S. Dickerson, Goldwyn; M. C. Coyne, United Artists; U. T. Koch, Consolidated; Jack Simpson, Enterprise; Frank Hudson, Pathe; Walter R. Liebman, Select; Charles E. Kesnich, Metro; C. R. Beacham, First National; Joe L. Marantette, Realart; O. P. Hall, National; Frank P. Bryan, Vitagraph; George R. Allison, Fox; William Sipe, Criterion; R. A. Davis, Robertson-Cole; Mrs. A. H. Sissons, Republic; J. W. Hanlon, United; Adolph Samuels, Southwestern, and Carl B. Rountree, Scenic.

Frank Drew, recent salesman for Fox, formerly with the Hyman Attractions, for ten years manager of the Avenue Theatre, Detroit, and former president of the Detroit Universal Film Co., releasing Universal productions, has been appointed Detroit manager for Special Picture Productions.

W. D. Ward, manager of the Detroit Universal exchange, recently gave a stag party to Detroit exhibitors as a token of his appreciation for the splendid support they gave himself and salesmen to help win second prize in the national $6,000 contest of Universal exchanges. It was strictly stag and everybody had a great time.

Congratulate Jack Simpson.

Everybody is congratulating Jack Simpson, and all his friends in the Atlanta territory are offering him that glad hand because of his recent appointment to the position of Manager of the Atlanta office of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange. Having been associated with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises practically from the start of this corporation, and for the past few years having functioned as the chief executive of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation at its local office in his own home town, Mr. Simpson has acquired a host of friends in the film industry.

Division Manager W. J. Pratt, in announcing the appointment of Mr. Simpson, who will start on his new duties March 1, reports that Former Manager R. S. Bradford, whom Simpson will replace, was transferred from the Atlanta Paramount offices to become chief executive of the Paramount Chicago exchange.

Good Work!

Harry V. Martin, publicity man for the Cincinnati office of Goldwyn, was the recipient of many telegrams last week from the home office and exhibitors for the excellent publicity he gave "Pinto," Mabel Normand's picture, while being exhibited in this territory.

The first of the 1920 Sales Dinners by Pittsburgh Universal sales force was held in the Blue Room of the Hotel Anderson Friday evening, February 20.

Vitagraph Office Visited.

H. Bradley Fish, Far Western Division manager for Vitagraph, spent a few days at the San Francisco office, coming up from Los Angeles. H. H. Hicks, Los Angeles manager for Vitagraph, has also been here visiting old friends. Larry Semon comedies have been booked at the Rialto.

On Screen and Stage.

Alice Brady, Realart Star, was in Buffalo at the Shubert-Teck the week of March 1 in her stage play, "Forever After," and at the Palace the same dates in her screen vehicle, "The Fear Market." During Miss Brady's stay in Buffalo she inspected the local Realart exchange as the guest of Manager Henry E. Wilkinson.

Clayton Sheehan, district manager for the Fox Film corporation, has returned to Buffalo from a trip to the Pacific Coast, during which he visited the principal Fox exchanges en route. Clayton is a brother of "Winnie" Sheehan, general manager of Fox, who is a former Buffalo newspaper man.

It's in the Atmosphere.

Following the announcement last week of an addition to the Al Sherry family, the World correspondent must needs report another gain in Buffalo's population in the arrival of "the prettiest baby in the world," at the home of C. A. Taylor, local Pathe manager. Congratulations "Buck."

F. C. Bonistall, Pittsburgh manager of the National Pictures, has his head bandaged as a result of a fall which he sustained on the icy street. The genial "Bonny" was knocked unconscious by the fall and three stitches were required to close the wound made by it.

William Humphries, late Philadelphia manager of Triangle, has resigned from the United Picture Theatres Corporation in company with Joseph Green, representative. Mr. Humphries is at present looking over the field for future connections.

The vacancy recently caused by the resignation of George Ames, former manager at the Philadelphia Pathe Exchange, is being temporarily filled by assistant manager Epperson.

Harry Tyson, a pioneer in the film business, has succeeded J. Starkman as salesman with the Fairmount Feature Film Exchange, Philadelphia.

Emanuel Marks, who has been in the film business for eight years and until recently worked in the New York territory, is now in Baltimore for the present to represent the United Picture Theatres of America. Mr. Marks covered the Connecticut territory for W. W. Hodkinson prior to his connection with United.

Joins First National Staff.

M. Edwards, formerly connected with Realart Pictures Corporation and Gardiner Pictures, Inc., has been engaged by P. H. Smith, Buffalo manager, as a First National salesman. Mr. Edwards has many friends among Western New York exhibitors. He will cover the southern tier.

Ralph Myerson is now manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the United Picture Theatre Exchange, located at 414 Penn avenue, which distributes the United, Triangle and Hallmark productions. Mr. Bronstetter, formerly manager of the Triangle, and Mr. Aronson, formerly district manager for the United, resigned their positions recently.

Open Displays from Loew's Euclid Are Models for Smaller Sized Ad Spaces

SOME of the half pages coming in from M. A. Malaney, advertising manager for the Loew theatres in Cleveland, are among the prettiest we have reproduced, and they run to a high average of excellence, but we think that this for "On with the Dance" is about the best of the lot, thus far. For one thing it offers more cut attractor and gets the cut in artistically. Cut attractors are less essential in so large a space as in smaller displays where these must reach out and get attention, but they serve their purpose when they help to sell the story, as they cuts undoubtedly do. And you will find that this space will look just as well, save for the bottom lines, from one column up to the width of the page. That is the real test of a good large space. It is no more than an enlargement of a smaller advertisement as a rule. The only exception is where the extra space is taken to give room for a lengthy statement, and then it is not really an advertisement.

Personal Contact With Your Printer Gets Results in the Small Offices

WALTER C. BENSON, of the Haines Theatre, Waterville, Maine, writes: "I am having a little better luck with my printer of late. I adopted your suggestion and am spending a little time in the printing shop myself." That is about the only way to do where the printer does not know. Get on friendly terms with the man who actually sets your stuff, then get him interested in results and help him to find out how to get those results. You do not have to actually be able to stick type to know what you want. Tell him what you are after and if he is any sort of a printer he will, in time, catch your ideas and give you results. Mr. Benson is now using a ready print colored cover with the picture on the back so the house can get the display. This is something new and it is by no means a bad idea, though it eats up an entire page, which is a consideration in a four-page program.

Put This Away Until Next Christmas Then Use It for Your Midnight Mat

HANDLING the special crowd at midnight matinees is sometimes something of a problem. An excellent scheme worked by the Grand, Columbus, Ga., is to be recommended. Make a note of the idea for next New Year's Eve if you do not try it before then, but there is no reason why you cannot work this on some big special. The regular attraction was Marguerite Clark in "A Girl Named Mary," while "Male and Female" was to open New Year's Day. Regular tickets were sold for the last regular performance as well as a special double ticket entitling the holder to remain for the special screening of the big production. After the regular show was done these special tickets were taken up and tickets were sold those waiting in the lobby to fill the house to capacity. A large number of persons took in the double-header not only because it saved them a wait in the lobby, but because it gave them first choice of seats for the special, so that the scheme worked two ways.

Large Spaces Should Merely Be Smaller; Advertisements Properly Magnified

ALTHOUGH we have shown many capital advertising examples from the Kings, Pershing and allied houses in St. Louis, this half page from the Kings does not come into this class. Apparently it was felt that a half page called for much more copy than the usual smaller spaces, and the result is a display so stuffed with type that you despair of reading it all. The eye does not feel equal to the task. This is a common error among advertisers who do not habitually use large spaces. They seem to feel that if it takes a certain number of words to fill a given space it will take twice that many words to stuff the larger area. This is not true, however, for often it is good practice to cut down the text to get over big what you still have to say. This space carries about three times too much for the play itself, and yet, in addition, is made to carry the underline for nine coming attractions. It would have been better had the title run clear across the page, instead of being crowded by the cut in the left-hand corner. Then there should have been white space above and below to throw the cut into prominence. To do this the orchestra picture should have been dropped a little toward the bottom of the column and the nine underlines should have been wiped out entirely. This would have also given more space to the fashion show which was run in conjunction with the picture. We think "The mightiest appeal to womankind ever screened" is excess baggage, and this space might better have been given to the fact that this was the first and exclusive showing in St. Louis, which would have done away with the awkward phrasing "The only first run theatre presenting the premiere showing of the world's greatest super-special productions." "If it's new and good it's here first" would have meant much more to the average reader. But the chief thing to remember is that a half page merely calls for larger, not for more, type, or the chief value of the space is lost.

Manager Uses Form Letter and Enclosures to Interest Patrons in Future Dates

SOMETHING a little different from the usual form letter was recently put out by Fred McCoy, of the Liberty, Fort Scott, Kansas. He does not hold it to one attraction or a week, but tells of the coming events for a month ahead, enclosing heralds and other copy. His last letter, for example, enclosed a folder for a road show, the poem "Lasca" for that attraction and a herald for "In Old Kentucky." He told in detail of five attractions coming, and talked a little about the house policy. It is overlong for the average letter, yet he makes it interesting by adopting an easy, chatty style that disarms resentment.

Jazz Copy Breaks the House Records for H. A. Albright at the American

SENDING in a four fifteens for the American, Butte, H. A. Albright writes that the attraction broke the house records back to Christmas, 1917, the previous high water mark. We think it was the copy rather than the design which sold, though Mr. Albright had drawn a very neat frame design of scythes and pitchforks surmounted by a talf tone of "Fatty" Arbuckle to advertise him in "The Hayseed." He has had Arbuckle comedies before, and he has run them with features as good as "The Miracle of Love," so it must have been the presentation. The copy reads:

> Speed, action, avoirdupois and hayseed go to make this rural outburst a genuine "slicker"—Al St. John, Buster Keaton, Mollie Malone and Luke (the well-known German "K-9") assist Fatty in parting you from chuckles that will quake your frame!
>
> "THE MIRACLE OF LOVE"
>
> The eternal triangle de lux—Cosmo Hamilton's throbbing romance that appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine—an all-star Paramount-Artcraft cast.
>
> PEARL WHITE
> —in—
> "THE BLACK SECRET"
>
> Robert W. Chambers' story, "In Secret," made into a serial—gripping—tense—but reasonable. Shown every Saturday and Sunday at the Matinee only; all day Mondays and Tuesdays. Get in while it's still young!

There does not seem to be a lot to the copy, but if you read it over a couple of times you will begin to like it. It sounds as though it had been written by a man who was dead certain that he had just about the best show he could very well put together. He is by no means modest in his phrasing, but at the same sime it avoids extremes and he does carry conviction. It makes you feel that Mr. Albright means what he says. Starting as an artist, Mr. Albright has developed into a very good copy writer, which makes the ideal combination. Few artists can write good copy and fewer copy writers can illustrate.

White Spaces Show to Best Advantage and Get Selling Argument to Patron

THEY all fall sooner or later, according to Rube Goldberg, and Stanley Chambers, of the Palace, Wichita, is the latest to step on a cake of ice. We've been applauding Mr. Chambers as one man who used white spaces intelligently, and then he comes along with the Arbuckle-Washburn display to the right of the first cut. It is not bad to look at, but the lines obscure the titles. Just as he was slipping, Mr. Chambers maneged to gasp out that he wanted mortises cut for the selling talk, so he saved that much, but it is not what we would call a good display for Mr. Chambers, though it is not distinctly bad. The display on the left is better. It combines black with type talk and the hand lettering is not distinctly bad save that "Victory" in which the artist seems to have done his worst. The letters look worm-eaten and are twice as difficult to read as they would be in a straight outline. It may not matter much, but when you are paying space rates for display, the clearer your appeal the better. The smaller space in between is only two nine and halfs against twelve and a halfs, but it stands out with double the display because you can read every line and are not too busy looking at pictures to want to read. If the pictures will sell better than talk, then pictures are all right, but few pictures sell as well as good, strong talk. If you give a quick look to the next pair of examples it wouldseem that the open cut is a three against a two column space, but they are both doubles; the one on the right merely looks larger because it is not so crowded. At that we like the silhouette display because it is unusual. A straight cut similarly handled would not be good, but the black is odd and will attract attention, especially as the text announces the appearance of a local man in his first picture. This same drawing was made in several sizes for different days and probably got over. The right hand display is a Saturday advertisement with a last times' announcement up in the corner and a larger space for the coming favorite. Mr. Chambers also sends in a very pretty post card for the house showing two views and intended for free distribution. Not alone is the idea good, but it is a very pretty piece of color work.

New York Lobby Made Attractive with Its Painted Posters Neatly Displayed

ATTRACTIVE lobbies are seldom plastered with one sheets and plenty of them. The best results are generally gained without recourse to too much paper unless the house is a transient one dependent wholly upon the chance of getting the passer-by. This picture of the lobby of the Strand, New York, shows an exceptionally pretty display without the use of any lithographs, these being replaced by original drawings in colors. For the week in question Harold Lloyd got the inside displays and Madge Kennedy the street side of the column.

If Your Printer Grouches; Book "Pollyanna"

Grouchy Printer Takes All Joy Out of Living

LATELY we showed some samples from H. L. Boek, of the Grand, Newark, Ohio, and told how he was out of luck with one of the two papers in his town. He sends in another example of the general cussedness of some printers. His copy for "Upstairs and Down" called for a stair effect. It was better handled than many big town displays, because Mr. Boek took fives and got a width for an ascending and descending stairway that looked like something. One man told him that they would have to make an extra charge for the composition. The other foreman said he would set it up himself to make certain it would be right—and it was.

Two Results from the Same Copy. Compare Them.

In a sense the first printer was justified in making an additional charge, for the stuff is not easy to set and involves a loss of time, but Mr. Boek is a liberal advertiser and a live man would have figured that he would get back his lost time on some simpler copy and would have put the job through without a time charge. He is losing right along, for that matter, for Mr. Boek always gives a larger space to the other paper because it is more willing to work with him to get a good effect.

There is a mighty short-sighted printer out in Newark and he needs to get clearer vision. The grouch also spoiled a half page for Fairbanks by poor selection of type. He had all the chance in the world to make a fine display, but he was not "there" and he set it all up on the machine and made a botch of it. Mr. Boek surely has his troubles.

—P. T. A.—

Hand Lettering Is Bad But When It's Jazzed—

EVEN at its best hand lettering is bad, but when an artist goes crazy and puts line or spots of blotches into the stuff, his crimes exceeds the limit of human endurance. The Colonial, Toledo, sends in a five twelves in which the design overshadows the lettering, and then, to make matters worse, the artist "jazzes up" the star and title by marking white lines down through the letters. Probaby he imagines that this helps, but he entirely overlooks the fact that the chief value of the space is to sell tickets and not supply him with proof of his crimes. This broken letter was fashionable about a year ago and ran from coast to coast, but it never has been and never will be excusable in advertising. It may be all right in some classes of work, but in an advertisement, the main point is to get over house, star and title in the plainest, most legible letters so that even the man who is not looking at the space cannot fail to get unconsciously as he runs through his paper. Hand lettering will not do this as well as will type and mussing up the hand lettering merely aggravates the defect. Block type would have made something out of this space, but as it stands, it is not a pretty display no matter what the artist may think.

Took a Full Page Month in Advance of Feature

FULL-page displays are getting more common all the time, but the Gem, Philip, S. D., used a full page for "Broken Blossoms" a month in advance of showing. We think the management must also run the paper, for in addition to the full page, the front carries a four twelves for Douglas Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American," a two sixes for Miss Gish in "Broken Blossoms," and a small current display as well as a number of readers in the local news. The entire layout must be close to a page and a half. White space is a virtue, but we think that this is almost too bare a space.

A pair of twelve point banks, one above the house signature and the other below the title would not only have helped to sell the play, but would have bettered the appearance of the page. It would also have been a good plan to have added the title below the "D. W. Griffith's" line, instead of trusting to the cuts. Even white space may be carried to excess. It is not white space itself which counts, but white space used to throw up the message, and here there is no message.

This Grauman Is Reverse But There Is a Reason

USUALLY Grauman does not use reverse, but trusts to a cut frame and all type talk, but in the lower of these two displays there is a good reason for the use of reverse. It will be noted that the black gives a white outline of the figure of Lincoln with the legend, "Who was this man?" running into a thirty-three word paragraph which sells the story. The outline perfectly suggests Lincoln, yet spares us the result of a poor drawing of a difficult subject.

The title does not come up as well as it might in the original for the black is a bad surface, but the selling is done with the two banks, one set in type within the figure of Lincoln and the other above the figure of Milt. Both are exceptionally well done. The Rialto space is more nearly typical of the usual Grauman display with the cut nicely framing the type display. If you will make a collection of these Grauman displays as they are reproduced here you will presently have a valuable study in the combination advertisement. Start your collection now. Some day you may need it.

Telling Too Much in a Full Page Display

TELLING too much is a common fault in full page displays. As a rule a full page is nothing more than a threes set large so it will attract more attention and to try to get a page or even a half, page of text into the space just because it is paid for is largely to defeat the end aimed at. This full page from the Liberty, Fort Scott, Kansas, is a good example of what not to do, plus poor composition. To take a full page and get only a six-line letter for the main title is bad typography. The title is short. It should have been thrown across the page.

A Full Page Display Far Too full of Type.

This entire layout suggests that having purchased the space, the manager did not know what to do with it all. It is filled with type, but it doesn't say much. Some of the argument is good, but it is spread so that nothing takes hold and makes you want to see the play. If you have the patience to read all the way through you will get the idea that "Paid in Advance" should be pretty fair, but even if you read the entire argument you do not put the paper down feeling that nothing short of death can keep you away from the theatre that particular night. It is space largely wasted save for the moral effect which comes from the use of a large space, no matter how it is employed.

Write a Check to Provide Funds for Deposit Slips

FAKE checks have been used in many forms, but this check from the Happy Hour Theatre, Two Harbors, Mich., is something new. It is signed by "Turnme Over" and when your turn it over you find on the back a printed endorsement which reads: "This check is endorsed by the Happy Hour Theatre. Bert Lytell will supply a thousand rollicking laughs in his presentation 'Easy to Make Money'." The date and prices follow. Fictitious checks are always good advertising because people will keep them and show to others and a single check may pass through many hands where a throwaway will be dropped when read, if it is not dropped before being read. They work best as mail enclosures. These are apparently real bank checks and are filled in with pen and ink, instead of being printed.

Mr. Smith's Trade Mark Cut Cuts Down His Space Bills

NOBODY knows better than S. Barrett McCormick the value of a good trade mark cut, and for Mr. Smith's theatre, a little brother or sister to the Circle, he uses the trade mark which is apparently a reproduction of the house sign. This runs in every display and gives an eighty line, double column space the value of a quarter page. You can't overlook Mr. Smith no matter what else runs on the page. Outside of the cut, "Mr. Smith" works as he pleases. This display for "Desert Gold" is neatly framed in the cut, yet the cut, at no point, intrudes on the type space, for Mr. McCormick wants his advertising read, and to have it read he puts it in type, save for the title, which is hand lettered and in this case not particularly well done. We like better a display for Louise Glaum in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter." Although this looks smaller than the other in the reproduction, it is three columns by 100 lines, the only extra large display sent in. The contrast between the face of the star and the wolf's head in silhouette is unusually good. It is not often that the story permits such a contrasty attractor, but it does happen now and hen, and his artist has been quick to perceive his opportunity. It is a little late to help the early run houses, but it is a fine stunt for those who have not yet played the picture.

The Best Way to Drive a Balky Horse Is to Back

APPARENTLY capitalizing a well-known tendency on the part of the average man to do what he is told not to, the Penn Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, offers some unusual copy for "Broken Blossoms." The first paragraph is rather involved and does not read smoothly. It announces that the management wishes to warn the public that the picture deals with the seamy side of life. It reads on:

This picture, "Broken Blossoms," has not one ray of sunny life in it—that you may expect. Rather you must expect a gruesome spectacle as pertaining to the traffic and the lowness of its habitat. The picture was shown in New York at three dollar prices and ran several weeks to tremendous business. No person but D. W. Griffith could detail and direct such a theme without public criticisms to the detriment of its success as a picture of moral uplift. The management makes the future announcement that the public is forewarned of its gruesomeness and what they must expect—again this announcement gives you an idea if you should see it or not.

We have had many requests to show this picture and feel it our duty to do so only for two days next week. Monday and Tuesday. Ordinarily, this picture should be shown a solid week, but we are led to believe that the picture will not be appreciated and again thousands will fully appreciate it because of the advice and moral teachings for the young and innocent that are enticed into such societies and environments.

THINK IF YOU OUGHT TO SEE IT OR NOT.

This is the chief item of a six fulls, nicely displayed. It is set three columns wide in a heavy twelve point, with a very legible letter. It is topped by the title and Griffith's name in five line letters, with a picture of the producer at the left and a home-made ornament composed of two point rule, twelve point linear border and cap O's. Below, the house signature and admission prices run at the left, and there is a cut to the right of that. It makes an open, legible display hat is out of the ordinary and attractive in appearance. There may be some question as to the value of this angle, but we do not believe that any business will be lost, and it is more probable that business was created by this attitude.

McCormick Introduces Old Idea in New Form

S. Barret McCormick Tries New Style Ads to Get Over "The River's End" to a Clean-up

TESTING the value of his advertising for the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, S. Barret McCormick made his work for "The River's End" somewhat of a test of the position the theatre held in the esteem of the theatregoers. In each of his advance spaces for this First National attraction, he made use of some phrase to fortell an unusually large business, and he had the satisfaction of being able to say "I told you so" in a less irritating form in his during-the-week announcements. In other words, in addition to a carefully planned interest campaign, he invited the reader to play his hunch.

His opening gun announced "The hardest thing to find in town next week will be an empty seat at the Circle." This was not merely a brag. It was a virtual declaration that the story would be unusual. Week after week his elaborate campaigns have filled the house, but he put this in the nature of a test. He wanted to see if his word was believed, and the box office statements give the answer.

A Semi-Teaser Campaign.

Starting in this idea, he did not advertise the play as a whole. He did not at once dwell upon the play and its production. Instead he took up the characters and introduced them singly, commencing with the producer in a three fives. There is no superlative praise apart from that "Most intense dramatic picture of 1920." He does not pile description on description. He makes a statement and adds: "Cut this out and paste it in your hat, and remember that the early bird gets the seat." The time table follows. It is up to the reader to believe Mr. McCormick or not, as he may elect.

The Circle

SHRINE OF THE SILENT ART

One of McCormick's Test Ads.

This was the introduction to a series of personal displays much along the idea of the familiar nursery rhyme of the House that Jack Built. Each display was sized to carry its cut, and each space introduced but one of the characters of the play, first Keith, the outlaw, then McDowell, the chief of the Mounted, whose scrutiny the outlaw-impostor feared, then the girl who loved McDowell, the Chinaman who loved the girl, and so on. Each advertisement led naturally to the next and so held the interest over. Each, moreover, carried a snapper line such as

Get in early—that's the important thing.

Begin planning now the day you will go and see the performance.

Next week will break all of the Circle's attendance records.

In all of the displays there was nothing definite about the play other than it was taken from the Curwood novel. The only play angle read "Marshall Neilan's production of James Oliver Curwood's greatest tale of 'God's Country'." They all read alike and the aim was to play interest in the characters plus the assurance of the management. Mr. McCormick wanted to see if the public would take his word for it. He was trying to sell the reputation of the house. He wanted to see just how the Circle stood in the estimation of its patrons.

Two of the Advance Personality Advertisements.

The Friday advertisement, the last of the series, introduced Mary, the girl who loved Keith yet supposed him to be her brother. This was the largest space of the series, 125 lines across three columns. This opening read "This is Mary, who Loved Keith, the Outlaw—Yet She Thought Him Her Brother and He Was Helpless to Tell Her What Was in His Heart."

A New Teaser Form.

Even here there was no suggestion of the story; nothing to motivate the explanation. In a sense the advertisements were teasers and intended to arouse curiosity to the point of wishing to see the play. All of the introductory paragraphs wound up with "You'll meet him at 'The River's End'," running into the "Marshall Neilan's production" line quoted above.

This is not a wholly new style of interest getter, but it is a radical departure from Mr. McCormick's usual style and where a week of advance work can be done for a play with something more than a single star part there is nothing better.

If Mr. McCormick had done nothing more than work this idea to its full and logical conclusion he would have been doing much, but he put in the prophetic angle as well and made two approaches.

Broke on Saturday.

In Indianapolis, as in many towns, the big break comes on Saturday instead of waiting for Sunday to announce the new shows. The afternoon papers on Saturday carry practically the same advertising as the Sunday space. The Saturday space was about eighteen inches across four columns, with the Sunday space a trifle smaller. The cut shows the Saturday on the left and the colored Sunday display on the right. This last does not come up as well as it might because of the greens and reds. The Saturday space plays up three scenes from the play and the Sunday gives four situations.

The Sunday business was tremendous even for the Circle. Mr. McCormick had his answer, and here the second angle of his scheme came to the top. He was now in a position to use the "I told you so" with the business to back him up. This worked not only for the current attraction, but it will be of service for weeks, until the stunt is forgotten. The Monday advertisement started off "Did you meet them?" reciting the characters and the billing and running into "Or were you one of the several thousand who could not get in? Try again today." Below was the schedule of performance.

An Idea for Others.

The entire campaign is unusually interesting, even for McCormick, but the advance work is the best, for it gives a suggestion which will work for many other plays and which will arouse interest as few other schemes can. This is partly due to the fact that but a single approach is made each day, the displays being so worded that the interest becomes cumulative. By the time the story of the play is touched upon you have become so familiar with the characters that you feel that you already know them and, therefore, are interested in what happens to them.

To break a record at the Circle, where so many records have been made, is no longer an easy task, but this campaign succeeded in giving a new standard for "The River's End," and gave the house something which will last long after the film has passed.

Used 500 Throwaways for Population of Only 900

USING 500 throwaways for a town of only 900 population seems to be a record for intensive advertising. J. G. O. Klink, of the Opera House, Primghar, Ia., held Fairbanks for two days in "When the Clouds Roll By" and he made up a throwaway 15 by 22 inches, chiefly from press book cuts and phrases. He had 500 of these printed up and put into every house in town. The others were just passed around, and as a result he played to 80 per cent. of the population in the two days. He did it in two nights and a matinee with prices 25 and 10 cents for the matinee and 40 and 20 for the evenings. That may not sound like doing much to the man who has a thousand seat house, but in a town that size it means a lot. It means, for one thing, that the manager is waking up and presently he will be going into the country for more business. Mr. Klink laid out a very neat bill with the material at hand and made a better disposition of the cuts than some of the larger managers have done. More power to him

Pass Along Your "Selling Schemes" to Help Others

Utilize Plan Book Covers for Special Designs for House Advertising Spaces

UTILIZING plan book drawings and the special designs done for the trade press is becoming increasingly common and often better results are had by this means than could be gotten from the ready made cuts designed to meet a more general demand. Many managers want something out of the ordinary run and are willing to pay for special art work where they can get away from the beaten track. The cut with this story shows how two managers used the plan book for "The Fear Market" to get art work at a minimum of cost.

The central cut shows the title page of the plan book. This was designed by Realart to attract attention to the offering, and was not included in the cut and mat service because it was believed that not many would desire to work reverse cut in newspaper spaces.

Painted Out in Part.

The design on the left is 175 lines across four columns. The house is the Colonial, but the town is not stated. Here only the lower half of the panel was painted out and relettered. The name of the director; balancing that of the author, was painted out as was the Realart signature below. In the latter space the house lettered eight lines of description picked up from the press book. The trade mark below was also painted over to read: "Liberty Quintette. Music That Charms. American Harmonists." The band was also broken to let in the house title and "All Week, Starting Sunday," and the comedy was also titled in.

At comparatively small cost for art work the house had an effective design and the space was sufficiently large to permit the white lettering to be read with comparative ease, though chief reliance was placed on the strong title and the portrait of the star.

What Baltimore Did.

The smaller space on the right is a three nines picked up from the Sunday edition of the Baltimore Sun. This space is rather too small for good reverse work, but it is interesting to note the variety in treatment.

Here the artist merely blacked out the entire panel, letting in the house signature at the top and giving star and title further down the space. Some selling talk is added in addition to the same paragraph from the press book used in the larger space. The rest of the design was not touched other than to paint out the trade mark and the "Campaign Book" above Miss Brady's head. The signature comes up better than in the other display, even though it is a third smaller, but in both instances we think that it would have shown up better in black against the white ground, either in type or lettering.

Plenty of Chances.

It frequently happens that some design in the press book or in the trade press will end itself better to art displays than the prepared cuts, which must be of a nature to appeal to the majority of the exhibitors rather than to the few, and houses employing staff artists no longer complain because the press book cuts are not what they want. They simplly lift out whatever they want from plan book or advertising and with a clever letter painter can get a better result because they have at their command the services of artists whose salaries would be prohibitive if charged to a single house.

It is not even necessary to employ an artist. In this cut, for instance, it would have been possible to have reproduced the design, eliminating the undesired portions, and by mortising the panel to let in type against a white ground an even more readable advertisement would have resulted. A little brains and a little brush work will go far.

Rothstein Campaign Book Unites Art and Utility

STRIKING a happy medium between the handsomely printed campaign book which appeals to the exhibitor but does not help him sell his patrons, and the more useful if less ornamental books which give selling plans in the plainest forms, Nat G. Rothstein has prepared for Clara Kimball Young's "The Forbidden Woman" a campaign book which is at once an unusually handsome piece of printing and a helpful guide to selling. The cover is in black, green and orange, intelligently handled, with buff tint blocks on some of the reading pages, while much of the art and photographic material compares favorably with Mr. Rothstein's well-remembered book on Dorothy Phillips issued some years ago.

But where the Phillips book was merely to sell to the exhibitor, this booklet is a complete plan book with about everything a manager can need. There is a wealth of scene and ad cuts as well as all-type displays in various proportions which will give the local printer a guide to style, as well as stunts and schemes, letters, teasers and about all that even the most energetic manager can need.

One notable point is the offering of the art work in cut form. Too many of these "artistic" books hold all of their best drawings to the descriptive pages. Mr. Rothstein repeats them in practical cut form for exhibitor use. In this it is an advance upon the old idea worthy of imitation.

Doob Gets New Kink for a Missing Word Contest

OSCAR A. DOOB, publicity man for the Famous Players-Lasky Cincinnati exchange, got out a new idea in the old missing word contest. He wanted something to help get over "Male and Female" in Charleston, W. Va., and evolved a hook-up page with some words represented by blanks. Ticket prizes were given to those who best filled in the blanks. Some of the words were so easy that they made the other blanks all the more aggravating, but we would like to know if it was Mr. Doob or John Lee who called it a "Gloria-us" picture. Men have been shot for less than that. Anyhow it was a good page with the stores nicely hooked in even to goods for "The Little Female and Male."

The picture was booked in for a whole week in Charleston, which is about equivalent to a six weeks' run on Broadway, and they had to work to keep interest up. The house was able to use the stuff from the Strand, Cincinnati; the house names being the same, and got a lot of good cut copy which might have been specially drawn. That helped a lot and was a distinct service from the Exchange.

Mr. Doob also worked the "A Day with Gloria Swanson," which he first ran in a Cincinnati paper. This was not a special series, but was cleverly faked from stock stills. He also brought down from Cincinnati a set of window cards, hand painted in blue and gold, which T. L. Kearse, the owner of a string of theatres including the Strand, got into some of the best windows in town; windows which would have been barred to lithographs or even ordinary window cards.

With paper ranging from 24-sheets to ones plastered all over town business held up for the entire week—and a week is a long long time in some places.

Try a Circus Front for "Her Elephant Man"

Projected Popularity Test a Failure Because Patrons Saw Both Attractions

ATTEMPTING to discover whether patrons prefer the strong drama to the lighter comedy-drama led the Pantheon and Valentine theatres, Toledo, to enter an amiable contest. The Pantheon had "The Thunderbolt," with its rather sombre theme, and the Valentine selected, "A Virtuous Vamp" as a good type of the more sprightly entertainment.

The natural conclusion that the competition would prove nothing whatever by virtue of the fact that no matter how beautiful an oparatic gem might be, it would not appeal to jazz music lovers, and no matter how syncopated ragtime might be it would not influence those with a taste for classical music was offset by an agreement that box office receipts from the third side of the triangle that made the test practicable.

Was to Be a Test.

Before the "battle" started it was silently agreed that, everything equal, the contest would be a good insight to just what sort of motion picture plays the Toledo photoplay public preferred. Was it drama or lively comedy? The occasion to bring out a test had been found for Katherine MacDonald, the American beauty, was appearing in her initial production for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, "The Thunderbolt," at the Pantheon Theatre.

It was logic that justified the Pantheon management in believing that if anyone could make the drama appeal to Toledo drama advocates it was Katherine MacDonald. Her national popularity as the most beautiful woman on the screen was well established locally. And "The Thunderbolt" was possessed of just such elements as might lend themselves to splendid dramatic exploitation. The beauty of the star was emphasized by special type matter through which an American Beauty rose was entwined, and the story was billed as "The Screen Sensation of the Year." All of which clearly demonstrates that the Pantheon was nobly upholding its side of the argument against any line of jazz exploitation the Valentine might advance.

Copied the Titles.

The art matter depicted the beautiful star attempting to sympathize with Thomas Meighan, whose face wore a dark expression. Excerpts from the word matter show such statements as:

"Hating his beautiful wife long before he had seen her—marrying her to make sure she would be the last of her family—denying to her the right of motherhood—this unnatural husband's unique revenge was frustrated by the Providence that watches over mothers."

A most significant bit of word matter in the Pantheon's ad was the announcement that:

"Owing to the immense crowds the management has concluded to hold over for another week, Katherine MacDonald, in 'The Thunderbolt,' to give the people of Toledo and vicinity a chance to view one of the finest productions ever shown in this city."

Valentine Needs Jazz.

"The Sweetest Vamp in the World.—Doctors, lawyers, merchants, elevator boys, lingerie drummers and crap shooters, Nellie vamped 'em all. She even set four inmates of the Old Men's Home to writing love letters," and

"The story of a miss with principles as pure as the ten commandments, with a pair of eyes that made Cleopatra look like a consumptive selling-plater and with a list of vamped victims stretching from Frisco to Main street, New York.

A close watch on the audience drawn by the two pictures revealed a fact of unusual interest. Young people, it was found, were favoring the drama and the elderly folk were flocking to the light, breezy Constance Talmadge "vamp" picture.

But when final totals were checked it was found that the majority of people went to see both pictures and all bets were declared off.

Many Wedding Presents Help Out Hook-Up Pages

MAKING an offer of $25 to anyone who would get married on the stage the opening day of "Please Get Married" the basis for a hook-up page, the Liberty Theatre, Zanesville, Ohio, made a clean up.

Enough merchants came in to make it a double truck, and in the centre the house reproduced the window card with the prize offer of $25, the license and the minister to any couple who would be publicly married on the stage at the opening performance. A leading jeweler offered to contribute the ring, a shoe store offered the bride a pair of pumps and a department store added a georgette blouse, while a meat market kicked in with five dollars' worth of steaks and chops and a furnishing house offered a hat to the groom. In this part of the country it would be necessary to have a real estate concern offer to rent the happy couple a flat before anyone would dare get married, but perhaps housing conditions are better in Zanesville.

It is not recorded that anyone took up the offer. It probably was not expected that anyone would, but it certainly made advertising in plenty.

Cabaret Hook-up Another Exploitation Possibility

JOHN D. HOWARD, the San Francisco exploitation man for the Paramount, hit upon a new idea when he hooked up with a cabaret to advertise "Huckleberry Finn" by putting on a Huck Finn dance with the cabaret troupe of ten girls at the Portola-Odeon restaurant, one of the best patronized of the San Francisco eating places. The picture was playing at the Imperial and a statement to this effect was made prior to each performance of the dance, which took its name from the fact that the girls were dressed in overalls and danced in bare feet, more or less in imitation of the film here. There are many other plays which will lend themselves to this form of exploitation perhaps even better, and Mr. Howard has opened up a new field of endeavor.

Same Old Circus Front; Same Old Ticket Lines

ALTHOUGH the circus front dates back several years, it still works as strongly as ever. It ranges all the way from a cheap muslin false front with entrances cut to a real canvas with side show posters, sawdust and pink lemonade. The cut shows how Fred N. Schaefer, of the Corona, a New York neighborhood house, worked the stunt for Shirley Mason in "Her Elephant Man." The ushers were dressed as clowns and the ringmaster and other factors of a "real" circus were impersonated by the ticket seller, the doorman and other house attaches. The stunt is inexpensive, but it pays large returns.

Oscar Dorb Offers a Stunt Anyone Can Use

Charles Scribner's Sons to Assist Paramount on "Treasure Island" Drive

GENERALLY book drives have been worked by means of cheaper editions put out especially for use in connection with the photoplay version of the novel, but it is announced that the Famous Players-Lasky presentation of "Treasure Island" will have behind it the cooperation of the house of Charles Scribner's Sons in getting over the film.

"Treasure Island," almost from its first publication, has been a wonderful seller and wholly without advertising could still command a large sale, but the Scribner's, who publish the American edition, have spent huge sums in pushing its editions; about $50,000 having been spent on advertising for this single book in 1919.

They realize the tremendous advertising possibilities to be derived from the film presentation and have arranged to give all possible assistance to the picture play not only directly, but through efforts to hook up the stores handling the Scribner publications throughout the country, of which there are more than 2,000.

Booksellers Will Help.

Arrangements have been perfected whereby exhibitors showing the film will have all possible help from the publishers and their selling representatives, and the Scribner publicity department is sending out material to the literary editors to supplant the Paramount publicity handled through the photoplay departments.

The value of this is clear to the active exhibitor. There are a vast number of persons who are more interested in books than in photoplays. They cannot well be reached through photoplay departments, but they can be interested—and vitally—through their favorite literary magazine or book department which can be reached only through the publishers. Just as the film will create a demand for the book among theatregoers, the book notices will bring to the theatres many who do not know what the modern motion picture is like.

It may seem absurd to argue that there are today any unfamiliar with modern pictures, but it will be found that where the Scribner hook up extends, new business can be made not alone for "Treasure Island," but for pictures in general.

This Balloon Stunt Was Mob Proof, So Got Over

PROFITING by the recent experience of the Moon Theatre, Omaha, which tied passes to gas balloons and had its truck mobbed by small boys, the Colonial, Indianapolis, recently advertised Alice Brady in the Realart feature, "The Fear Market" by making a distribution of tickets via air balloons dropped from an upper story window. The stunt was pulled off during the noon hour and it gave the lunch crowd a half hour of keen enjoyment. The balloons are so light that they will bounce around in the air for some time before landing and then elude the would-be captor at the slightest touch. A couple of dozen balloons will make a ballyhoo worth a hundred times the price of the tickets. And working from an upper window is the safest plan, so go upstairs if you try this stunt.

This Camel Humped Himself to Fan the Desert Flame

CAMELS are not popular birds in these dry days, but the Goldwyn Denver office found a camel in the winter quarters of a circus and gave him a job advertising "The Flame of the Desert" at the American theatre, to help make business for A. G. Talbot. Painted banners were tacked to the regular show blanket and the ship of the desert cruised up and down the main streets and shooed the people into the American to forget all that the camel typifies.

A Camel Cannot Go Through the Eye of a Needle.

But this double humped emblem of prohibition promenaded the streets of Denver for a whole week for "Flame of the Desert" and cleaned up.

Impromptu Stunts Offer Advertising Suggestions

BECAUSE one of the Cincinnati papers wanted some cut copy to go with the announcement that the Paramount-Artcraft exchange was moving to the Paramount Building, Pioneer and Broadway, Cincinnati, Accessory Manager, dug up some ideas which will be just as useful to theatre managers.

The simpler of the two stunts was to show two film cans, one containing seven reels, while the other held but two. They were offered with the statement that big Fatty Arbuckle came to town in the smaller can while tiny Marguerite Clark required the larger box for her conveyance. The next time you have Arbuckle, try showing the cans either in your lobby or in some prominent window. It will attract more attention than you will probably think possible. If you have some reserve reels and are showing in a window, set the wound reels beside the cans, for greater contrast.

The Arbuckle and Clark Cans.

This should be good for a sizable press story in any town under 20,000 population, particularly if you have a photograph to give the editor, so make a photograph in advance and have it ready.

The other stunt was merely to cut out the fact from a one-sheet and insert the face of one of the girls in the office. In the original the lithograph was one of Miss Dalton and the girl selected was not unlike her in appearance. You might prepare two posters, one mounted uncut and one with the face out and offer a prize to the girl who can most acceptably fill the blank, placing the two posters in your lobby or a window to which any girl can have access, or you might use some local girl and offer a prize to anyone guessing her identity. In this case extreme care should be taken to screen the model from view, and as much mystery as possible should be thrown about the stunt.

It's simple, but that is why it is good.

Every time a local newspaper carries an advertisement concerning your theatre, have a "reading notice" go with it in another column. Get the full value of your investment. Reviews printed in Moving Picture World are valuable as "readers." Copy them when you play the film they refer to.

The Window Proposition Is Merely 50-50

The Gentle Art of Window Grabbing Is Now Made Plain by First National Heffernan

THE art of obtaining window displays and the little inside tips that make this method of exhibitor advantage possible are here given by a field "exploiter" whose expertness in this line has won the friendship and esteem of exhibitors throughout the state of Michigan. This man, who seems to have an almost uncanny ability of inducing any mercantile establishment, from jewelry stores to groceries, to gladly accommodate with window space for the promotion of motion picture attractions at local theatres, is Harold Heffernan, in charge of the Exploitation Department of the First National Exhibitors Exchange at Detroit.

"How does he do it?" is perhaps one of the most popular exhibitor questions that arise in any discussion of exploitation around Detroit film circles. The "he" refers to Heffernan. The "it" reverts to the difficulty of coaxing a grocer to use his window for a display of Constance Talmadge when he is almost bent upon devoting it to the promotion of his sale on pork and beans—or a like case. And in the explaining of his knack at this art, Mr. Heffernan begins with this foreword:

Shows Mutual Benefit.

"What little I know about the show business I am willing to scatter broadcast. It's been my aim to plug along with the exhibitors, and if the few things I've learned about window displays can be of any service I'll gladly submit to any interview you see fit to put to me."

Thereupon, Mr. Heffernan was asked upon what basis he asked the various store owners or managers or department superintendents for co-operation in the matter of window displays.

"My system is a thoroughly co-operative one," answered Mr. Heffernan. "The most popular error, I believe, that occurs in showmen's efforts to get window displays is the failure on the part of our brotherhood to properly put the case before the owner of the store window.

"Just look at it in this light and the matter can be well understood. The proprietor of any store—it may be a hole in the wall or it may be as big as any of New York's emporiums, is justly proud of his window space. To him it means a means of bringing his selling inducements before the public. The very fact that exhibitors the nation over realize this value of window space is double reason why the man whose property it is should appreciate it. Hence, when an exhibitor frankly calls upon a store manager to turn over to him (I mean the exhibitor) something that means dollars and cents, do you wonder why the store manager is going to think twice and with a good deal of accent on the negative side of the question before he allows such a thing.

Showmen Should Plan It 50-50.

"I don't think there is any science connected with the art of getting window display space. "It is mostly a matter of showing the man from whom you want to obtain this display that by serving your interests he is serving his own, that by helping you he is helping himself. Once this is impressed upon him, the coast is clear and your purpose is accomplished.

"But what are some of the arguments you would advise exhibtors to use?" Mr. Heffernan was asked.

"Any argument," he responded, "must be advanced from an unselfish viewpoint. "For instance, when I went into a jeweler's to ask that pictures of Anita Stewart, playing in 'Old Kentucky,' in Jackson, be placed in some of their sterling silver frames, the first thing that occurred in the mind of the jewelry man was what he would gain from the arrangement. A little argument like this sold him the proposition: "Anita Stewart is going to play here this week. The theatre will spend lots of money advertising this girl and her picture. You could hardly find a more prominent person to feature in your window and hardly a more popular favorite. This display will strengthen your window and attract many people who would otherwise not be interested in your line of unfilled picture frames. The gain will be mutual. We will furnish the attractive portrait photos and you furnish the frames and window. Both of us will be the winners. The co-operation will help sell tickets to the theatre and will help you sell picture frames.' The argument was accepted and we got our display, while many people wondered how it could be accomplished—what in the world could have induced a prominent jeweler to give space in his window to the promotion of a photoplay star and a new attraction."

To Get Song Hook-Ups.

"With the many songs being issued with almost every picture today, what chances are there for getting a window display?" Mr. Heffernan was asked. "There is a popular conviction that the day of the motion picture song is passing, due to the fact that the 5 and 10 cent stores will not grant window displays."

"Whenever the exhibitor is disposed to come half way with co-operation in plugging the song, I have found that the Kress or Woolworth or any of the other music stores are very willing to help out. It is unfair to expect a store to give a window display for a song and plug the same at their counters when they realize that the theatre is not disposed to cue the song into the orchestral score or have it sung at the program. The exhibitor who wants a song tie-up can have one. But he must devote space on his program to the billing of the number.

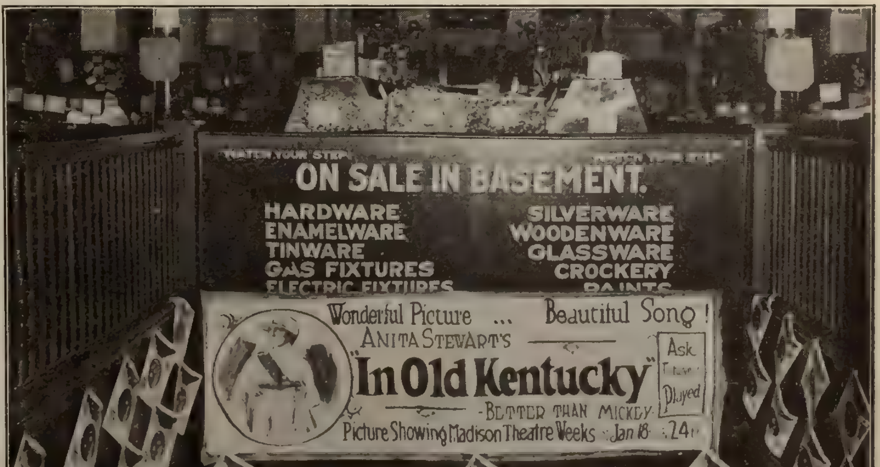
Work It a Week Ahead.

"I have found that the best use for the song can be found a week in advance of the initial showing of the attraction. In boosting our song for 'In Old Kentucky,' when the picture was showing at the Madison Theatre, in Detroit, we found that we interested every local music store when we told them that we were going to use the song a week ahead of the first showing of the picture. We had two singers give this number at every show. We knew enough about the music business and the show business to know that our having the song given on our program was bound to make it popular.

5 and 10 Cent Stores Agree.

"At one 5 and 10 cent store in Detroit, the manager accommodated us with a large framed floral wreath, with a large head of a race horse forming the centre of the display. Copies of the song were arranged neatly about the window. Another Detroit 5 and 10 cent store chose the basement stairway for its biggest smash on the song. With the music department in the basement, the first thing that caught the eye of music lovers was a huge banner of Anita Stewart in jockey attire, and the title of the song and picture.

"Above all, the exhibtor who wants any shop man to help him in the way of a window display must remember that the proposition can't be one-sided. Unless you have doped out the other fellow's gain as well as your own, your proposition is not good and you're wasting your time to try to put it through. When you've got something that's logically profitable for both parties you're on the right track and can put it through with surprising ease."



Sure, the Ten-Cent Stores Will Hook-Up.

But the way to work it is to give the ten-cent store an equal chance for a profit, says Heffernan.

"Bulling" Broadway Works As On Main Street

Sold His Patrons Strong on Stars New to Town

BREAKING Realart pictures into Lancaster, Pa., was a simple stunt for the Hamilton Theatre. Instead of merely announcing the new stars, the management inaugurated a "Leave-your-heart-at-home Week," with Constance Binney in "Erstwhile Susan" and Alice Brady in "The Fear Market."

The slogan was started in the newspapers, taken up in window cards and finally hooked up to the house lobby with innumerable hearts of colored card, pendant from the ceiling with streamers running to a central sign with the slogan. Additional press work was had from the fact that many of the locations for the Binney picture were made in the vicinity of Lancaster.

By means of this special drive, the pictures were better established in a single week than they could have been otherwise.

Paintings and Phonograph Used for "Desert Gold"

PAINTINGS and a phonograph hammering away at the "Desert Gold" plugger song formed the lobby boosters for that play at the Alhambra, Los Angeles. H. H. Bosley had two large paintings made one for either side of the lobby, each suggesting a vista through a broken away wall. These were elaborately done and lighted and were much more effective than straight framed paintings since the novelty demanded attention.

The phonograph was enclosed in a box similar to those in which gold shipments are made, and was placed just at the entrance as seen in the cut. The title was lettered on the sidewalk, as well as being set out in letters of light above the awning, and the combined effect brought crowds the entire week.

The plugger song was ground out continuously, being helped by hook-up displays in the store windows.

A ballyhoo will hit Broadway just as hard as it strikes Main Street, and perhaps a little harder, for more people see it.

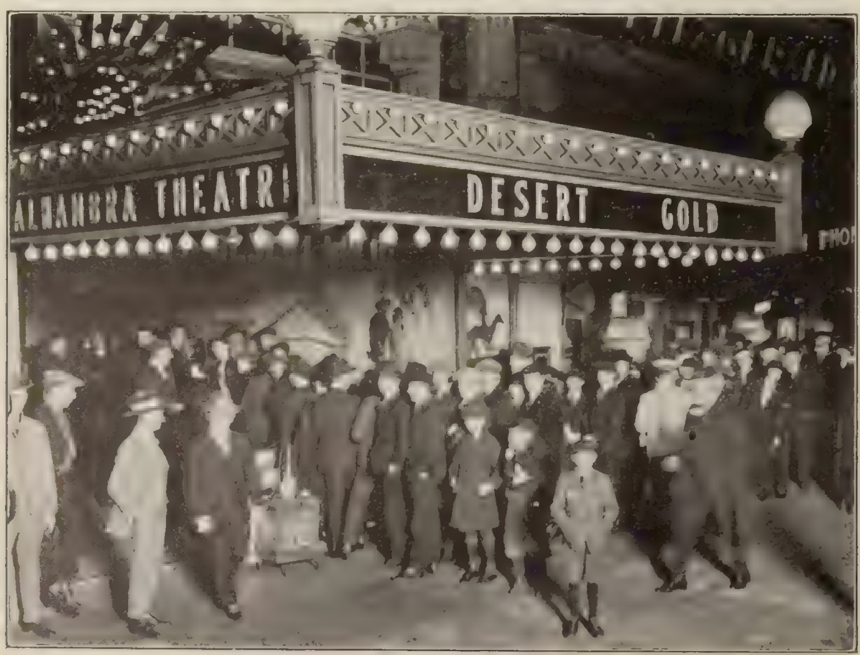
New York Falls for Same Stunts as Country Towns

ABOUT the only real difference between New York and the town with 800 population is in the number of people. They are the same sort of people and respond to the same appeals, only there are more New Yorkers to be reached, though if you can reach enough, it does not matter how many more there are.

The Cow Was No Bull.

Only a couple of weeks ago B. S. Moss tore the town up by having a cow led down Broadway with a statement that "This is no Bull," adding that the best show in town was Universal's "The Great Air Robbery" with Lt. Locklear, at the Broadway Theatre. For Fifth avenue one of the regular stages was hired, provided with a banner and run up and down the street "Special" with a section of the Naval Militia band on the roof garden. It's the same old special street car stunt, but it worked in the good old way. A more novel idea was to send a couple of aeroplanes over the city to drop aerograms advertising the show, and these messages were given out at all of the many Moss theatres in New York.

The stunts were simple, but they made for a big second week, and it could have stayed a third.



"Music Hath Charms," Says Los Angeles.

The phonograph seen in the foreground of this picture ground the plugger song morning, noon and night; and see how they piled in!

Milk Bottle Publicity for a Twilight Baby Effective

GEORGE FISCHER, of the Alhambra, Milwaukee, found his exploitation props ready made for First National's "A Twilight Baby." He decided that this first Lehrman comedy was worth real exploitation, and in casting about for publicity means he recalled that a local dairy company had used some huge paper milk bottles some time previously. He borrowed these, lettered them with suitable legends and not only used them in his lobby, but he sent them to a Motion Picture ball one night, provided with manpower motors, and they proved the hit of the show, enabling the baby to pay many milk bills through the box office takings.

Margarita Fisher Contest Worked Along New Lines

OFFERING some departures from the regular similarity contest, Miss Florence Fenyvessy, of the Strand, Rochester, recently made a clean-up with a Margarita Fisher Contest. All girls who thought they looked like the star were invited to send in photographs. Competent judges made a selection of the six who bore the closest. This is where the average contest ends, but Miss Fenyvessy had slides made of these six portraits, sent a pair of seats to each of the contestants, threw the selected pictures on the screen and let the audience vote, getting double value from the idea, and building up a large interest in the outcome.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

The Same Old Trouble

NORTH CAROLINA has the same old trouble that many who use a combination moving picture and stereopticon projector experience. He thus describes it:

Am projecting pictures here in (names suppressed for very obvious reasons); also occasionally do relief work in a nearby town. Projectors at both places are Powers.

At one place a current is taken through a 110-volt D. C. generator, belt driven by gasolene engine, using regular Power rheostat on next to highest contact. Don't know focal length of objective, but think it is 5.5`inches. Distance of projection is 70 feet. Picture is about 12.5 feet. Condenser is 6.5 and 7.5, with the 7.5 next the arc. National cored carbon, with Silver Tip below. Get fine light on both moving picture and stero. Am well satisfied, but here we have a 5.5 E F Bausch and Lomb (other objective same make) and a 22 inch stero lens, also B. & L. Picture is 13 feet at 88 feet. Amperage between 30 and 35.

Home-made generator set consisting of Holtzer-Cabot motor and Lincoln generator. Condensers .5 and 7.5. Lamphouse back as far as it will go. National cored carbon above, Silver Tip below. Regular Power rheostat, set at third position. One setting of carbons lasts not more than two hours—somewhat less than at the other house.

Light is poor, though I get a clear field for the moving picture. As for the stero, it is just plain bunk. Cannot get a clear field.

A Hard Job.

We use many Radio typewritten slides and the reading of their outer margin is a hard job. Am unable to get crater near enough to condenser to clear stero field. At the other place the spot is round, clear cut and with a light haze of blue surrounding.

Here the spot is not clear cut on the edge, but blends from dark to light; exactly as though out of focus. Have Handbook, though not the last edition; also have not the lens tables.

Was with the A. E. F. Just got back. Saw and ran some Dutch projectors and while they are not the equal of the United States machines in optical results (terrible ficker), they are SOME machine mechanically. Their lens is nearly as large as our stero lens.

Now, for land's sake, help me out. My manager gets the Moving Picture World and I get a glimpse of the projection department, all I am interested in.

First and Foremost.

First and foremost, the very greatest real help I can possibly give you is to give you what is commonly termed the devil—a "laying out," and I'm going to do it too, just because it is the one BIG help I can give you.

You are projecting pictures upon which the income of a theatre depends. You are handling the presentation of productions costing tens of thousands of dollars.

You are controlling the actions of the shadow forms of artists whose art is for the time being entirely dependent upon your knowledge and skill. You are putting on the show that your fellow townsmen pay to see, and yet you calmly tell me you have only a handbook published so long ago that I've forgotten the date.

You have not even invested fifty cents in a lens chart. You do not subscribe to the Moving Picture World, but depend on a "glimpse" of the projection department, which is "all that you are interested in."

Ought To Be Ashamed.

You ought to be ashamed of yourself. If your profession is not worth investing a few dollars in text books, subscribing to the trade paper which gives you real information, and if its various branches other than the one you are in do not interest you, my advice to you, given in all kindness and good faith, is to get out of it and get into some business you will be really interested in, or into something which has no knowledge requirement—though the Good Lord only knows what that would be.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents . United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

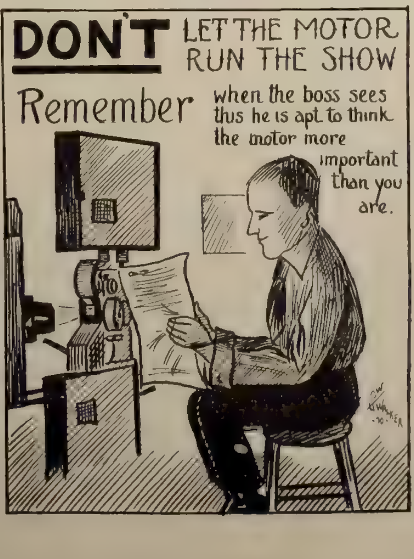
You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you ofe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth avenue, New York City; Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill., or Wright & Callender Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

As to your lens problem, for thirty amperes D. C. you need the following: Two 6.5 plano convex condensers, spaced not to exceed 1/16 of an inch apart, with 21 inches from center of condenser combination to aperture. This would give you the right thing for 30 amperes D. C. for moving picture, and I really don't see any reason why it would not work perfectly for the stero as well.



DON'T LET THE MOTOR RUN THE SHOW
Remember
when the boss sees this he is apt to think the motor more important than you are.

The Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold street, New York City, will supply rods long enough to let you get the lamphouse back that far, BUT, mind you, I am assuming your amperage to be between 25 and 30.

As to the Dutch projectors, the large diameter objectives, unless stopped down to the actual requirements of the individual case, would set up additional flicker tendency by reason of excessive revolving shutter master blade width required.

The fact that your spot is "clear out" is not necessarily a commendation and the blue haze shows the aperture to be on the back focus, which is not good.

The projector in question is giving a clear field, but it is my judgment that you have very small reason to feel satisfied. A clear field is important, but that is just one point of many.

The condenser combination of that machine is wrongly placed; also it is too far from the aperture. One must never be satisfied with a good result, unless that result is obtained efficiently. The spot should be round, but that is a matter of lamp angle and carbon adjustment to get a round or nearly round crater.

Now don't fly off the handle at my criticism. The best friend is sometimes the surgeon who causes us terrific pain. He finds the unhealthy spot and cuts it out that we may be well.

You eat crackers and milk for a week if necessary and save enough money to get an up-to-date handbook, the lens charts and question booklets.

Then be a sport and support, by your subscription, the paper which is honestly, and perhaps we may venture to say, efficiently fighting your battles.

Suggested Possibilities

A very great many theatres are using such high amperage that it is not practical to use on objective of sufficient diameter to pick up the entire light ray, under the condition thus set up.

Suppose, for instance, we use a hundred, or even ninety, amperes D C, which calls for not to exceed 16 inches from center of condenser combination to film; in fact ,a little less is usually the rule. Also, as a rule, the working distance of the objective in the present top-of-the-balcony-above-the-ceiling-line location foisted on all too many present day high class theatres, is long.

With condenser sixteen inches from film and a six inch working distance a 2.5 inch diameter would not pick up the entire ray, and at seven inch working distance a three-inch-diameter objective would be lacking in size.

Now we all well know there is objection to such large lenses, from at least two viewpoints, and certainly there is no benefit in a light ray larger than the lens.

What Is It All About?

And now here is what I am driving at. By reducing the condenser diameter we reduce the diameter of the ray where it encounters the objective. Query: Would reducing the diameter of the condenser by means of a carefully designed shield on the arc side of the lens allow us to advance the crater nearer the lens without breakage which would, of course, call for the use of a shorter focal length arc lens; also would there be any real advantage in so doing under those conditions. What say the Wise Ones? My ear is to the earth, listening for reply.

Auerbach Backs Up Stringer

John Auerbach, New York City, approves of John Stringer's working out of the shutter problem. He says:

My dear Mr. Richardson:—In my opinion the palm should be awarded to Mr. John Stringer. Until his article was published I was of the opinion that it was going to be very difficult to arive at a definite solution of the shutter blade problem on paper that would be absolutely correct.

I had though Mr. Jackson's solution as close as we could come in theory to the right answer, although it was evident that it was a little out of the way.

As Mr. Stringer points out, Mr. Jarden's mistake was in assuming that the tangents AH and AF representing the angle of blade sufficient to cover the light beam, intersected the light beam at the points ED, the extremities of the diameter of the beam perpendicular to the radius of the shutter drawn to the center of the light beam. Mr. Stringer's diagram showed this error clearly.

Error Is Small.

The margin of error in Mr. Jarden's solution is very small indeed. As a matter of fact, the difference in final result between the answers of Mr. Stringer and Mr. Jarden is only 13 minutes, 12 seconds, a difference of less than ¼ of a degree or 1/1240th of the whole circle. But, after all, there is a difference, and Mr. Jarden's answer does not absolutely satisfy the conditions of the problem, while that of Mr. Stringer does. The further distant the light beam is from the shutter shaft, the less the error in Mr. Jarden's method, but when the distance is very short the error becomes fairly large, while the method of Mr. Stringer meets every condition entirely.

It was very clever of him to dig out just the geometrical theorem needed and apply it so aptly. In case any readers have not his particular geometry book at hand, the theorem in question may also be found in Wentworth's Plane Geometry—page 125.

Statement Ambiguous.

While Mr. Stringer's theory is absolutely correct, I think he has stated the thing a little ambiguously. He says for instance, "if line AB be rotated about point A," etc. What he means is, if line AB be rotated about a point halfway between A & B, for if line AB be rotated about point A, AB and AC would be equal, an impossibility of course, if BCA is a right angle, but this is merely a slip in expression, and does not affect the result.

Using his theory then, the answer to your shutter blade problem would be as follows: Find the distance from center of shutter shaft to center of light beam. Measure diameter of light beam. This formula would then result:

$$\frac{\tfrac{1}{2}\text{ diameter of light beam}}{\text{disance from center of shutter shaft to center of light beam}} = \text{sine of angle BAC}$$

Refer to a table of natural sines and find the number of degrees in the angle. Then apply this formula:

Angle BAC multiplied by 2, plus intermittent angle, equals total number of degrees for main shutter blade.

I think this somewhat condenses and simplifies his solution, although the entire credit belongs to Mr. Stringer, and I think he should be awarded this prize. It seems to me that the above formulas, in some form or other, should be included in your next handbook and in every standard text book on moving pictures, and should be known as "Stringer's Shutter Blade Formulas", as they are the first concrete formulas to give the exact width of the main shutter blade in degrees, to meet any local conditions.

Shutter Pattern

R. P. Smith, Jacksonville, Florida, sends in a shutter pattern for examination. Says that he is getting good results from same, using a Powers machine.

The shutter has an 85 degree main blade, then a 30, 25 and 30 degree blade, in the order named, leaving two 70 degrees and two twenty-five degree light openings.

I would not expect good results from such a shutter when using brilliant illumination, though it gives ten degrees more than fifty per cent. of light, hence is efficient. He has perforated the master blade with 1/16th inch holes, spaced a quarter of an inch apart, which certainly would have the effect of injuring the contrast.

As to Non-Flam Film

I have not yet been able to reconcile the statements made by exchange managers and manufacturers. The latter claim that non-flam film is the equal of flam film, while exchange managers claim it is so much inferior that the industry has not yet seen fit to adopt it for general use. I know of no other individual who can give us correct information, which will be unbiased by commercial or other considerations, hence please give us such information as you can and will.

Exchange Manager Correct.

What the exchange manager says is the exact truth. The question is one which has been, in some of its phase, taking up a vast amount of the time of the last two meetings of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. It has been very thoroughly discussed by that body, which called into conference Dana Pierce, head of the Underwriters Fire Prevention Bureau. There were Eastman film experts present and Mr. Cook, head of the Pathescope Company of America, which corporation uses nothing but non-flam film.

The general opinion of all those competent to speak with authority was that non-flam costs more and has only about eighty per cent. efficiency as compared to flam film, meaning that it would last only about eighty per cent. as long. At all meetings men were present who fought for the adoption of non-flam stock for general use in the industry.

But they accepted the fact that it would cost more and have a shorter life as fact, arguing that the industry should shoulder the additional financial burden for the sake of the added safety.

This discussion was not directly brought about through advocacy of either non-flam or flam film, but through opposition to the special width non-flam film standard adopted by the society at its Rochester meeting.

These are the facts: Cost about one cent per foot more than inflammable stock; lasts only about 80 per cent. as long.

At the last meeting the fact was brought out (Eastman representative being the authority) that while quantity production would probably operate to reduce the cost of non-flam to some extent, it would never be as cheap as the inflammable stock because of the costly chemicals required in its manufacture.

In the foregoing, having quoted from memory, the actual figures of relative cost may be slightly in error, but the main facts are absolutely correct.

Looks Practical to Me

Robert P. Smith, Jacksonville, Florida, proposes the following as a simple, easily applied, practical solution of the shutter question:

I submit herewith my idea of a simple, easily applied and thoroughly practical solution of the shutter problem. I may be in error, but believe my plan will give desired results, and that, too, without the necessity of applying either geometry or trigonometry, both of which were so successfully employed by brothers Jardin and Stringer, but with both of which the average projectionist is perhaps not very familiar.

Smith's Solution.

My solution is as follows: Draw rectangle A, B, C, D, the EXACT size of light ray at point it is to be intercepted by shutter blade.

From exact center of side of rectangle nearest where shutter shaft will be located in pattern, draw a line perpendicular (at right angles to) side of rectangle, said line to be the exact length of distance from center of shutter shaft of your projector to edge of rectangle of light, at point where it is to be intercepted by shutter blade.

The end of this line (line E, K) will be point E, which will be center of shutter shaft. From point E, using a compass, draw curved line J, G, H about an inch beyond edge B, C of light rectangle.

Outer Edge of Shutter Blade.

This will be outer edge of your shutter blade. Next draw line E, G and, by means of a project r, line E, J. This will be the sixty degrees necessary to cover a pin point when using a 5 to 1 movement.

Next draw line H, D and then cut out your pattern with E, H, J as the master blade, and the exact requirements of the question propounded in the question will have been fulfilled.

It Seems Right.

Seems to me this is absolutely right, except in cases where the ray is, by reason of too-small objective, round.

In such case, however, it would not alter the correctness of the solution, though it would modify or change the method of its application to this extent: we would then draw the line E K straight through center of circle representing exact diameter of light ray at point shutter intercepts it and draw lines E, G and E, H to just pass sides of circle.

On Second Thought.

On second though it would be very difficult for the average man to get line E K exactly at right angles to line AD. I would, therefore, suggest adding point K exactly half way between B and C. A line drawn exactly through points F and K, as per dotted line, would, of course, of necessity be exactly at right angles to line AD.

Still another way would be to extend one side of line AD a foot or so, as per dotted line D, L. One could then apply a triangle or an ordinary carpenter's square with very tolerable accuracy.

Oh, Boy!

The story goes that a certain union in a certain city received from a certain exhibitor the following letter in response to a demand for increased emolument in return for services to be rendered. We cannot vouch for the correctness of the yarn, but, anyhow, it is mighty good reading, and so close to the truth, in many cases, that the two could not be told apart. Here is the letter:

Local Union No. X Y Z, International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada.

Gentlemen:—For the following reasons I am unable to concede the raise for which you ask. I have been held up, held down, sandbagged, walked on, sat on, flattened out and squeezed, first by the United States Government for federal war tax, excess profit tax, income tax, liberty bonds, thrift stamps, capital stock tax, merchant's license, then by the state of New York for an income tax, and an auto license tax next; by the city for water tax, theatre license, dog tax, special assessment tax and property tax, and afterward by every society and organization the marvelously ingenious mind of modern man can suggest or invent to subtract me from that which I may or may not possess.

The Society of John the Baptist, the G. A. R., the K. of C., the Women's Relief, the Navy League, the Red Cross, the Purple Cross the Black Cross, the Double Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, the Jewish Relief, the Belgian, Italian, Turkish, Armenian, French, English and United States Orphans and every hospital in the city insist upon separating me from my hard won coin, and just for good measure the Associated Charities, which picks up any stray crumbs the others may have inadvertently overlooked.

One Sweet Dream.

And to the end that life be but one sweet dream, our beneficent government has so hedged my business about with must and must nots that I don't quite know who owns it.

I am inspected, suspected, scrutinized, examined, overhauled, re-examined, investigated, supervised, informed, required and commanded until I really don't know who I am, why I am or whether I shall much longer continue to be.

The one thing I do know with surety is that I am supposed to be a sort of Christmas tree, from which money may be plucked throughout the year—a horn of plenty from which an inexhaustible supply of money may be drawn for every known need, hope or desire of the human race.

And because I have failed in some degree to live up to that idea—because I will not go out and beg, borrow or steal sufficient coin to make up the deficit, I am cussed, discussed, boycotted, talked to, talked about, sworn at, hung up, robbed and all but ruined.

Screen Surfaces

From Ellenville, New York, comes an inquiry as to the advisability of purchasing a metallic screen surface. It would seem that as we have many times set this matter forth and it is thoroughly treated in the handbook, such inquiries would be a thing of the past, yet scarce a week goes by without one or more reaching us.

From the purely artistic projection viewpoint, while one may equal it, that man does not live who ever has or probably ever will improve upon plain white plaster, calsomine, non-gloss white paint or fine woven white muslin.

Another Story.

But when it comes to the power required to give different surfaces a given brilliancy it is quite another story.

The benefit in the semi-reflective surface, such as a metallic surface, lies in the fact that it reflects back to the eye a much greater percentage of the light received upon its surface per unit of area than do the other surfaces named.

It is therefore possible to do two things with the metallic surface screen, viz.: get a more brilliant screen with less amperage, or the same brilliancy with less, as compared with plaster, cloth, etc. It is possible to get a brilliant picture of large size which could not be made brilliant if the other named surfaces were used.

Other Points for Comparison.

The other points for comparison are fade-away, which does not exist in any degree in the non-reflective surfaces named, and may or may not exist in the metallic surface screen, according to whether it is or is not rightly made.

In connection with the screen problem, you will remember that a few years ago many were vociferating loudly in favor of yellow in the screen surface.

This department withstood a storm of censure for not "falling for the yellow." Well, you don't hear any one declaiming about yellow screens now, do you? It is just another instance out of dozens where this department and its editor have refused to follow the crowd, when it was thoroughly convinced that the crowd was wrong, being roundly abused for such refusal and then, long afterward, being acknowledged right.

Questions and Answers

George J. Homer, Mankato, Minnesota, wants something we are now engaged in preparing to give him, in the very best possible form. He says:

I purchased the questions, lens charts and handbook. With regard to the questions I think some of them are a bit confusing. I believe, and the belief is shared by others, that it would be an excellent idea to publish the questions and answers in book form.

It would give those who are anxious to make the most of their profession and reach its real heights a chance, and they would want the book, regardless of what its price might be.

We have no local here, as in larger cities, which fact places us at disadvantage.

In the larger cities they get together in club rooms and discuss various things,, which is a privilege denied us of the smaller towns.

Regarding "Get Together."

With regard to the "get together and discuss things," it is quite true that city union men do do that very thing, more or less. But such meetings and discussions will be helpful or harmful, according to their nature.

As citing the possibility for harm, we visited the rooms of the projectionist local in one of the largest cities of the country a couple of years ago.

This local had letter-heads and stationery suggestive of a high class membership. The union president accompanied us through the rooms, in one of which were many members engaged in animated discussion.

Discussing Cubic Contents.

On a large table certain cubes were rolled and according to computation of the sum of the uppermost spots each discussion was decided. True, all our feeble intellect could see in the discussion which pertained to projection was the fact that the aforesaid cubes were projected.

However, the above was merely an isolated exception, not, praise be, representing anything even faintly resembling a general condition. It is only mentioned as showing that gatherings of city men for discussion may be harmful as well as helpful, so you have no reason to feel discouraged by your semi-isolation. As a matter of fact, however, let it be said that more and more is it becoming the fact that city men really do meet, more or less regularly, for helpful discussion.

As to Questions and Answers.

As to the questions and answers, we could not publish them in the form you propose without supplying an encyclopedia of questions and answers to examination questions, thus turning loose upon a defenseless profession a horde of men who secured license without anything in the way of knowledge except answers to questions, which they had learned to repeat like a parrot.

We have, however, finally hit upon a plan which will give you exactly what you want, and give it you in a helpful way. It will supply the questions and answers all in one book, but not in just the way you mean. The way will, however, be entirely practical. We cannot, for purely business reasons, tell you what the plan is at this time; also we will not be able to get it into shape for a year or more—probably more, but take it from us that it will be well worth the waiting.

Grammatical and Mathematical Problems To Be Solved by the Moving Picture

ALICE WARD BAILEY, well known as a writer of magazine stories, and particularly beloved to the children of Minneapolis, was one of the interesting figures met in Cleveland during the week of the N. E. A. convention. She has a tiny, fragile personality, and one wonders in looking at her how she is able to put so much vim into life. But looking down the line of people who have accomplished much, we find that not all of them—in fact, a small majority—have gained either great height or avoirdupois. So, perhaps, it is not so surprising after all that Mrs. Bailey has attacked big problems and been able to get away with them.

One of her latest accomplishments is the making of a moving picture intended to lessen the difficulties of the study of grammar. This production is called "Mr. Noun and Mrs. Pronoun," and was enacted by girls and boys, with the author in the role of Old Mr. Grammar. The story opens with a little girl trying very hard to understand the relations of the different parts of speech. Finally, she falls asleep, and dreams that Old Mr. Grammar steps from the book, calls his nouns and pronouns, verbs, adjectives, adverbs, etc., around him. And like real people they enact the story, in which they are kept in order by rules who appear as policemen.

The picture is not yet in the hands of distributors, and in fact there are but four prints made. The inspiration for making the film came from the fact that Mrs. Bailey has for several years been looked upon in Minneapolis as an elucidator of problems of the schoolroom. Cases of children who found it impossible to understand through ordinary mediums were brough to her. And it is an interesting fact that the little trick through which she arouses their interest, and brushes away the cobwebs, was learned by accident when a little girl of her acquaintance tearfully acknowledged that she was beaten by the complications of the text book on grammar. Mrs. Bailey solved her problem for her by lining up the parts of speech and representing them to her as real people. The little girl was happy, and many other children have since been made happy through her experience. In her apartment in Minneapolis, Mrs. Bailey now retains a clinic to which children with like problems are brought to have them simplified.

We will no doubt hear more of this picture, and of another which she is about to make, called "Fractions," intended as an elucidation of the subject in the classroom.

Brussels and Rhine in Burton Holmes Latest

IN the Paramount-Burton Holmes travel number for February 29 the American soldiers watching on the Rhine affords some interesting scene in the occupied territory of Germany. The cameraman guided the onlooker through cities under control of the American military police and to the Royal Palace, a favorite residence of former German royalty, especially Empress Augusta, grandmother of the onetime Kaiser. The cafes, the Y. M. C. A. huts, the water fronts are all visited by Mr. Holmes in his camera-chaperoned tour including the famous pontoon bridge over the Rhine which leads up to the citadel of Ehrenbreitstein where, with the Stars and Strips flying overhead, the tourist looks down upon Coblenz, picturesquely situated between the Rhine and Moselle rivers. The picture is called "The Watch on the Rhine."

The Holmes number for March 7 shows that last summer, at the time the picture was taken, there was more life on the streets, more eating, drinking and entertaining in the beautiful cafes and on the sidewalk terraces of "Bustling Brussels" than in Paris itself.

For five years the Belgians had lived under every conceivable restriction and under the shadow of every fear. When the armistice was signed and their liberty assured, the Belgians quickly rejected this restraint and horror, and Mr. Holmes shows Brussels and the Belgians enjoying life to the utmost. He gives a glimpse of everything worth seeing in enchanting, rejuvenated Brussels: the celebrated Guild House, the lovely flower markets and the famous city hall. The hard working dog doing carrier duty, the interesting phases of daily life in and about the streets, the wonderful displays of Brussels lace give the finishing touch to an unusually interesting and timely picture.

Diversity of Subjects in Screen Magazine.

The fifty-seventh issue of the Universal Screen Magazine heads off with a fashion feature "Inspirations from the Court of King Arthur, directed by H. Christensen. Following this are other interesting scenes, in which appear James Hunter, manager of the Denver Municipal Zoo, and some of his pets. Interesting shots are shown of prize antelopes, mountain lions, bears, and "Snowball," said to be the only pink-eyed, white-haired coyote in the world. Denver's prize bison herd is also shown.

Another subject on this reel, and one which will be of absorbing interest to the naturalist is "Monuments of the Microscope World," showing reproductions, enlarged a millionfold, of the numerous skeletons of polycystina, the fossilized remains of which, accumulated through the ages, composes the undersea foundations of the Barbadoes and other island groups.

Boys, earning while they learn, are shown at work in the Vocational School at Kansas City. They build a complete house in full view of the camera.

Educational Receives First Shipment of Negative from North African Party

THE first shipment of negative from the Educational-Interchurch Expedition in North Africa has been received in New York by Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, together with a detailed report of the activities of the camera party.

The North African expedition is in charge of Willard Price, editor-in-chief of World Outlook Magazine, and includes Horace D. Ashton, of the Educational staff, cameraman. It is one of two expeditions sent out early last December by the Interchurch World Movement, in co-operation with Educational.

The second party, under the direction of E. Lloyd Sheldon, the well-known author, includes Dr. S. V. Casselman, of the Interchurch Movement, and Harry Keepers, cameraman. This party, known as the India-Expedition, is now in China, and is to spend some months in India as a part of a program which will carry it around the world.

To Release in Two Groups.

The purpose of both expeditions is to secure a better type of travel film, built to conform to present-day standards, which Mr. Hammons has carefully planned in advance to insure a maximum of entertainment and action. All the subjects thus produced are to be edited and released in two groups, the first under the title, "World Outlook on the Screen," for general release through the Educational organization, and the second classification for the use of the Interchurch movement.

Mr. Price and Mr. Ashton have had unusual success to date and the material now in hand proves that the arrangement is certain to result in a different sort of travel subject. In the first place, Mr. Hammons states, the camera party has enjoyed extraordinary privileges, which was anticipated, and therefore things that have heretofore been inaccessible have at last been photographed.

Each of the subjects thus far completed conforms to the original plan of containing more than mere scenery, combining it with a thread of story that is accepted before the party sets out and which guarantees a greater degree of success. Mr. Hammons' present plans will result in a regular release of the World Outlook films through the Educational exchanges, beginning about August 1.

Atlas Appoints New Vice-President.

The following interesting announcement comes from the Atlas Educational Film Company, of Chicago, which is now making more or less elaborate preparations for future educational film requirements:

"At the last meeting of the board of directors of the Atlas Educational Film Company, John Melville Boggs was elected vice-president by a unanimous vote. Mr. Boggs served with distinction during the late war as major in the Ordinance Department. He was assigned by the department as supervising port ordinance officer at Philadelphia, Pa.-Wilmington, Del., and had charge of the shipping of high explosives to Italy and France.

"Prior to the war Mr. Boggs was known to the business world as the vice-president and general manager of the Philadelphia Casualty Company, also the Pittsburgh Casualty Company, which was taken over by the National Life Company of Chicago, Mr. Boggs retaining his position of general manager."

Atlas has recently been busy sounding out the possibilities and requirements of the school market, and will doubtless be one of the educational concerns to whom we may look early for interesting developments.

Films on Fruit Packing and Road Building Shown

THE Ontario County Fruit Growers' Association, an organization having hundreds of members in one of the most prosperous rural counties in New York State, met in Canandaigua on March 4, and the sessions were held in the Liberty Theatre. The movie house was selected as a meeting place in order that the members of the association might have the benefit of motion pictures showing the latest and most improved methods of growing, packing and handling fruit in Niagara county. The members are interested in co-operative packing houses, among other things, but before they invest hundreds of thousands of dollars it was decided that it would be a good idea for the whole membership to become thoroughly acquainted with the subject through special motion pictures.

Motion pictures are also playing a big part in the building of town roads in Western New York. In the towns the superintendents of highways are elected, and as often as not are practical road builders, rather than scientifically trained engineers. For the firms selling road machinery and material to reach these men with convincing reasons for buying their product has not always been an easy matter, until the recent advent of motion pictures as salesmen. Road building and machinery are now demonstrated with the aid of film for the benefit of highway officials who are in the field for such equipment, and the screen has proven far superior and more convincing than the usual sales talk of the glib-tongued salesman.

At a meeting of the Town Superintendents' Association of Monroe County, held in Rochester, and also attended by representatives from Ontario, Genesee and Livingston counties, pictures were used to demonstrate the use of local materials, including gravel and broken stone, to meet the traffic requirements of the present day. At a meeting on March 2, a film entitled "A Concrete Romance" was presented, showing the benefits of modern road-building methods. A love story runs through the film to make it doubly interesting, but it is closely interwoven with the possibilities of using cement not only on highways, but also for general farm use.

Films Used to Instruct Dry Goods Employees

MOTION pictures for instructing salespersons in their work are now available for retailers. The Department of Research and Information of the National Dry Goods Association, anticipating the interest of our members in the use of motion pictures for educational work, has been gathering together information relative to the work now being done and possibilities for the future.

Very often sales are lost because of the ignorance of the salesperson as well as that of the customers. There are comparatively few books on the process of manufacture of the various commodities sold over the counter and what books have been published are not attractive to the average sales girl. Everyone realizes the popularity of motion pictures and there are very few salespeople who do not find them one of their chief methods of entertainment. If the sales force can see the story of their wares they will be able, more intelligently, to guide the choice of their patrons and by stressing valuable points could almost invariably sway the undecided buyer. If, on the other hand, the public knew more about the character of goods they were purchasing, they would make fewer unwise selections and many returns would be eliminated.

Because of the fact that the expense of production is so great, few retailers have been able to employ this valuable method of instruction. However, two or three of the very large concerns have made a good beginning. These productions were along the lines of delivery and window decoration, and a community film to attract rural trade.

F. H. Richardson's Projection Department in Moving Picture World is admittedly the best and most useful compendium of projection knowledge extant. Week after week, Richardson talks with authority on the subject of projecting pictures—and he talks to the future theatre manager, who is the present projectionist.

Ottawa Teachers Hear Screen Blamed for "Vulgarizing" World War Ideals

MOVING pictures are now being blamed for "cheapening" the great war. A statement to this effect was made by Prof. J. L. Morison before the Ottawa Teachers' Institute at Ottawa, Ontario, on February 20. Moving pictures, he believed, were largely responsible for the "vulgarizing" of the great cause for which the war was fought. He illustrated this assertion by telling of a motion picture which he had seen in a theatre in Scotland. This picture was called "The Beast of Berlin."

"The impression one received from witnessing this picture," he said, "was that the war was won by a succession of parades down Broadway and that peace was obtained by a meeting in Europe at which one nation was the predominant factor."

So disgusting had this propaganda become, he continued, that a certain British officer had told him that "he thought he was fighting for the Allies, but found that he was fighting for Horatio Bottomley."

Soldiers "Howled" at Front Line Scenes.

Prof. Morison declared that British soldiers in a hospital had "howled" when films from Lord Beaverbrook's department, which were supposed to depict scenes in the front line, had been shown to them. He ventured the opinion that indulgence in flag-waving is a great evil.

At the same convention the proposal was made by Dr. F. A. Jones, of the Ottawa Normal School, to have moving picture projection machines as permanent equipment in all schools for the teaching of geography, history and other subjects.

At a meeting of the National Educational Council in Ottawa on the same day, one of the delegates from Winnipeg, Manitoba, told of having seen a private screening of rejected portions of moving picture subjects which had passed through the hands of the Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors. He referred to the exhibition as "nauseating."

Shown Despite Protests.

The presentation of these condemned scenes before a gathering of clergymen and others at Winnipeg a few weeks before had aroused a protest from local exhibitors on the ground that such a screening would only add to the prejudice against moving pictures that is held by a number of preachers. The exhibitors pointed out that if the scenes had been condemned by the censors for showing in Manitoba, they should not have been shown to a select few, and it was also argued that the condemned portions of the films, when presented without proper sequence of context, could not help but appear crude.

Game Birds, Sports and Fun in Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph

AN unusual study of the scientific breeding of game birds as practised by the New Jersey Fish and Game Commission at Fork River, N. J., is the lead-off subject in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, B-7029, scheduled for release at an early date. It is entitled "Pheasants—Aristocrats of Birdland."

The scenes photographed at Fork River show how thousands of pheasants are raised every year under the most scientific conditions. After the nests in the main hatchery have been pictured; also the method of feeding the chicks, the spectator follows the growing birds through their various stages of development until they are crated and shipped to distant hunting grounds. The picture closes with shots of rare varieties of pheasants.

The second subject in this Pictograph, "Knife Throwing," deals with the remarkable performance of Chief Zatzam, an Aztec Indian, sixty eight years old, whose proficiency at knife throwing is marvelous. In all the fifty-one years that he has been hurling knives he has had but one accident, and that was not his fault.

A boxing contest in which the participants are mice instead of men is the subject of the cartoonist's humor in Krazy Kat in "Best Mouse Loses." The artist shows a grotesque view of the match with the ring-side bet makers.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That the Prizma release for March 2 is painfully reminiscent of the days when John Barleycorn was in his prime. This reel reproduces in colors the preparation of various alcoholic drinks. The latter part of the reel is a clever burlesque on the methods which are supposedly employed in the home to produce substitutes.

That International News No. 48 shows the resumption of pre-war industries in the near east, furnishing interesting scenes in which Persian men and women are shown turning out the fine rugs for which their country is famed. In the same issue American marines are shown in lively work at the president's palace in Hayti, where they are helping to quell the frequent revolutions which make life interesting in this little South American republic. Other items of interest show coal being doled out to shivering Austrians, and penny lunches being provided for hungry children of the New York schools.

That a three-reel moving picture story of the manufacture of an automobile tire, starting with a view of the crude rubber as it arrives after its long journey from the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company's plantation in Sumatra. The picture takes the spectator step by step through the various intricacies of the manufacturing process, showing wonderful machines at work mixing and rolling the rubber, and looms for the weaving of the fabric. The dexterity of the tire builders, and the huge steaming pits in which the casings are cured provide interesting sights. The picture was made by the company's own corps of experts and cameramen, under the direction of Ralph M. Lambeck, formerly a cameraman with big producing concerns.

That in order to thoroughly expose the methods used by crooks in forging checks and to show how to detect false checks, Robert A. Bond, president of the Credit Men's Club of Baltimore, arranged for the showing of a moving picture entitled "A Modern Black Art," which was exhibited at the monthly dinner of this association at the Hotel Emerson on Wednesday night, January 21. This picture was shown through the courtesy of the Todd Protectograph Company. It is estimated that about $250,000 is lost each year by Baltimore merchants by bad checks. The same subject was treated by George E. Darrell, of the William J. Burns International Detective Agency, and the principal address was made by Assistant State's Attorney Horton S. Smith, in which he showed that the existing laws are insufficient to cope with forgers even though detected.

That a three-reel film made for the government by Major L. C. Mitchell with the purpose of teaching the men in the military camps the proper care of mouth and teeth is called "Come Clean." This film was not quite finished when the armistice was signed, and it was therefore in a measure diverted from its original purpose. In finishing the picture Major Mitchell had the foresight to inoculate into it certain things which pertained particularly to the child. The film is now awaiting certain formalities preparatory to its distribution. Thirty copies of the picture have been made.

That the Pathe Review, No. 41, contains a remarkable animal study by Raymond L. Ditmar called "The Dog that Taught Men to Cuss." This is a series of scenes showing the prairie dog and his habits. A Pathecolor of views in Tangier, Morocco, an Algerian Dance, a Novograph number, "Just Legs," in which the New York mounted police perform, and German prisoners rebuilding France complete the reel.

That "Reflections of a Bachelor Girl" by Helen Rowland makes its reapparance in film in the Paramount Magazine for March 7. This issue also contains a subject called "On the Wings of the Morning," which shows the valuable service rendered by ice boats in facilitating the work of the U. S. Life Saving Corps.

Softly Cooing As the Old-Cradle Rocks

We Glance at the Infant Industry Ten Years Ago

JUST to start an argument, and perhaps to be called down for making a few misstatements, we'll begin this week's lesson in ancient history by recording a few "firsts" and to get to them, the earlier years of the Infant's life must be delved into. As, for instance:

The first slide manufacturer was Joseph F. Coufal, of the (then) Novelty Slide Company. He's here still and going strong.

The first "Imp" picture was "Hiawatha" with Florence Lawrence and King Baggot leading—although their names were never mentioned. It was against "policy" then to let the names of the players be known. Different now.

The first publicity writer for films was R. H. Cochrane. He was then in Chicago, head of his own advertising agency. Carl Laemmle was getting into the film game via reel-renting and Mr. Cochrane gave a few moments of his time to devising advertisements and reeling off publicity.

"Old Mamma 10 Per Cent."

In Moving Picture World dated March 12, 1910, there is a lively sample of the Cochrane skill in putting the "punch" into an argument. At that time Imp was battling the Patents Company and the Independents were fighting the Trust.

"She is Dead," wrote Mr. Cochrane as the caption under a drawing of an old lady stretched out on a cot with men labeled "Certain Licensed Exchange" mourning her demise. The cut of Carl Laemmle's smiling face held down the southeast corner of the same page.

"She's dead!" wrote "R. H."

"Old Mamma Ten Per Cent is dead!

"Deadernell!

"Get out the crepe!

"Sound the doleful drums of death. Boom!

"Let the mournful trombone croon its agonizing dirge!

"Oom-pah! Oom-pah! Toll the bells! Ding-a-ling!

"For she's dead!"

R. H. Cochrane "Nails a Lie."

Gives you an idea of advertisement writing; advertisements that put Carl Laemmle "on the map" (with exchanges in Chicago, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, Portland, Evansville and Denver) and all over the map ten years later. And some mighty printable publicity went along with the advertisement writing.

On another page of the same issue Imp advertising said: "The blackest and at the same time the silliest lie yet circulated by enemies of 'Imp' was the story foisted on the public of St. Louis last week in effect that Miss Lawrence (the 'Imp' girl, formerly known as the 'Biograph' girl) had been killed by a street car." Gradually the names of players were getting into print!

What Were YOU Doing TEN YEARS AGO

Drop us a line, whoever you are, if your film record covers ten years in harness.

Tell us what you were doing and where you were doing it ten years ago.

Help us "jazz this thing up" and make it the most interesting section of Moving Picture World.

"Kick in." Don't be modest.

It wasn't modesty that made the goldfish famous.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, destined to later on become quite well known in the industry, broke into type with a contribution to Moving Picture World concerning picture theatre management. This was the first of a series of arguments and expressions of opinion that later came into full operation at the hands of the same Rothapfel on the street called Broadway in the city of New York.

In the history of moving pictures that is still to be written these letters from Rothapfel should find place. For "Roxey" has done more for pictures than pictures can ever do for him.

Thanhouser's First Release.

New Rochelle flared forth on the map of moving pictures when Thanhouser released his first picture—and Bert Adler wrote his first tradepaper advertisement. "The Actor's Child" was the title; release date March 15, 1910. "St. Elmo" was underlined for March 22.

Four stills were used by New York Motion Picture Company to advertise, in a page of space, as many Bison releases. Nowadays Clarence R. Yearsley uses a dozen stills to tell the story and advertise one First National on two pages of tradepaper advertising. The Infant is just that much grown and more sensible.

Panning the movies was a popular pastime ten years ago—as in 1920. We quote the remarks of Dr. Anna Shaw, whoever she was: "There should be a police woman at the entrance of every moving picture show and another inside. These places are the recruiting stations of vice." ("Doc" was also a "Reverend.")

Like the rest of her ilk, "Doc Ann" made no exceptions. She swept 'em all into the ash-heap and covered 'em with her apron. Note, also, the "policewoman's idea. Woman's suffrage (and suffering) was coming on—like prohibition—ten years ago and nobody seemed to realize it!

"Education, Science and Art and the Moving Picture" was the caption on the first educative department ever established by a moving picture tradepaper. "House Fly Actors Make Their Debut Upon the Screen" was the leading article. And there were other interesting educative film references.

The First Educative Department.

"Nick Carter, the Acrobat" (Eclair) indicated that the slippery detective, dear to millions, was being filmed in some of the aforesaid "dens of iniquity." We'll say for Nick we'd rather read one of his tales than to have heard "Doc" Shaw rave. (Bet that hurt!)

Pause also to remark that Essanay filmed "The Egg Trust" in 1910. Been generally revived lately. "Mexican Faith" (Essanay) was filmed to make things harder for Taft and Wilson later on. The synopsis set forth the "Greaser" as a very treacherous sort of a cactus.

Chris Taylor was signing Vitagraph publicity. The boys are not signing their stuff now-times, for some reason or other. Chris entered about three inches of matter in competition with Edison Notes, Essanay Notes, Bison Notes and Lubin Notes—and not a "Statement of Policy" in the lot.

Just to lend a dash of personal interest to this stuff—tell us what YOU were doing ten years ago. Something like this, for instance:

Lynde Denig, now writing publicity for Goldwyn, was on the staff of the Springfield Republican, a Massachusetts newspaper with national circulation.

Tell us about yourself.

W. K. H.

P. S.—Read that last line again.

This Is "Miss Jerry," Produced in 1894, the First Photoplay to Be Exhibited.

The pictures were a series of slides, following in quick succession, while someone recited the story of the play. "Miss Jerry" has been put into the Paramount Magazine and should be of great interest to picture fans, old and new.

"F. B. O., the Great Filmway," Explains Its Method of Feature Exploitation

A SPECIALLY notable fact in connection with the English exploitation of D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, "Broken Blossoms," is the fact that before the trade show has been arranged, Film Booking Offices (1919), Ltd., was able to secure the opinion of the leading film and dramatic critics at a press view held in its private theatre at 22 Soho Square, when forty of the leading English pressmen pronounced a unanimously eulogistic verdict.

The Times led off with the statement that "Broken Blossoms" is "the greatest achievement that stands to the credit of the silent stage — pictures of rare beauty which have rarely if ever been surpassed."

As this was achieved within two days after the arrival of the film in England, it is something of a record in press views.

"F. B. O." are also responsible for the highly successful launching of Clara Kimball Young's latest vehicle, "Eyes of Youth," which is breaking all previous records achieved by this star. The fame of Film Booking Offices (1919), Ltd., better known on the British side as "F. B. O., the Great Filmway," is an outstanding example of how scientific methods applied to film exploitation in Great Britain can secure the ultimate of financial results.

Under the managing directorship of Arthur and Albert Clozenberg, who have been closely associated with the film trade during the past eleven years, Film Booking Offices, Ltd., has made a close study of the most effective methods of putting a feature over. The two salient points in the policy have been scientific salesmanship and expert publicity. Having taken infinite pains to secure the most fully-equipped system of film distribution for Britain and the Isles, film exploitation plus the salesmanship and publicity referred to became an easy matter, and it is worthy of note that during the past two years their most prominent successes have occurred in connection with American productions

The unparalleled results achieved in Great Britain with the film version of ex-Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," which appeared in over 1,000 picture theatres, is famous in the history of the British trade. Starting off with private views given on two consecutive days in London West End picture theatres, to audiences numbering, among them, 400 of the leading members of Parliament, ambassadors, agents, admirals and generals as well as famous clerics, the Gerard film was screened before H. R. H. Prince Albert and thirty members of the House of Lords, while the lord mayors and the principal city officers of leading British cities, who had been invited to see it, sent in a long stream of testimonials to its value.

The W. J .Flynn Secret Service Serial, known in England as "The Eagle's Eye," launched by "F. B. O." under the title of "Count Bernstorff's Secrets," had a phenomenal run at every leading theatre, and the British press devoted nearly 400 columns to it. It was under their aegis that Essanay Chaplin Comedies achieved their supreme popularity in Britain, while the "Great Filmway" holds the record for bookings on features like "Raffles," "On Trial," "The Argyle Case," "Sherlock Holmes," the Bairnsfathers Cartoons, and well-known American productions.

Twice a week the "Great Filmway" issues its celebrated news picture film, "The Topical Budget," which is screened daily at most of the picture theatres in the United Kingdom.

The head office of "F. B. O." is situated in the hub of the London film-world at Soho Square. The premises consist of a modern eight-floored self-contained building, housing a staff of over 120 persons. There is a luxurious private theatre on the ground floor reserved for the use of exhibitors, and a second private theatre which is used for viewings, etc.

From the central office in London, the F. B. O. activities radiate in every direction of the United Kingdom, and the "Great Filmway" is linked up with nine branches situated at such central points as Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, Newcastle, Glasgow, Cardiff, Sheffield and Dublin. Each of the exchanges is equipped with travellers, private theatres, hire and despatch departments and the other impedimenta of an up-to-date exchange.

It is worthy of note that the governing director of Film Booking Offices, Ltd., Sir Edward Hulton, Baronet, is one of Britain's press magnates, being the owner of the Hulton Press, which operates eleven dailies and weeklies covering a circulation of 8,000,000 readers.

Film Booking Offices, Ltd., is prepared to pay spot cash for any acceptable production in hand.

Say, Now, Would You Think He Could Keep All These on "$30,000?"

Batavia Showman Is Willing to Build Community Theatre

OPPOSING the efforts of Harry Crosby to secure money for the erection of a community theatre in Batavia, N. Y., and offering to provide half the necessary capital for such a project, operate the theatre on a fifty-fifty basis and guarantee a return of 6 per cent. to subscribers to the fund, Nikitas Dipson, exhibitor, has carried his fight to the citizens with a large advertisement in the local newspaper. He explains that the statement is made because of the use of his name by Mr. Crosby at a recent meeting in Odd Fellows' Temple.

Mr. Dipson sets forth four general arguments why a community theatre running in opposition to his theatrical interests could not be financially successful. Among them is the charge that the moment the Crosby theatre was opened, exchanges would double the rentals of films and admission prices would have to soar. He gives figures to prove that Mr. Crosby's estimate of $20,000 for expenses is far from sufficient.

Mr. Dipson offers to turn over his new site on Main street for the erection of a community theatre, or to rebuild his Family Theatre on Jackson street and operate it on the community plan.

"I stand ready to give my experience, invest my own money and turn over my property to the community theatre plan," says Mr. Dipson in closing.

Hugh Ford Takes Company to Cuba.

Hugh Ford, with an entire company of Paramount Artcraft players headed by Thomas Meighan, has gone to Cuba to make a series of scenes for a new production about which little information has been given out beyond the fact that it promises to be one of the most notable to be made by Famous Players-Lasky in some time.

In the party, which went by rail to Key West and thence to Havana by boat, were Martha Mansfield, Frank Losee, Alfred Hickman, Warren Cook, Marie Shotwell, Maude Turner Gordon and Albert Gram, all members of the cast; Clara Beranger, who wrote the scenario; Hal Young, cameraman, and Joseph Boyle, assistant to Mr. Ford.

They will remain in Cuba about ten days and upon their return to the United States will go to one of the large army camps in the South for some more exteriors before coming to New York for the studio work.

Monkey Comedian in Rolin Comedy.

In "Flat Broke," the Rolin comedy which Pathe will release March 14, the little comedian "Snub" Pollard has a strange partner in fun in Jocko, the Rolin comedy monkey, who makes his first bow to the films. Jocko proves that he has a true sense of humor. Eddie Boland and Marie Mosquini display their talents in the laugh-making line, making "Flat Broke" the funniest comedy Rolin has produced to date.

Senator Capper Congratulates Kane.

The latest to extend the hand of friendship to the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation is Senator Capper of Kansas, one of the biggest publishers in the country and a well known political figure, having been formerly Governor of the Sunflower State. Senator Capper has written a letter from the national capital offering the wish that Mr. Kane's new venture be his "crowning success."

President Kane was associated with Senator Capper during his Kansas days when the film executive was a newspaper man on the Topeka Capital, one of the many organs owned by the Kansas publishers.

Baltimore Crowds Flock to Witness "In Old Kentucky"

REPORTS from all over the country indicate that there has been no let-up in the business being done by Anita Stewart's massive production, "In Old Kentucky." The latest has come from Baltimore in the form of a telegram from Louis A. De Hoff, manager of the New Theatre, where the picture opened on Monday, February 23.

Mr. De Hoff states that not only did "In Old Kentucky" break all records for his theatre, but is the most profitable production he has played in five years. He has extended the engagement a week.

Mr. De Hoff is entitled to credit because of the splendid exploitation he gave the production—pickaninny bands, trained jockeys on thoroughbred racing horses and girls costumed to look like Anita Stewart as Madge. An effective prologue preceded the picture and the stage setting was a work of art. A local singer scored with Anita Stewart's own song, "In Old Kentucky."

"In Old Kentucky" has opened at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, for an extended run. It will be presented in Philadelphia, Washington and Boston within the next few weeks.

List "Tarnished Reputations" as Pathe Feature March 14

"TARNISHED REPUTATIONS," a Leonce Perret production, starring Dolores Cassinelli, is announced by Pathe as the special feature for release of March 14. The production was directed by Mme. Alice Blache. Exhibitors are unanimous in praising the work of Dolores Cassinelli by virtue of her splendid emotoinal work in such box office successes as "The Virtuous Model," "The Right to Lie" and "The Web of Deceit." In "Tarnished Reputations" she has again been provided with the type of a role that gives her the greatest opportunities.

As with most Leonce Perret productions, the story evolves around but few characters. Albert Roscoe plays opposite Miss Cassinelli. George Deneubourg appears as a playwright and impresario. Ned Burton also has an important role.

It's "Dangerous to Men."

"Dangerous to Men" is the title under which Viola Dana's next Metro special production will be released. The picture is an adaptation of "Eliza Comes to Stay," a stage drama by H. V. Esmond, author of "When We Were Twenty-one" and other theatrical successes. In the process of translation to the screen, however, the character of Eliza has been developed on somewhat more sensational lines than planned by the dramatist, and the new title chosen by Metro officials was considered not only more applicable to the amplified story, but infinitely more valuable from the angle of the box office.

Dolly and Howard Spurr Are Exonerated of Charge of Desecrating the Sabbath

MISS DOLLY SPURR, head of the Mutual Theatre Company, operating the Indiana, Lyric and Royal-Grand theatres at Marion, Ind., and her brother, Howard Spurr, who is associated with her, were exonerated of a charge of desecrating the Sabbath by a jury in the Grant County circuit court at Marion last week. The charge against them resulted from the operation of the Lyric Theatre on Sunday, October 12, 1919.

The verdict of the jury, however, will have no bearing at this time on the Sunday show questions at Marion. Both Miss Spurr and her brother stated after their acquittal that no attempts will be made to reopen their theatres on Sunday until the legality of the city ordinance, prohibiting Sunday shows, and passed at a time when the Spurrs were trying to get Sunday exhibitions for their patrons, is tested.

Although the fate of the Sunday show question at Marion rests with a decision of a higher court on the legality of the ordinance, the verdict of acquittal by the jury is regarded as an important step gained in the fight for Sunday motion pictures.

Fourth Time Acquitted.

The exoneration of Miss Spurr and her brother marked the fourth time they have been acquitted on the same charge. In almost any other city one or two acquittals would have been enough to convince the most skeptical authorities that Sunday shows are not a violation of the law and that the people are demanding them, but the Marion officials, it seems, ignore the decisions.

"Although the acquittal fails to give us Sunday shows because of the existing ordinance, it is still a decided victory from a moral standpoint," said Miss Spurr in commenting on the case. "It is just another forward step gained in our fight to give the thousands of people of Marion what they want and what they should have—a harmless, clean Sunday recreation for the entire family."

There are still two cases pending against Miss Spurr on the violation of the city ordinance governing the Sunday shows, and it is on these cases that the legality of the ordinance will be tested.

Her Fight Began in 1914.

Miss Spurr's fight for Sunday opening started in 1914, when she opened the theatre, was arrested, appealed her case to the circuit court and there was acquitted. The same thing happened in 1916.

On October 12, 1919, she opened her theatre and when the authorities arrested her the enraged people threatened violence. Miss Spurr, herself, prevented rioting by appealing to the crowds to disband and go to their homes. Within the next few days 4,000 citizens petitioned the city administration to permit the Sunday opening.

The following Sunday, October 19, she opened her smallest theatre, charging no admission. More than 2,500 attended. She was not molested by the police. On October 26 she opened again, taking donations for the Roosevelt Memorial. It rained all day, but more than 5,000 people attended, donating a good-sized sum to the memorial fund.

On November 2 and 9, after the new ordinance providing for a jail sentence became effective, Miss Spurr did not open because her attorneys were not prepared. She did open a week or so later and was arrested and arraigned in the city court. She waived arraignment and appealed the case to the higher courts.

Miss Spurr's plucky fight at Marion aroused state and national interest, and many letters pledging her their moral and financial support were received from exhibitors, producers and exchange men throughout the country.

Advertisers at "Summernight Festival" Defy Cold and Royally Entertain Friends

THE grand summernight's festival of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Cafe Boulevard on the evening of February 27 took place on a cold evening, but after the affair was over every one present declared he had enjoyed a "hot time." Nearly a hundred members of the organization and their friends were present. When the Advertisers had finished with display copy of an intimate nature concerning themselves, they turned on their friends. Meantime the jazz band played and the laughing saxophone shrieked.

President Paul Gulick opened the gathering with dignity. Mr. Gulick always tries to be dignified. With universal blandness he gave one flash of quiet reserve and then Jerome Beatty jumped up. Mr Beatty, with Tom Wiley, Harry Reichenbach, George Landy and "Bill" Yearsley, had charge of the entertainment. He announced that they were there for fun. Then he introduced three mysterious guests, whose names were not announced, but who started the merriment going within a few minutes. After the three guests had finished with the crowd every one tried to make a speech, but Messrs Beatty, Reichenbach, Yearsley and Landy held the gathering in check. When one wasn't speaking another was, and each time a speech was made President Gulick was introduced under a new name.

A feature of the evening was a sketch in which Nat Rothstein. Paul Lazarus and Mr. Beatty were the stars. Lazarus and Beatty represented two publicity men sitting in a restaurant kicking against the world in general. Then entered Rothstein, who impersonated Arthur James. He preached a doctrine of mildness until someone mentioned a rival advertising expert, and then began a war of words. Another feature was the repartee indulged in by Harry Reichenbach and Charles Pettijohn and the stories told by the pair.

A. H. Blank, exchangeman and exhibitor from Des Moines, Iowa, and Sam Katz, of Chicago, were present, and after hearing themselves "panned" they got up and good naturedly returned the compliments. One of the features of the evening was the presentation of a pair of gold cuff buttons to Ben H. Atwell, of the Capitol Theatre.

Among those who attended the "festival" were Earl Gulick, H. H. Schnitzer, Victor M. Shapiro, Russell Mitcheltree, Sam D. Palmer, William Mulligan, Frank Hyman, Mark Larkin, W. H. Leahy, J. R. Quirk, Jack Alicoate, Edgar O. Brooks, Phil Ryan, Frank Duffy, J. E. Storey, J. I. Greene, H. B. Crooker, W. E. Milligan, C. F. Chandler, S. F. Clark, J. J. Craven, Paul M. Sarazan, Terence S. Reiss, Sig Schlager, A. L. Selig, Nat G. Rothstein, Hugo Mayer, Julius A. Louirs, P. A. Parsons, Sam Katz, A. H. Blank, Joe Dannenberg, Harry H. Lightman Visits New York; Buys Two Arrow Westerns

A VISITOR to the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation recently was M. A. Lightman, president of Criterion Film Service, Atlanta. He reports that the greatest demand in the South is for red blooded stories where adventure and daring predominate.

Mr. Lightman is well known to exhibitors in his territory, and during the past two years has built up his exchange to a point where it is a big factor in the independent field.

Two of the subjects which he purchased from Arrow for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina are "Fool's Gold," a six reeler starring Mitchell Lewis, with Florence Turner and Evelyn Brent, and "The Desert Scorpion," a six-reeler, with Edmund F. Cobb and Vida Johnson.

"Oriental College Boys and Co-Eds."

The Burton Holmes release for February 22, released through the Famous-Players-Lasky, is "Oriental College Boys and Co-Eds." In this picture we visit a Philippine university. The principal building of the university isa wonderfully beautiful structure of classic design, typifying the high standard of education therein obtainable. Here you are introduced to undergraduates of both sexes; you see the cadets of the university being put through their military manoeuvres, and the girls playing all sorts of American games and out-of-door sports. You also see the pupils of the normal school in some of the most interesting branches of manual training, especially in the branch of art industrial training, the boys making baskets and the peculiar heelless slippers of the Philippines called "Chinelas," popular as house slippers among the Philippino ladies. The manual training of the girls is principally present in the markets of the civilized drawn-work, especially sought after at devoted to the far-famed embroideries and world, because of the war-time cessation of this kind of work in the one-time busy European centers where lace and embroidery and drawn-work were the staples of export. This mingling with the "Oriental College Boys and Co-Eds" will be an eye-opener to those who do not know of the wonderful educational facilities to be found in the Philippines.

This series of six is said to be full of action of the sort demanded by lovers of thrilling westerns. The titles are "Squatters' Rights," "The Trail's End," "When Lad Came Home," "On the High Card," "A Modern Lochinvar," "The Wildcatter."

Greenwich Villagers to Have Film Theatre All Their Own

GREENWICH VILLAGE, New York City, will have its own motion picture theatre soon, negotiations having been completed whereby the Sheridan Realty Company has obtained a long-term lease from the Rhinelander Real Estate Company on a triangular plot of ground bounded by West Twelfth street, Seventh avenue and Greenwich street.

Despite the leaning of villagers toward a brevity of everything but speech the program will not be monopolized by short subjects. Feature pictures will be presented to the accompaniment of a large orchestra and vocal and instrumental selections. Here, producers will probably try out their picturizations of George Bernard Shaw and Ibsen. The theatre will seat 2,500.

The Sheridan Realty Corporation has just been formed by Max Spiegel, Sol Brill and William F. Rafferty. Mr. Spiegel is vice-president of the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation which controls the various Mark Strand theatres; Mr. Brill is a theatre owner and Mr. Rafferty is a banker with theatrical interests.

Many Simultaneous Showings on Semon's "Grocery Clerk."

BOSTON and Chicago are adding their "day and date" approval to that of New York in behalf of Vitagraph's latest Larry Semon comedy, "The Grocery Clerk." Vitagraph reports that the number of simultaneous showings of this picture establishes a record.

On the basis of its advance bookings, Larry Semon Comedies hereafter are likely to abandon completely the rule of exclusive first runs. "The Grocery Clerk" is appearing day and date in nine of the chief downtown theatres of Boston, and in all the theatres controlled by the two chief chains in Chicago.

The same thing happened in New York, when the Loew circuit set nine prints of the comedy to work, beginning on Washington's birthday, in its twenty principal theatres of that city.

C. W. Sawin, Vitagraph's branch manager at Boston, reports that the comedy is appearing there this week simultaneously in the following big downtown theatres: Keith's Boston Theatre, Loew's Orpheum Theatre, Loew's Globe, Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia, Gordon's Washington Street Olympia, Lowrie's Modern Theatre, Lowrie's Beason Theatre, the St. James and the Star theatres.

In Chicago the comedy is having day and date first runs in the theatres controlled by Lubliner & Trinz and the Ascher circuit. Each of these two chains control fifteen large film playhouses in Chicago. Even with the maximum number of prints playing on the day and date system, the comedy is booked for a long, continuous run in order to cover that territory.

Wesley Barry with Tourneur.

Jesse L. Lasky Announces Purchase of Rights to Several Plays and Novels

AUGUSTUS THOMAS'S celebrated drama, "The Witching Hour," in which the late John Mason scored his great success as a legitimate actor, heads an imposing list of plays and novels recently acquired for early production in motion pictures, the purchase of which is announced by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The other plays included in the list are "A Celebrated Case," by D'Ennery and Cormon; "What Happened to Jones," by George Broadhurst; and "The Shulamite," by Edward Knoblauch. The books purchased for picturization are "The Conquest of Canaan," Booth Tarkington's famous novel, which is considered by many second only to "A Gentleman from Indiana" in popularity among his works, and "The Husbands of Edith," by George Barr McCutcheon.

"What Happened to Jones" and "The Husbands of Edith" will be used respectively as starring vehicles for Bryant Washburn and Wallace Reid, and all the others will be produced as Paramount Artcraft Specials.

Has Spiritualistic Theme.

"The Witching Hour" is probably one of the strongest dramatic works which American playgoers have seen. It was first produced by Charles Frohman at the Hackett Theatre, New York, in 1907, and ran almost two full seasons. Coming at a time when spiritualism was little talked of, it was for this reason perhaps the more startling. The play was fictionized and published by Harper & Bros. and Grosset & Dunlap.

"The Conquest of Canaan" was published by Harper's in 1905 and later republished by A. L. Burt. The simple story of country life and politics had a tremendous appeal and the book attained a phenomenal sale for a work of fiction. It has never been presented before the footlights.

"What Happened to Jones" is a sample of George Broadhurst in his best mood of light, farcical comedy. The play is of the general style of "Why Smith Left Home," which in its Paramount Artcraft version furnished a splendid role for Bryant Washburn. It was first produced in London some twenty years ago, and soon after in New York. It was revived here for a short run in 1917-18.

Back to the Battle of Fontenoy.

"A Celebrated Case" deals with the days of the Pretender in France, centering at the time of the battle of Fontenoy. Following its premiere in London in 1878, the play was produced in New York in the early '80s by A. M. Palmer at the Union Square Theatre, with Charles Coughlan and Sarah Jewett in leading roles. It was revived in 1898 and again in 1915 at the Empire Theatre.

"The Shulamite" was founded on a book written by Alice and Claude Askew, authors of "Eve and the Law," "Anna of the Plains" and "The Etonian." It was published in this country by Brentano's in 1907. Dramatized by Edward Knoblauch, it was presented at the Savoy Theatre, London, in 1906.

"The Husbands of Edith," from the pen of George Barr McCutcheon, was published by Dodd, Mead & Company in 1908 and later republished by A. L. Burt. It has a distinct vein of light comedy suited, it is said, to Wallace Reid. Mr. McCutcheon's "Black Is White" was recently produced for Paramount Artcraft by Thomas H. Ince with Dorothy Dalton in the stellar role, and his "The City of Masks," starring Robert Warwick, is now being produced at the Lasky studio.

To Handle Comedy Art Program.

Contracts have been closed between Sol Lesser and the Alexander Film Corporation whereby the latter will do the distributing in the New York and northern New Jersey districts for the new Comedy Art program, which consists of a two-reel novelty and a single reel comedy each week. Release date on the initial release is set for March 22.

Battle for Open Sunday in New Jersey Will Be Fought at Trenton on March 8

THE battle for the liberalizing of the blue laws of New Jersey and the enactment of a law which will permit the localities of the state to decide whether or not the motion picture theatres will be open Sunday afternoons and evenings will be fought out at a hearing in the State House in Trenton on Monday, March 8. The thousands of picture patrons who are attending the 400 motion picture theatres of the state every day are giving splendid co-operation to Dr. H. C. Hespie, representing the exhibitors, and to the other branches of the motion picture industry, which have been mobilized for the fight.

The Motion Picture Bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce at a recent meeting unanimously indorsed the bill which has been introduced by Senator Albin Smith, of Passaic. This bureau is interested in the southern section of the state. Many chambers of commerce and boards of trade in New Jersey cities which in other years have taken no action on the Sunday opening bill have come out unreservedly this year for the abolition of the stringent Sunday laws.

Reports Are Encouraging.

Reports received from all sections of the state are encouraging for the success of the bill. Employers and others in large industrial centers declare that the opening of the theatres will do much toward allaying the unrest which is engendered when the workers see men and women automobiling and playing golf Sundays while they are deprived by law from any amusements. This has been a potent argument in bringing to the support of the bill many localities which in other years have opposed Sunday opening.

Another very effective argument with men who are open to conviction has been the experience of the New York cities which opened the theatres after the enactment of the local option Sunday law in that state last year. Reports compiled by William P. Capes, director of the New York State Conference of Mayors, show that in the cities which adopted Sunday opening there was a marked falling off in the number of cases in police courts. This feature of the benefits of Sunday opening has won the support of many ministers who had opposed the Sunday opening.

It has also been found that the women are very much in favor of Sunday opening where it has been in vogue. Men who formerly found their recreations away from their families, in gambling and other ways, now take their families to the motion picture theatres.

The theatres have been using the screen in arousing the people and gaining their support for Sunday opening.

Appropriation Asked for Circulating Dental Film

THERE is now before Congress an amendment to the Legislative Appropriation Bill to provide for printing and circulating in the states the dental film, named "Come Clean," prepared by the army during the war. The amendment carries an appropriation of $15,000. Part of this sum will be used by the Bureau of Education, if the item is approved by Congress, to print copies from the negative now owned by the Government and the remainder for paying the expenses of Major L. G. Mitchell, who was responsible for and directed the preparation of the film. Major Mitchell will be engaged by the Bureau of Education and sent to the various states to co-operate with the State institutions in promoting better health through care of the teeth.

The film, although prepared for army use, shows by means of pictures and diagrams the proper care of children's teeth. It is woven about a story of keen interest. An exciting fist fight is one of the most interesting features of the picture.

The School Hygiene Association and the Society on Oral Hygiene have approved the film and requested Congress to appropriate the money for its use in the states.

Pathe Appoints J. E. Storey Assistant Exchange Director

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has announced the appointment of J. E. Storey as assistant director of exchanges. Mr. Storey, who has been in charge of the western district for Pathe, has already assumed the duties of his new position. He has been associated in the film business with the Pathe director of exchanges, Elmer R. Pearson, for several years, and, like Mr. Pearson, he enjoyed a long commercial experience in organization and salesmanship before entering the motion picture industry.

John E. Storey

Appointed assistant to Elmer E. Pearson, Director of Exchanges for Pathe.

Mr. Storey was for several years in the engineering and operating departments of the Union Pacific Railroad and became chief clerk of the general manager. He was later made secretary to the president of the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient Railroad. Given control of the land development of the railroad, he is reputed to have sold more land by mail than any other man in the country.

Border troubles resulted in a receivership for the railroad and Mr. Storey joined the selling organization of V. L. S. E. in Kansas City. He became branch manager there for the Kleine System and held that post until he became manager of the Pathe branch in Kansas City. His exceptional work brought him promotion to the post of manager of the western district last October.

International Elects Hobart.

At a special meeting of the board of directors of the International Film Service Company, Inc., held Tuesday, March 2, Henry M. Hobart was elected vice-president of the company.

Mr. Hobart has been general manager of the International for a number of months and his election to this important office, while coming a little sooner than anticipated, was predestined by the excellent work he has done during his short connection with the company. He came to the International from the Hearst Magazine, of which he was general manager.

Training of the Deaf Shown in Ford Weekly No. 191

THE Ford Educational Weekly, No. 191, "Broken Silence," treats of a subject unlike those usually presented in these pictures. It shows how deaf children are taught to talk, read, write, and become as thoroughly educated as any normal child. Scenes were photographed in a school for deaf children where the class room work was depicted during the hours of patient instruction in talking, singing and rhythm.

By careful training, the unfortunates are taught to read the lips of others and then to make their own lips duplicate the motions. Next they are taught to control their breath, so that they can not only make the movements with their lips, but also sounds, and finally to talk. They learn to read and write and solve difficult problems in arithmetic, until in point of knowledge, they are on a par with other children.

One of the most interesting parts of the picture concerns the method by which the pupils are taught to "feel" music through the vibrations communicated by the keys of a piano on which their fingers are placed. Much the same system is employed in teaching them to talk. As they place their hands on a violin or piano to "feel" the music, so they learn to talk through feeling the vibrations of the vocal cord.

Fox News Reel Has Good Material.

Among the items in Fox News No. 42, released Feb. 28, is a record of the day in Berlin when the workmen stormed the Reichstag building causing a counter-attack by troops in which many persons were killed and scores of others injured. A Fox News cameraman was on the scene as the mob gathered and he obtained excellent views of the rioters being harangued by their leaders to attack the building, of the troops on the steps with their machine guns covering the crowds, and of Frau Luise Zietz, the independent member of the Reichstag, who left the building and called on the people to drive out the legislators who were passing an unpopular factory law.

Another extraordinary subject consists of views of the first woman to leap from an aeroplane with a parachute. These were taken at San Francisco and afford exciting glimpses of the daring woman from the moment she left the machine 2,000 feet in the air until she landed.

On the picturesque side are scenes from the Carnival at Nice, the most famous of all European fetes. These show the many beautifully decorated floats, from which flowers are thrown by the thousand.

Still another subject in the release is the Cornell University Spring Day Festival held at the Hotel Commodore. New plays, ballet and side shows were part of the fete. The students and alumni had transported from Ithaca three relics dear to the hearts of all who attend or have been graduated from the University. These relics are a much-used street car, the toboggan slide at Beebe Lake, and a famous bat.

"Big Four" Will Stick to Percentage, But Exhibitors Have Choice of Rental

IN answer to an inquiry regarding the report that the United Artists Corporation is now accepting contracts on its productions without insisting on a percentage arrangement, Hiram Abrams stated that the company is as firmly convinced as ever of the equity and fairness of percentage, and that in accepting contracts from exhibitors without the per centage arrangement he is simply making it possible for theatres to show the "Big Four" pictures, who are not convinced that a percentage plan is to their best interest.

"Some time ago I stated that we are headed for straight percentage, and I am more convinced than ever that the whole motion picture business will be on that basis before long. At that time I pointed out that forward movements in the industry had been opposed from the beginning by certain factions among exhibitors who did not realize that they were fighting against their own best interests, and you can put down as an absolute forecast of fact, that in not so remote a future the same men who are today opposing percentage will turn down a booking offer of a flat rental and demand percentage.

"We are playing percentage engagements all over the country; we shall do all in our power to encourage percentage, and our entire organization is being built with an eye to the day when straight percentage will be in full force. If, however, an exhibitor is not convinced that he will benefit by the percentage method, if he wants to take the entire risk of an engagement himself, if he is going to be satisfied with the limitations of flat rental, if he is going to let the real showmen exploit and profit all around him on the percentage basis while he takes the older method with a "good enought for me" attitude, that will have to be his loss. If he wants to play our pictures that way, we'll let him, because, though he is the equal beneficiary under the percentage plan, if he will not take the extra profits, it is not for us to go against his will in the matter.

"An interesting number of theatres are playing our pictures on a percentage basis, and they will receive every encouragement, for I really believe that the future development of motion pictures exhibition is in the hands of the men who are sure enough of their own ability as showmen to go out and get the bigger profits that come to initiative and theatrical genius.

"The best argument for percentage is the exhibitor who has played it."

"Down on the Farm," Sennett's Five Reel Comedy, To Be Released by United Artists

MACK SENNETT'S newest comedy creation, "Down on the Farm," will be released some time in April by United Artists Corporation. Hiram Abrams announces that arrangements had been completed with E. M. Asher, personal representative for Mr. Sennett, whereby "Down on the Farm" would be made available to the theatres of the country through United Artists Corporation.

It has been known right along that United Artists would not confine itself to the distribution of the productions of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith exclusively, but would distribute the occasional big picture that came to the open market for specialization in distribution.

The announcement of the release of "Down on the Farm," following so closely on the announcement of the Doris Keane picture, "Romance," indicates that United Artists Corporation will have a release list of wide variety in addition to the productions of its four principals.

Has All Elements of Melodrama.

Every resource of the large Mack Sennett studios and farm in the suburbs of Los Angeles contributed to the remarkable results achieved by Mr. Sennet in the production. Visitors to that institution know that there is a farm on the fifty acres that comprise the "lot." It is a regular honest-to-goodness farm with everything that a farm boasts.

"Down on the Farm" opens when the champion rooster of the ranch puts the sun to work early in the morning of what proves to be the busiest little day ever experienced on any farm with results that are thrilling, comic, hilarious, farcical and furiously funny. Thrills are divided by laughter, suspense is relaxed in grins, and dramatic action of grave significance is interrupted by typical Mack Sennett comedy episodes.

The production quality is derived from its unique blending of many elements—comedy and serious moments, satire and straight drama, character delineation and grotesqueries.

Though the plot is melodramatic and concerns the romance of a pretty maiden of rustic life, a menacing mortgage, a villainous landlord and a harrassed and beautiful wife, the treatment will be found as new as it is refreshing and different.

Maryland Exhibitors' League Now Favors Sunday Opening

THE Exhibitors League, of Maryland, now favors the opening of moving picture theatres on Sundays. The resolution recently passed by this body of exhibitors, proclaiming a state of neutrality on the question, was rescinded at a special meeting called to order by President Eugene B. McCurdy at the league headquarters on Thursday, February 26.

About thirty-two members, including officers and directors, were present. Postcards were sent out with the letters announcing the meeting, and those who could not attend were asked to state how they stood and return the card. It was found that a great majority were in favor of Sunday opening. The motion was carried by a large majority, with Franke Durkee and Julius Goodman voting "no." The action taken applies to Baltimore city only.

An amendment has now been attached to the George D. Iverson ,Jr., Blue Law repealing bill, it is understood, which eliminates the provision for allowing the moving picture theatres to open on Sundays. The House Judiciary Committee at Annapolis still had the bill on Tuesday, February 24.

A new bill was introduced in the House by Mr. Iverson, of Baltimore city on February 24, which gives permission for moving picture theatres to open after 2 p. m. on Sundays, but which makes no reference to any other business on Sunday and will apply to Baltimore city only. It is thought probable that a yearly state license will be included in this bill.

The chairman of the State Board of Moving Picture Censors of Maryland has been chosen to succeed Charles E. Harper by Governor Albert C. Ritchie, and he is not an exhibitor. Dr. George Heller, a Democrat, will succeed Mr. Harper.

Americanization Tie-up with Schools Begins with Speech by C. C. Pettijohn

THE start of the movement of tying up schools and colleges with the Americanization campaign now being conducted by the motion picture industry was made when Charles C. Pettijohn, vice-president of the Selznick Enterprises, spoke to 600 students of the New York University at the Judson Memorial Church last week. Mr. Pettijohn represented Lewis J. Selznick, who had been invited to address the student body, but who was not in New York at that time. The address concluded a program which included the first showing of the university's three-reel propaganda picture produced under the supervision of I. Martin Stern.

"Some time ago," Mr. Pettijohn said, "the government officials became convinced of the value of the motion picture as a means of influencing the public. Although the newspapers aided the government in every way possible, impressions obtained through the reading of a newspaper can hardly be compared with those obtained by a motion picture. This is because one newspaper explains an issue in one way and still another newspaper explains it in an altogether different way. The motion picture can explain a movement in but one way, just as it happens, and the best way."

Not Students, But Teachers.

Mr. Pettijohn explained how former Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane had invited the leading film producers to join him in what was to be known as the Americanization movement. He told the students about the various meetings that were held in Washington and praised the spirit of the film men who had expressed themselves as being willing to co-operate with Mr. Lane in every manner possible.

"As a representative of one of the largest film companies in America, which produced the first Americanization picture, 'The Land of Opportunity,' I am asking you and every other college and place of education in America to use your ability in co-operating with the government and the film industry in the furtherance of the Americanization movement."

One Reel Chaplin Going Big.

Tower Film Corporation reports continued popularity on "Lord Helpus," the one-reel Charlie Chaplin special, formerly entitled "Cruel, Cruel Love," and now being released on the independent market by Tower Film Corporation.

"Lord Helpus" is said to be a hilarious comedy with plenty of action and laughs.

Good Will, Oratory, Wit and Jazz Tunes Feature Gathering of Indiana Managers

EXCHANGE managers, film salesmen and bookers joined in banquet festivity at the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce on Saturday night, February 21, at the first annual banquet and get-together meeting of the Indiana Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, which was organized in 1918 to further the interests of the motion picture industry throughout the state.

Paul Allison, manager of the Doll-Van Film Corporation and president of the board, was toastmaster and treated his co-workers with some of the most eloquent oratory that the local film men had ever heard. He explained that it is the wish and effort of the board of exchange managers in Indiana to establish a spirit of good will among all.

The other features of the evening included toasts and stories by Ralph Abbott, manager of the Universal exchange; Claude Penrod, manager of Fox; Samuel Sax, of Select; Robert Schrader, of Pathe; two original poems by Floyd Brown, manager of the First National exchange; a new dance by George W. Wilson, manager of Bee Hive; music and songs by a jazz orchestra and stories by the whole bunch.

Those who attended were Floyd Brown, M. J. Doody and H. C. Knox, of First National; P. S. Allison, E. A. Sipe, T. C. Baker and Morris M. Jacobs, of Doll-Van; Robert S. Schrader, S. C. Williams, A. V. Barr, Paul McDaniel and A. W. Carrick, of Pathe; C. E. Penrod, Edwin Booth, S. H. Abrahams, J. G. Wilson, V. A. Fuller and H. J. Bailey, of Fox; R. W. Abbott, Sam Rosenfelt, Cleave Adams, F. Cauldwell and Earl Penrod, of Universal; George W. Wilson, Ross Smith, G. C. Parrish and D. L. Hammer, of Bee Hive; Samuel Sax, Dudley Williston and J. Smith, of Select; F. B. Cobb, of Robertson-Cole; C. C. Wallace, of Famous Players-Lasky; Wade W. Willman, Metro; Tony Clotz, Vitagraph; Louis B. Gouldan, Celebrated Players; E. M. Miles, National Pictures Theatres, Inc., and T. J. Macevoy, of "Mickey."

Frohman Company's "The Invisible Ray" Will Be Released on State Right Basis

THE Frohman Amusement Corporation announces its decision to release on a state right basis the fifteen-episode serial entitled "The Invisible Ray," in which Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherrill are starred. Eight episodes have been completed and the corporation has had a difficult problem to solve, in the determination as to the method of release.

Several offers for the negative rights were placed with the corporation, but they were balanced by the numerous telegraphic and other communications from state right buyers making offers for territorial rights. William L. Sherrill, president of the corporation, however, determined that the policy of his agency, pursued ever since its organization, justified, if it did not compel, that the serial be released through independent or state right exchanges.

Mr. Sherrill states that the offers he received for the negative rights for United States and Canada guaranteed substantial profit, but that it was made easy for him to take his chances on realizing as much or more through the state rights market, by the fact that the entire foreign rights were sold to J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., for a substantial sum of money. Announcement as to the sales made will not be published until after all the territories in the United States have been disposed of.

The advertising matter will be of a decided variety and original in its creation. In addition to the usual forms of lithographs and lobby displays, there will be an exploitation book of unusual proportions and containing "startling" material. A form of advertising novelty is also being prepared that will be a valuable addition to the other advertising matter.

Jesse J. Goldburg, general manager, under whose direct charge the exploitation will be conducted, believes that "The Invisible Ray" offers as great opportunities for innovations as any other serial ever produced.

Matthias Radin to Devote All Time to State-Righting

UPON his return from California last week, Matthias Radin announced his intention of giving his entire attention to the state-righting of high-class pictures of merit. With this object in view he has secured complete control of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., having purchased the stock held by his partner, Jacques Tyrol, vice-president of the corporation, who has resigned. Under the new arrangement, Mr. Radin assumes entire charge of Tyrad's affairs.

In order that nothing will interfere with his determination to give strict and sole attention to the product bought by his company for the state right market, Mr. Radin has arranged with the Famous Pictures Sales Company to take over the distribution of Tyrad's releases in the New York territory, which means that the local houses heretofore supplied direct by the Tyrad organization will be taken care of by the aforementioned company, which has been handling the Albany and Buffalo territory for Tyrad under the supervision of Charles P. Saunders.

Times Good for State Right Men.

"A general era of prosperity is being enjoyed by state right men throughout the country," said Mr. Radin in speaking of his new plans. "Perhaps at no time in the history of the industry have so many independent distributors met with such success as at present. There is a demand for pictures, and more pictures, not of the ordinary and mediocre type, but photoplays which are different; that contain an unusual twist; something that attention can be called to by special advertising and exploitation.

During the six weeks Mr. Radin spent on the road he visited Dallas, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco and Los Angeles in the interest of his company, disposing of territories on the Johnny Dooley Comedies.

J. D. Tippett Arrives Here to Establish New Link in International Studio Chain

JOHN D. TIPPETT has arrived in New York from London. The direct cause the film executive's present visit to America is to begin at once the building of studios for the production of big feature photoplays, to be co-related with the production of pictures in London and on the Continent. While one or two American film producing companies have inaugurated the production of pictures in Europe, Mr. Tippett's contemplated program is the first evidence of an international film producing organization initiated by England.

Mr. Tippett laid the ground-work for one of the biggest motion picture studios yet erected in London before his departure for America, and he intends at once to consult the foremost studio architects in connection with the building of the American producing factories.

In speaking of his plans for exchanging pictures produced in America for those produced in Europe under a single management, Mr. Tippett said:

"The motion picture industry is today broader and more effective in its direct appeal to the masses than ever before. The war has developed the usefulness of the motion picture, both as an entertainment and as an educational agency, to a point which could not normally have been attained in two decades. The screen has also revealed through the recent crisis in the world's affairs its potent influence upon mankind as the one dependable universal language. It is my purpose to exert this influence of the screen to its fullest possible extent—to bring the peolpe of England, indeed Europe, and America together via the screen, with the view of having a better knowledge of and sympathy with each other.

"As the screen is universal in its appeal, so, I believe, we should produce more stories with a universal background. Instead of adhering to one locale, whether it be Los Angeles, London, Rome or Paris, I intend to produce several feature photoplays, parts of which will be produced in all those centres. That is one reason for my plan to build studios throughout the world. While my immediate purpose is to have three producing plants in London, Paris and Los Angeles, the purpose will later be expanded, so that in time we will be producing in South America and Japan as well, thus constituting the first actual international producing organization in the history of the cinema.

To Produce in Orient Also.

"I have in the past exploited the productions of other companies through offices located in all the principal cities of Europe and the Orient. I am now launching a producing campaign of my own, because I feel that the present producers are not taking full advantage of the unlimited and ever-widening opportunities for universal service through the silent drama."

Mr. Tippett is stopping at the Hotel Astor, and will go from here to Los Angeles, where he will inspect the various producing plants before his return to London.

Work the Psychic Hunch and Guess Who Is This Golden Girl with Azure Eyes

WHO is she? That was the question exhibitors and the trade generally were asking this week, following an announcement that a new star had been secured by Realart Pictures Corporation.

The name of the young woman was withheld in order that the trade might make its guesses. For several weeks past Realart has been conducting a teaser campaign on this subject, directed to its branch managers. In successive letters, meager information had been given about the new star and managers have been trying to identify her.

Advertisements just published give glimpses of the new star in various poses and limited data concerning her career. Her eyes, mouth, profile, hair, legs and arms were presented under the caption, "Can You Put Her Together?"

Her birthplace is stated to be Pennsylvania and her age is given as "permanently eighteen." Her eyes are described as deep blue, her hair "very golden," and her height as a "a quarter past five." She is said to have been discovered by Cecil De Mille "not so long ago," and among her qualities are listed striking beauty, winning personality, studiousness and natural ability.

Already Has Large Following.

Officials of Realart Pictures Corporation expressed great satisfaction over the signing of the new star, which, it was said, was effected in competition with several other producing organizations, among them one of the most powerful in the motion picture business. The news follows announcements that Realart has arranged with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation for R. A. Walsh Productions and Charles Miller Productions, both of which were announced within the last six weeks.

"In obtaining this new star," said President Morris Kohn, "Realart has simply 'put one over.' We have jumped into a competitive market and carried off a prize that a number of others were seeking—only we got there first. This new star already has a large following. She is a thoroughly experienced and capable actress. Her beauty, personality and ability have brought her to her present position and are going to carry her to greater heights under Realart.

"On the clues that are furnished the trade is given a guess. Out of favorite actresses considered worthy of stardom let exhibitors select five they feel lead the list. Then let them put the list away and when the young lady's name is published, bring it out and see if she isn't at the head or near it."

Fine Characterization in "Everybody's Business."

"Everybody's Business," says W. H. Productions Co., has an appeal for everyone. There is plenty of action and thrilling situations.

Charles Richman, who is starred with Grace Calhoun in this six-reel feature being released on the state rights market, is said to have done some of the most notable work of his motion picture career in this production.

Tourneur Completes "Treasure Island."

Maurice Tourneur has finished filming Robert Louis Stevenson's story, "Treasure Island," and is now at work on his second Stevenson picture; which he is adapting from "The Pavilion on the Links," one of the author's short stories.

Completing "Daring Duchess" Edith Roberts' Latest "Big U"

HARRY FRANKLIN, who directed Edith Roberts' latest starring vehicle, "The Daring Duchess," is now putting the finishing touches on the picture at Universal City.

When Edith Roberts and Frank Mayo were co-starred in "Lasca," the actress scored such a hit in the role of the Mexican girl that requests began to pour in from all over the country for another photodrama showing Edith Roberts as an outdoor girl. In the meantime, Miss Roberts' next feature, "The Triflers," was released. This comedy drama showed the petite star in a society role, and she was even better liked in the drawing room than on the range. More requests came from exhibitors and theatregoers for a photoplay which would permit Edith to wear pretty clothes and assume the society swagger.

In order to meet all these requests General Manager Tarkington Baker asked the scenario department for a story that would afford Miss Roberts an opportunity to combine the outdoor and parlor elements, and "The Daring Duchess," written especially for the charming star, was the result.

Prominent in Miss Roberts' support are Katherine Kirkham, Leota Lorraine, Virginia Ware, Harold Miller, Rudolph Christians, Leonard Clapham, Ogden Crane, Stanhope Wheatcroft and Henry Woodward.

Shift Caused in Selznick's Releases for March by "Flu"

OWING to some delay due to the epidemic of influenza, blizzards and other disturbances that have somewhat upset studio schedules, Select Pictures is forced to make a revision of its release dates for March sent out last week. There will be no delay in the delivery of any of Selznick Pictures, but the dates have been changed around somewhat in order to meet recent conditions.

"Youthful Folly" with Olive Thomas, directed by Alan Crosland, will be released March 8; "The Woman God Sent," a special featuring Zena Keefe and directed by Larry Trimble, March 22; "A Fool and His Money," with Eugene O'Brien, directed by Robert Ellis, March 29.

Exhibitor Will Shape the Future of the Screen, Says Maurice Tourneur

THE man who produced "The Blue Bird"—long before Maeterlinck came to America—has something to say about present day picture production and what may be expected unless the type of production is soon changed. He says it in the following article, giving credit to the picture showman as the real hope of the moving picture industry.

Maurice Tourneur, who produced "The White Heather," "Treasure Island," "The Whip," and other plays of impressive melodramatic force, should be entitled to an opinion and his opinion should carry weight. When men contribute so much to an industry as Mr. Tourneur has done his opinions are to be seriously considered. Mr. Tourneur writes:

"Conditions are leading us rapidly to the point where the exhibitor is going to be king. The days of the program are numbered—the days when the exhibitor had to take what he was given are gone.

"Now stars, directors and authors are going into the business for themselves, releasing their product on the open market. The exhibitor has the power to select the pictures he wants and discard the others

The State of Public Mind.

"Being armed with that power of being the supreme judges between the producer and the public are the exhibitors of America going to raise the standard of motion pictures? The day for such productions as 'Intolerance,' 'The Woman God Forgot,' 'War Brides' and 'The Blue Bird' seems past—we are now producing the more modern themes, such as 'Male and Female,' 'Scarlet Days' and 'The Life Line.'

"The public is evidently remaining faithful to its old love of punches and thrills. It has not yet been convinced that there may be more of a thrill in a glance from one character to another in the proper situation than in the wrecking of a railroad train. Has public taste not changed since 1912—do they still want 'The Perils of Pauline' and 'The Mysteries of Myra'?

"Under the old program system, exhibitors had to take what they were given, which was possibly a good thing for those days. Cheap admissions, cheap theatres, cheap advertising, daily changes and cheap exhibitors did not allow for much originality. The man who opened his show with a 'Broncho Billy' Western used 'The Passion Play' for the feature and closed with a Chaplin comedy was considered not at all out of the usual.

New Men at the Helm.

"Only a few of these exhibitors have survived. In their place have come men with a sense of artistic refinement; with advertising ability, the judgment of showmen. And, above all, they have a good business sense.

Every radical change that has come into the industry has been brought about either directly or indirectly by the exhibitor. The multiple-reel feature, the elimination of worthless stars, and all the rest of the changes. We have heard this producer and that producer claim that he brought about the open booking policy, but it was the exhibitors that abolished the program system.

"And now that the exhibitor is the final word of authority, will he cleanse the market of those pictures which are reflecting ridicule on the industry by every thoughtful man and woman? It has often been said that nobody knows what the public wants—not even the public itself.

"The book publishers insist that they are continually asked for better stories, and that the days of the old yellow-back novels are gone forever. A higher class of literature is being sought than in years past.

Showmen Are the Power.

"When a few years ago I presented Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" for public approval, it was praised by the critics in laudatory phrases, but after it had been run in the larger theatres it was practically lost, because the managers of the smaller houses considered it too high-brow for their patrons. Since then I have made such pictures as 'Sporting Life,' 'The Life Line' and 'The White Heather,' which are being more widely shown.

"Had I continued making pictures like the 'Blue Bird' they wouldn't have made any money, which is not so important, but they would not have been shown, which is the main thing for a producer.

"The exhibitor, I am certain, is going to be the power that will raise the standard of motion pictures. Just so long as we continue producing and exhibiting the sort of pictures that are occupying the screen today, will the thinking public continue to ridicule them. And it is, after all, the thinking public that counts.

"By elevating the standard of the screen we will not only have a more substantial following, but a larger following than could be possible under the present day conditions."

Manager H. W. Vance Makes Laurier Theatre a Success

AFTER two months under the management and control of H. W. Vance, the Laurier Theatre, Hull, Quebec, has become a very successful enterprise. For a number of years this house had been a white elephant and eventually the theatre was only operated on Sundays.

The theatre had been controlled by a rather large syndicate of Hull citizens and even their united efforts did not result in the obtaining of a comfortable share of support. The theatre changed hands just before Christmas and was remodeled throughout.

The house had been known as the Odeon Theatre, but this name was changed in memory of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, one of Canada's greatest statesmen. A handsome lobby replaced a store in the building and about $2,500 was spent for new projection equipment, including two Powers 6B power-driven projectors, a Hertner Transverter and a gold fibre screen. One of the brand new features is an eight-piece orchestra and, last but not least, Mr. Vance booked a number of really worth-while pictures. These bookings came on top of an expenditure of $15,000 for changes and improvements in the house itself.

The first aim of Manager Vance was to build up the mid-week patronage and, accordingly, he boosted the programs which he arranged for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. In addition to big features and special music, he arranged for a series of popular stunts including a "Country Fair" and a "Money Night" for the mid-week runs.

"The Daredevil" with Tom Mix Is Among Fox Productions Scheduled for March Release

PROMINENT in the list of productions listed by Fox Film Corporation for release during March, "The Daredevil," with Tom Mix as the star, stands out as one of the most important offerings of the month. J. Anthony Roach of the Fox staff made the scenario and Dev. Jennings did the photography. The cast includes Eva Novak, Charles K. French, L. C. Shumway, Sid Jordon, Lucille Younge, L. S. McKeem, Pat Chrisman, George Hernandez and Harry Dunkinson. The story is of a hard-boiled tenderfoot and offers a score of opportunities to the reckless Westerner, which are both new and hair-raising.

Farnum in "The Adventurer."

"The Adventurer," which has already been shown to the trade press, is the William Farnum picture offered by Fox for March release. The story is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. The theme is of the romantic drama type and gives Mr. Farnum the role of an adventurous Italian whose sword carries him undaunted through a maze of entangled situations. J. Gordon Edwards directed the production. The cast includes Estelle Taylor, Paul Cazeneuve, Kenneth Casey, Dorothy Drake, Harry Southard, Pat Hartigan, James Devine and Sadie Radcliffe.

Gelett Burgess' novel, "Find the Woman," picture rights to which were purchased by Wililam Fox, has been completed. The picture title selected for it is "A Manhattan Knight." This film also will be released in March. It is what the producer classes as a novelty melodrama and the athletic and popular George Walsh is the star. Geo. A. Beranger directed, while Paul H. Sloane of the Fox staff, did the scenario.

In the cast are Virginia Hammond as leading woman, William H. Budd, Warren Cook, John Hopkins, William T. Haves, Cedric Ellis, Charles Slattery, Louis R. Wolheim, Jack Raymond, Walter Mann, Pauline Garon, W. A. Sullivan and L. J. O'Connor.

New Shirley Mason Picture.

The second Shirley Mason picture for Fox is called "Molly and I," and it gives this young star a role of unusual scope for versatility. "Molly and I" is a screen adaptation of Frank R. Adams' story, "Molly and I and the Silver Ring." It was adapted by Isabel Johnston, and directed by Howard M. Mitchell, with George Schneiderman at the camera. Supporting Shirley Mason are Albert Roscoe, Harry Dunkinson and Lilie Leslie.

The latest of Peggy Hyland's vehicles under the Fox banner, a comedy-drama entitled "Black Shadows," is also listed for March. In it the power of hypnotism is an important element and Miss Hyland shines in a cast of notables including Albert Roscoe, Correan Kirkham, Henry J. Hebert, Edwin Booth Tilton, Estella Evans and Cora Drew. "Black Shadows" is from the story by Natalie Lincoln Sumner and J. Anthony Roach. Howard M. Mitchell directed.

From Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of the Sunshine Comedy companies on the West Coast, come two rattling good Sunshine Comedies, bearing the titles of "The Heart Snatcher" and "The Lightweight Lover."

The Mutt and Jeff contributions to the March list include "The Mint Spy," "The Pawnbreakers," "The Chemists" and "The Honest Jockey," all impossible and mirth provoking subjects.

Widespread Showmen Interest Seen in "The Harvest Moon"

THE widespread exhibitor interest in Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," the second Deitrich-Beck production starring Doris Kenyon, following the Hodkinson organization's announcement of its completion, augurs for it even greater success than was achieved by "The Bandbox," the initial Deitrich-Beck offering.

The stage drama was one of Mr. Thomas' successes, being the hit of the season at the Garrick Theatre, New York, in 1910 and having enjoyed a big road popularity.

"The Harvest Moon" deals with the psychological power of mental suggestion, and, as it furnished the author with an opportunity to make use of some very novel lighting effects in the speaking stage version of "The Harvest Moon," it is safe to say that these effects have been enhanced in the picture.

The story was selected for Miss Kenyon because of her special qualifications as a student of psychology as well as on account of her beauty and charm—the lovely girl graduate type. "The Harvest Moon" is replete with exciting episodes and some of the scenic effects are superb. It includes twenty-four sets and on occasion there were five sets in the studio at one time, alternating shots from one to another.

The picture is full of novel and effective lighting—some of the night incidents being of especial merit. One midnight scene on the deck of the ship as she lies off the Bahamas is hull down and sinking. A striking incident is Miss Baird's high dive off the deck of the ship in an effort to rescue the leading man, Hugh Thompson, who is cast as Bruce Crittenden, purser of the craft.

Constance Binney Completes Second Realart Production

CONSTANCE BINNEY has completed her second production, "The Stolen Kiss," for Realart Pictures Corporation. It is scheduled for early release. The picture is founded on the novel, "Little Miss By-the-Day," by Lucille Van Slyke. Kenneth Webb directed the production and the adaptation was made by Kathryne Stuart.

"The Stolen Kiss" is described as absorbing drama and comedy, touched with flashes of pathos. It is the story of a little Brooklyn girl, Felicia Day, who is kept in sheer ignorance of the simplest things of life by her misguided but really affectionate grandfather.

Miss Binney really has three roles in this production. She portrays both Felicia Day and Felicia's mother, but Felicia appears in the picture at the widely different ages of childhood and young womanhood. Rodney La Roque, who plays opposite Miss Binney, had a long career in stock companies throughout the country before starting his screen work. Frank Losee, one of the best known "heavies" on the stage and screen, is also in the cast.

Robert Schable plays the part of Allen Graemer in the picture. He is a graduate and former instructor of the American Academy of Dramatic Art. For ten years he was stage director for John Drew, and has served in the same capacity with Marie Doro, Nazimova, and Annie Russell.

Others in the cast include Bradley Barker, George Backus, Richard Carlyle, Joseph Latham, Edyna Davies, Agnes Everitt and Ada Nevil. The cameraman was George Folsey.

The Misses Horatius-at-the-Bridge.

Josephine Hill and Dagmar Godowsky say "They shall not pass"—at Universal City.

J. V. Bryson to Be Foreign Universal Representative

JAMES V. BRYSON, for the past twelve years Universal exchange manager at Minneapolis, has arrived in New York for a conference at Universal headquarters. He will be sent to Australia on a big business mission very shortly.

It was Carl Laemmle's idea that the Australian territory was being overlooked and he investigated the matter with the result that Universal is now preparing to invade this field in a big way. Mr. Bryson will head a party which will sail from San Francisco about March 16. DeWitt G. C. Adams will accompany him as assistant manager. General offices will be opened at Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane.

Mr. Adams will remain at Sydney as manager while Bryson will proceed on a three years' tour of the Orient as Mr. Laemmle's personal representative. He will visit Bombay, Calcutta, Singapore, Java, Manilla, Canton, Shanghai, Port Arthur, Yokohama and other Asiatic film centers, conferring with the Universal managers at these points.

Universal exploitation will be inaugurated at all these points with the intentions of properly introducing the feature productions to this territory.

Makes Long Contract with Browne.

Myron Selznick announces that he has signed a long term contract with Lewis Allen Browne, scenario writer, following Mr. Browne's success with the Americanization picture, "The Land of Opportunity," and a second play now being made.

Since joining the Selznick organization Mr. Browne has written "Sooner or Later" for Owen Moore, which was adapted for the screen by R. Cecil Smith, and has put a tune in "The Land of Opportunity" that will be heard for some time to come in the echoes from the applause of the press and public for its strong and patriotic principles.

Three Equity Pictures Open in Three Different Sections to Heavy Business

COINCIDENTAL, rather than premeditated, three Equity productions made first bows in three different sections of the country on Washington's birthday and the three pictures succeeded in breaking house records.

"The Forbidden Woman," the latest completed work starring Clara Kimball Young, and second of that star's first series of four specials, opened at the Capitol Theatre, New York, February 22, to what its managing director, Edward Bowes, announces the largest business the theatre has known since it opened, and in his statement on business done, which continued record breaking throughout the entire week, he credits Equity Pictures with having given the Capitol staff perfect co-operation in every respect.

The blind campaign in which the daily papers were used and the public, for seven weeks, requested to watch the color of lights in the sky on February 21, referred to "The Forbidden Woman," and on Saturday night previous to the opening thousands of people craned their necks to watch the sky for the color that would tell them at which house "The Forbidden Woman" would be projected, and, despite the snowstorm, a number of powerful sunlight arcs, covered with green shades, penetrated the dense atmosphere and the crowded streets saw that green designated the Capitol as the house at which "The Forbidden Woman" was to be seen the following day.

Heavy Business the Result.

More than twenty thousand paid admission Sunday and more than twenty-two thousand and a commensurate number on following days rewarded the conceivers of the idea to light the sky.

At Detroit, "Eyes of Youth" opened at the Adams Theatre for a two weeks' run, and from early noon until night crowded houses were in vogue, an unusual event for Detroit, people were standing out in zero weather.

The delayed opening of "Eyes of Youth" in Michigan was attributed to the transfer of the franchise from Kunsky to Equity Players of Michigan, which Haynes and Weil control, and who have held the Detroit engagement until their offices were so equipped to give the utmost co-operation to the theatre for the engagement.

The business at the Adams during the first week was more than exceptional and promises to smash the house record.

At Tulsa, Okla., under the direction of T. E. Larson, the first Equity special release, "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," opened Wednesday, February 18, and for four days the theatre was jammed, and the manager volunteered a telegram to Generay Manager Schnitzer, of Equity, that he was going to repeat the picture for a week.

83 Prints Out on First Runs.

This was the first showing anywhere of this feature, and augurs well for Equity's idea of making highly dramatic productions with unusual titles, and intersperse them for release between the Clara Kimball Young units.

For the next few weeks eighty-three prints of "The Forbidden Woman" will be occupied on first runs in such cities as San Francisco, Philadelphia, Boston, Toledo, Chicago, Indianapolis, Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Portland, Washington, Baltimore, Atlanta, and on the big circuits, including Loews, Ashers, Balaban & Katz, Lubliner & Trinz, Ackerman & Harris, etc.

Kane Pictures to Move to New Association Building

THE Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation has leased new quarters in the National Association Building which is rapidly nearing completion at 21-31 West Forty-third street, New York City. The young producing company will move from its present location in the Knox Building at Fortieth street and Fifth avenue as soon as its quarters in the new building are ready for occupancy.

Established only a month ago, the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, which is headed by the former organizer and president of Realart Pictures, is already finding its original offices insufficient for the rapidly expanding needs of the growing institution. The erection of a new office building in this part of the city has answered the problem of the young concern.

The lease signed last week by President Kane calls for office space four times the size of the present location, and provides for continuous expansion in all departments of the organization. Officials of the producing company feel that the response which has met the organization of Kane Pictures, and the needs of developing the business facilities demand an immediate removal to larger quarters.

Kane Pictures will have a suite of offices on the eleventh floor. With a total space of more than 2,000 square feet looking out on Forty-third street, Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, half a block away, the young concern will be admirably situated to carry on its work in the heart of the amusement district of New York City.

"Show-Me Attitude" Obliges Making of Good Productions

THE most striking change in the selling end of the motion picture business in the last year is the attitude of managers toward taking things for granted," said Paul Tessier, the Pathe branch manager at Cleveland, who is spending a week in the home office. "You really have to show them what you are trying to sell. Telling them about it is a thing of the past.

"It is a fact that, a few years ago, most exhibitors bought carelessly, but today more than half of them demand a screening of a picture before they will consider it. This means that the day of the poor picture is over, for you cannot sell it.

"All the exhibitors with whom I have talked say that the public has been educated to good pictures and that they will not stand for mere fillers. Practically every one going into their theatres is a screen fan. They follow developments and pictures carefully, and if a house runs too steadily to weak pictures, the business is sure to go.

"This situation has, of course, made the exhibitor careful in his selection of pictures, and he certainly must be given due credit for thus doing his best to protect himself and to protect the industry. It is up to every other element in the business to help the exhibitors in thus holding the public."

Mr. Tessier said that the winter season in Cleveland and surrounding territory has been remarkably good, with the exception of a period of about three weeks in the end of January and the beginning of February. He expressed the opinion that the prospects for the coming year were exceptionally good.

Crandall Family Begins Trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Crandall and their three children have left Washington, D. C., for New York, preparatory to going to Los Angeles. Mr. Crandall is making this trip in the interests of the Associated Exhibitors, but declined to make known the exact business involved. The return trip will be made over the southern route, with stops at New Orleans and other southern cities. It is probable that an effort will be made at these places to interest other exhibitors in this organization.

Hamilton Joins George B. Seitz.

James Shelly Hamilton has joined the George B. Seitz Scenario Department. Mr. Hamilton left the Romance Magazine, where he was associate editor, to take up photoplay writing with the Seitz organization, and he is now engaged in doing the scenario for Mr. Seitz's new serial "Velvet," from an original story by Bertram Millhauser.

Charles Ray Visits Frisco While Studios Are Erected

CHARLES RAY is a visitor in San Francisco prior to beginning production work in Los Angeles on his first Arthur S. Kane picture to be released by First National. He has a host of friends in the Pacific Coast city, and his schedule is crowded with much activity and several personal appearances before local gatherings. The star will meet the First National officials of San Francisco, in whose hands his forthcoming motion pictures will be distributed to theatres.

Mr. Ray will have an opportunity to get an impersonal view of his latest film release, "Alarm Clock Andy," which is said to be proving an even better drawing card than his other recent successes. At Grauman's Theatre, Los Angeles, the Ray picture commanded an increase in price when it opened on February 16 for a week's run. The price of admission in the body of the house was raised for the first time from 39 to 50 cents, and reports tell of continually crowded houses with long box-office lines for the evening showing.

Ground for Studio Broken.

Ground on the big addition to the Ray studio in Los Angeles has been graded after considerable interference by rainy weather, and work on the foundation is in progress. Meanwhile, the original Fleming street studios, where the star will begin production within the next week, are being constantly equipped. When Ray returns from San Francisco he will find his new home splendidly equipped for high-class picture work.

Willis Becomes Sales Head of National Picture Theatres, Inc.

ANOTHER well-known film man in the person of Lloyd Willis has joined the National Picture Theatres organization. Mr. Willis has resigned his position as director of United Picture Theatres and assistant to President J. A. Berst to become general sales manager for the National organization. Mr. Willis' resignation took effect immediately and he began with the National company last week.

Theatres Unhurt by Fare Increase.

The recent increase in street car fares in Albany, N. Y., which it was at first feared would work harm to such motion picture theatres as are located outside the business center, has failed to bring about any decrease in the audiences. Albany is now paying a 7-cent fare, and on account of its location and hills several of the theatres are rather hard to reach except by the street cars. Proprietors of all the houses report an excellent business.

Proctor's Harmanus Bleecker Hall, with its two features changing semi-weekly, still continues to draw capacity houses, but seemingly without materially affecting the smaller theatres about the city.

Four Reasons Why March Bids Fair to Break All Paramount Artcraft Records

IF four telegrams received at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation recently are fair criterions, officials are justified in their belief that the month of March will see the highest records yet made by the Paramount-Artcraft Super-Specials.

The telegrams were all received by Claud Saunders, exploitation manager, in accordance with the instructions given to the exploitation men in the field to wire facts concerning the opening of the super-specials in the first-run cities for the information of the home office. The first was from H. Wayne Pierson, of the Atlanta office, who wired from Miami as follows:

"The honor of presenting for the first time in this part of the country the Cecil B. DeMille production, 'Why Change Your Wife?' was given to the Hippodrome here. The word 'honor' is used at the suggestion of Harry Leach, manager of the five Miami houses. He had not seen the picture and was inclined to doubt its greatness, but after the first show he mentioned that the Hippodrome had really been honored by being allowed to show it ahead of release date, and he asked me to express his sentiments to you.

Made His Patrons Talk.

"Mr. Leach experienced a near-sensation to-night as he stood at the exit doors. Patron after patron stopped to tell him what a really great entertainment he had given them, and all expressed a desire that he run it long enough so they might have an opportunity to send their friends. I heard a great number of people say it was the best motion picture they had ever seen. It rained all day, but the house was filled to capacity. Mr. Leach said you can say anything about the picture to your clients over his name, as he does not fear anyone questioning his judgment."

"Under unfavorable weather conditions, 'Huckleberry Finn' opened here today in Queen Theatre, seating only 850 people, to $1,550. Consensus of opinion is that the picture is more interesting than the book. Some say they will want to see it over and over again."

Buffalo Out in Force.

From John P. McConville, of the Buffalo office, comes perhaps the most remarkable message of all. It was sent from Syracuse, where Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female" opened at the Strand Theatre, and read as follows: "Greatest outpouring of motion picture lovers ever known in Syracuse greeted 'Male and Female'; matinee performance at Strand breaking all attendance and box-office records in history of house. Long line in street constantly for seven hours awaiting admittance. Forced to stop selling tickets many times and hundreds turned away."

Cast Is Named for "His Word of Honor."

The cast for "His Word of Honor," which is now being produced at the Selznick studios on the West Coast, with Owen Moore in the star part, was announced this week for the first time following its completion.

Gloria Hope has the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Moore, as Mabel Darrow; Henry Miller, Jr., is cast as Alan Moss; Emmett King is Philip Darrow; Arrow Hoyt is "Whitey"; Charles Arling is Joseph Plant; Nell Craig is Evelyn Plant; Virginia Caldwell is Dorothy and Tom Ricketts is the butler.

The stoy is by Edgar Franklin; the scenario is by Zelda Crosby. Direction is by Wesley Ruggles.

Detroit's Majestic Theatre Books Two Realart Pictures

TOM EALAND, of the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, has closed contracts for showing "Erstwhile Susan," starring Constance Binney, and "Anne of Green Gables," starring Mary Miles Minter. He signed a contract a short time ago to show "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, during the week of March 22.

Alice Brady's first production for Realart, "The Fear Market," from the play by Amelie Rives, had its first run showing recently at the Washington Theatre.

The closing of the contract with Ealand for the two star pictures gives Realart, according to Ralph Quive, manager of the Detroit office, first runs on all pictures thus far released in the Detroit territory.

Mr. Quive was particularly pleased with this record, as he only recently assumed control of the Detroit office for Realart. Mr. Quive also reported that he had closed contracts with Fitzpatrick & McElroy for Realart's star series of productions.

Big Chief Iron Face

First of Vitagraph's Super Productions Is Based on a Gouverneur Morris Novel

AFTER several weeks of preparation, casting and supervising the building of sets, Tom Terriss is about to begin active work on the filming of big special productions with all-star casts, which Vitagraph will present during the current year. The first of these to be directed by Mr. Terriss will be an adaptation of "Trumpet Island," one of the most widely read novels of Gouverneur Morris. Its screen title will be "The Girl from the Sky."

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone," adapted from the novel of the same name by James Oliver Curwood, is another of the big all-star special productions. Production on this story of the Northwest is already under way under the supervision of David Smith, who has already made a name for himself as a director of the Curwood type of story with its scenes of wild animals in their native haunts.

Other Big Productions.

Other big special productions on the same lavish scale to follow closely, and for which scenarios are now being written, are "The Hidden House," based on the novel of the same name by Amelie Rives, and "The Son of Wallingford," being the first adventures of the son of the famous "Get-Rich-Quick" J. Rufus. George Randolph Chester, the creator of that lovable vagabond, J. Rufus, is now at work on the novel, in collaboration with Mrs. Chester. Vitagraph's special production of "The Son of Wallingford" will be filmed while the novel is being run serially in one of America's greatest magazines. The production will be made under the supervision of Mr. Chester, who is Vitagraph's editor-in-chief.

While the cast, so far as is possible, will be assembled from well-known leading men and women, names alone will not be the deciding factor. There must be a corresponding ability, and each member of the company must be peculiarly adapted to the type he or she is to portray.

The special Tom Terriss production will be unusual in a scenic way, and it is expected that Mr. Terriss will take his company to the West Indies for some of the scenes. Some new and really wonderful mechanical effects have been worked out for this feature. The scenario was written by Rudolph de Cordoba.

"Hidden House" a "Spook" Play.

In "The Hidden House," Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph, promises not only a picture par excellent but an absolute novelty. Mr. Chester has been working on the picture and planning startling effects for more than six months. It is a "spook" play with real people. The story is so weird, and yet withal so real, that Mr. Chester has felt at liberty to go to any lengths for the groundwork of the picture proper. Big sets of novel lighting will be prominent features. The scenes of this production will, to a great extent, be interiors.

These are but four of the special superproductions planned by Mr. Smith, and these will in no way conflict with Vitagraph's output of features, serials and comedies.

Easter Sunday Brings First Issue of Selznick News Reel

EASTER SUNDAY will usher into the theatres of the country the first issue of the Selznick News reel. Announcement that plans were being formulated for this addition to the company's activities was made a few weeks ago.

Replying to the exhibitor inquiries Mr. Selznick said: "I am glad to be able to give exhibitors, on Easter Sunday, a new news reel which I feel will help their program wonderfully. For eight months we have been creating this first reel and forming plans for the ones that will follow, and I am positive showmen throughout the country will be agreeably surprised.

"Cameramen have been engaged and placed throughout the world to rush the very latest and best news ever gathered since the inception of news reels. The word "class" will be written all over our news reel. It is our purpose to have the reel in keeping with the same atmosphere that permeates throughout our best productions."

Following the initial release date, on April 4, the news reel will be released every Thursday and Sunday thereafter.

Universal Lists Last of Stage Women's Pictures for March 15

THE twelfth and last of the Stage Women's War Relief Jewel pictures, "The Mad Woman," is announced for release on the Universal program for the week of March 15. Nance O'Neil and Tyrone Power are featured. The Capitol Theatre, New York, booked the entire series and because of the very prominent stage stars appearing in them the twelve pictures have proved a drawing card for exhibitors throughout the country.

The two serial releases for the week are "The Jaws of Destruction," the twelfth episode of "The Lion Man," featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin, and "The Battle Under the Sea," the sixth episode of Elmo Lincoln's entertaining production, "Elmo the Fearless."

An amusing, clean Rainbow comedy two reel picture on the program is "A Roaring Love Affair," directed by Jess Robbins and featuring Zip Monberg, Harry Swett and Consuela Henly in a mirthful tragedy back home on the farm.

The Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran weekly offering is a one-reel comedy "Stop that Shimmie." Magda Lane and Robert Burns are featured in a western, "When the Cougar Called."

Current issues of Hearst, International, Universal Current Events news reels and the weekly Universal New Screen Magazine complete the list of releases for the week.

Public Liked Both Endings and So Experiment Failed

LOEW'S Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, conducted an interested experiment the week ending February 28, but when it was over the management didn't know much more than when it started.

Two endings were made for Metro's "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell. It was announced at first that the both endings would be shown to newspaper critics and that the theatre would show the one they decided upon. But this plan went wrong when one of the newspaper men made a premature decision before he had seen both endings.

Then the Stillman announced it would show the director's ending a certain number of days, and the book ending on the other days.

"Now we will see what the public wants," said Manager Klein, who figured that the attendance would tell. But it didn't work out that way because the attendance was big every day and the comments of patrons as they went out were favorable every day.

"Several letters were received from patrons praising the picture, but not one mentioned anything about the endings," said Mr. Klein, "so I guess all this chatter and argument in the papers as to the right of a director to change an author's story doesn't interest the public."

Shanks—Pullian.

Earl V. Shanks, formerly connected with Mary Pickford's organization, and now business manager of The Special Pictures Corporation, sprang a surprise on his friends this week by announcing his marriage to Pauline Pullian, screen actress, appearing in Special Pictures features.

After a short honeymoon, the newlyweds will locate at Long Beach, Cal., and the bride will continue her picture work at the Balboa Studio, where, under the supervision of Director General Ward Lascelle, The Special Pictures Corporation has several companies operating.

Well-Known Film Men Are Directors of New Company

THE Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce was incorporated in Albany, N. Y., on February 27, with eight directors named. The organization is unique in its intents and purposes, which are outlined as follows: to promote the interest of those persons engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures; to reform abuses relative to motion picture exhibiting and the industry in general; to secure freedom from unjust or unlawful exactions; to diffuse accurate and reliable information as to the standing of persons, firms and corporations engaged in the motion picture industry; to procure uniformity and certainty in the customs and usages of the motion picture industry, and all those having any trade, business, financial or professional interest therein; to establish and maintain a credit system for its members; to co-operate for the improvement of all conditions relating to the business, and to promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between those engaged in the motion picture industry.

The directors are William Brandt, Frederic W. Anderson, Samuel G. Bock, Charles Steiner, David V. Picker, Rudolph Sanders, John Manheimer and Louis Blumenthal, all of New York with the exception of the last named, who is a resident of Jersey City.

"Sex" Is Title of Third Read Film for Hodkinson Release

THE third special production by J. Parker Read, Jr., starring Louise Glaum, was delivered to W. W. Hodkinson Corporation recently and announcement made of its forthcoming release through that organization.

"Sex" is the title of the new Read-Glaum screen play. It was written by C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Fred Niblo, who was loaned to the producer by Thomas H. Ince to make this super-feature.

Among the qualities "Sex" is said to possess is that of extraordinary photographic value. Charles J. Stumar, who filmed the two previous J. Parker Read, Jr., productions distributed by Hodkinson, also was head of the camera staff for "Sex."

The production is in seven reels. Irving Cummings and William Conklin are Miss Glaum's leading men, while Myrtle Stedman and Peggy Pearce have the subordinate feminine roles.

Bosworth Film Nearing Completion.

Hobart Bosworth is nearing the completion of his first vehicle for J. Parker Read, Jr. It is called "Mister MacNeir," this title being merely tentative, however. The story is by Frank Brownlee and is being photographed by J. O. Taylor, who also filmed "Behind the Door." Goldwyn will release this J. Parker Read, Jr., special.

Building Big Stage at Universal City.

Activities at the studios at Universal City have increased to such an extent that it has been found necessary to enlarge the plant. Work has already begun on a new stage that will occupy about one-third the area of stage space already covered. The new stage will measure about 140 feet by 400 and will contain a sub-cellar generating plant, which will supply light and power for the buildings known as the main stage, the north stage, the west stage, the old and new light buildings and the new theatre building. The structure will be known as the new stage and will be able to accommodate from sixteen to twenty-four individual sets.

Pathe Serial Organization Prepares Episode Thriller

THE various departments in the serial division of Pathe Exchange, Inc., are occupied these days with plans for the next serial release, "Trailed by Three," a fifteen-episode adventure story co-starring Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann, that will begin its public career on Sunday, April 4.

The production has been completed and hereafter any work done on the picture will be confined to editing and cutting. The details of the advertising campaign and the various exhibitor helps customarily issued with a Pathe serial have been completed by the publicity and advertising departments, and posters, press books and other press matter are now in work at lithographers and printers.

The new serial, which was produced by Arthur F. Beck Serial Production, Inc., from an original script by Charles T. Dazey, according to announcements from Pathe, is notable chiefly from the standpoint of the story. The Pathe organization, equipped for serials, will get behind this release with full force.

Ince's "Dangerous Hours" Is Among Trio of Current Paramount Artcraft Releases

IN lending their co-operation to the Motion Picture Committee on Americanization, exhibitors will do well, Famous Players-Lasky states, not to overlook the Thomas H. Ince production, "Dangerous Hours." This timely film divides the honors of the Paramount-Artcraft film released February 29, with William Taylor's production of Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn" and "Young Mrs. Winthrop," a picturization of the Bronson Howard play, in which Ethel Clayton is starred.

New York and several other cities have already seen and placed their seal of approval on "Dangerous Hours," which is an adaptation by C. Gardner Sullivan of the story, "A Prodigal in Utopia," by Donn Byrne, which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. Fred Niblo directed. The leading roles are portrayed by Lloyd Hughes and Barbara Castleton. Interesting character roles are in the hands of Claire DuBrey, Jack Richardson, Walt Whitman, Lew Morrison and Gordon Mullen.

"Dangerous Hours" is not a preachment, but a forceful play, whose lesson is conveyed in a series of moving and realistic pictures of present-day life—the struggle of humanity and the clash of opposing ideals.

"Huckleberry Finn" Scores.

The triumph scored by William D. Taylor's "Huckleberry Finn" in the pre-release showings in several cities is a matter of current box-office record. Here, Famous Players-Lasky asserts, is a picture which is wholly delightful and destined to rank as a photoplay classic, just as the story is numbered among the immortals of literature. The acting of young Lewis Sargent as Huck is declared to be as fine a performance as was ever contributed to the stage or screen by a youngster. Moreover, the other familiar characters—Tom Sawyer, "Pa," Nigger Jim, Miss Watson, Aunt Polly, Widow Douglas, the Duke, The King, Mary Jane, they're all there—have been pronounced by no less an authority than Albert Bigelow Paine, Mark Twain's friend and biographer, to be perfectly portrayed.

The Bronson Howard play, "Young Mrs. Winthrop," adapted by Edith M. Kennedy, brings Ethel Clayton again to the screen to duplicate and even to exceed, it is said, her recent success in "The Thirteenth Commandment." It is described as a highly dramatic slice of real life.

The supporting cast includes Charles Ogle, Raymond Hatton, Walter Hiers and J. Monte Dumont. Walter Edwards directed.

New York Theatre Has Run for "Lone Wolf's Daughter"

DESPITE an admitted congestion in booking and the fact that pictures already bought would have to be deferred the United Booking Office circuit of B. F. Keith and Keith & Proctor theatres have booked J. Parker Read, Jr.'s second Louise Glaum production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" and this Hodkinson special opens a full week's engagement next week at the 81st Street Theatre with engagements following at Proctor's Fifth Avenue, the Fifty-eighth Street Theatre and engagements across the entire metropolitan chain of this organization. Brooklyn first run of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" has been captured by Frank Keeney's Keeney Theatre and Sydney Cohen's chain of Metropolitan houses, the North Star, McKinley Square, Tremont and others.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" has begun by more than exceeding the splendid record of "Sahara" in the New York district and Marx Nathan, the Hodkinson manager in New York, has called for more prints than were ever used before on any other production distributed through his office in the New York zone.

President Harper Makes Appointments.

Lawrence Beatus, manager of Loew's Palace; Harry M. Crandall, head of the Crandall string of theatres; Tom Moore, head of the Tom Moore theatres, and Sidney B. Lichtman Explains Exploitation Policy Inaugurated by Famous Players-Lasky

ENTHUSIASTIC at the general prosperity of the theatrical business all over the country, and reporting an increasing demand for long-term Paramount franchises, Al Lichtman, general manager for the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to New York after a three weeks' trip that took him into all the leading cities of the South and Middle West.

During his trip Mr. Lichtman had an unusually good opportunity to study the operation and success of the policy of exploitation which, inaugurated last autumn by Famous Players, was widely extended after the recent company convention in Chicago.

"Exhibitors," said Mr. Lichtman, "are realizing more and more the great opportunities for increased profits which lie in the Paramount-Artcraft policy of giving exploitation to individual pictures. With an exploitation man in every exchange, Famous Players-Lasky is equipped to help exhibitors put over their pictures in a way never before attempted in the motion picture industry.

The King's Theatre Success.

"For instance, when I was in St. Louis I saw the campaign which King's Theatre, assisted by our exploitation representative, Charles L. Winston, conducted in connection with the showing of the Paramount-Artcraft Super-Special 'Everywoman.' Open letters to prominent people, a whirlwind advertising campaign and exploitation of every feature of this big production made 'Everywoman' the talk of St. Louis. The result was that King's Theatre did four times more business than it ever did before on any other picture.

"That is merely a sample of what the Famous Players-Lasky exploitation policy is doing, and exhibitors everywhere are availing themselves of this exceptional service and are increasing their profits."

Mr. Lichtman declared that in all of the cities he visited he found theatrical conditions unusually prosperous. This, he said, is particularly true in Texas and through other parts of the Southwest, where the oil wells have gushed a deluge of dollars.

Use More Intelligent Exploitation.

Another development which struck Mr. Lichtman with unusual force is the growing tendency of exhibitors to demand long-term franchises to show Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

"I have learned something that is particularly gratifying," he added. "That is that exhibitors are learning to exploit individual pictures for the special features contained in those pictures. The wise exhibitor no longer contents himself with merely giving the name of the star and the name of the picture. He plays up, in his advertising and publicity, the strongest features in the story as well as the name of the star. This is of benefit to the star because it makes each of his pictures distinctive, shows his versatility and brings him new admirers."

Staff of First National Home Office "Gets Together" at Hotel Dinner-Dance

THE first of a series of recreational events for the entire membership of First National Exhibitors' Circuit home office staff was held recently at the Hotel Astor, New York, when more than 100 co-workers, their wives and those associated with the Circuit assembled for a dinner-dance and get-together.

At the disposal of the First Nationalites was the Belvedere room of the Astor, equipped with the latest improvements in jazz music, and Lieutenant James P. Anderson, who had just returned to New York after a nationwide tour with First National's "Auction of Souls" with Aurora Mardiganian. Mrs. Jane S. Johnson, secretary to J. D. Williams and H. O. Schwalbe, was hostess.

Robert Lieber, president of the Circuit; J. D. Williams, manager; P. C. Mooney, of the Anita Stewart productions, and David P. Howells, representing First National in foreign lands, made short addresses. The affair was arranged by C. L Yearsley, George R. Grant and E. J. Hudson. The reception committee consisted of Mrs. J. D. Williams, Mrs. Moe Mark, Mrs. Tom Moore, Mrs. David P. Howells, Mrs. Frank Ferrandini and Mrs. R. D. Craver.

This first of the series of entertainments to be given by the First National organization for the fostering of a loyal spirit of co-operation was titled "The Idle Dancers," which nomenclature was burlesqued from D. W. Griffith's second production through the Circuit, "The Idol Dancer."

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Schwalbe, Mr. and Mrs. Worthy Butts, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Yearsley, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Hudson, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Mulligan, E. Mandelbaum, custodian of the First National franchise for Ohio, Miss Florence Mandelbaum, Miss Mae B. Sullivan, Paul M. Sarazan, Miss Eleanor Benedict, Steve W. McGrath, Sol Shernow, Miss Helen Blumkin, C. F. Chandler, Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Becker and daughter, R. H. Pornhagen, Miss Sadie McIntosh, Slade F. Finds "Earth Bound" Contains All Qualities of Big Picture

T. HAYES HUNTER, Goldwyn director, has never had a better vehicle for the expression of his ideals of motion picture production than "Earth Bound," from the story by Basil King, just filmed at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City.

Mr. Hunter believes that a successful picture must have an unusual story as its basic bid for success. "Earth Bound" is an unusual story, a radical departure from the usual type of screen offerings. He believes also in all-star casts as a general rule. "Earth Bound" has an all-star cast, including some of the most capable players on the screen today.

"Earth Bound' 'is a picture which presented some almost insurmountable difficulties in filming. Its artistic value depends on absolute perfection of technique, and Mr. Hunter obtained this perfection. He is a man with infinite capacity for taking pains, and when he seeks a certain effect no effort is too great for the obtaining of it.

"Earth Bound," says Mr. Hunter, "is a story of the high quality to be expected from a man of Basil King's ability. The cast is made up of players of sympathy and understanding, and finished technique. The theme is remarkable. In my estimation, it is a picture which will have a potent influence, and will make a deep impression on every individual who sees it."

Robinson Tours Country in Interest of Doug Fairbanks

WITH the aim of forming a closer relationship between the exhibitors and motion picture editors of the newspapers throughout the entire United States and Canada, Carlyle R. Robinson, director of publicity of the Douglas Fairbanks organization, is touring the country as personal representative of the athletic Doug and is expected to complete half the journey about the middle of March, when he will arrive in New York for a sojourn of one week.

Douglas Fairbanks started Mr. Robinson out on his journey on February 12, the initial stop being San Francisco. In the Bay City the star's representative spent two days, making his headquarters at the United Artists exchange which is in charge of Edward Baron. Portland, Seattle, Spokane and Salt Lake City were next visited and the first lap of the trip ended in Denver.

From Denver, Robinson will go to Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo and Toronto, going next to Boston and completing half the trip upon his arrival in New York. The final half of Robinson's trip will take him to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston and, at last, Los Angeles.

"Flame of Hellgate" Last of Michelena's Outdoor Productions for Robertson-Cole

"THE FLAME OF HELLGATE," the melodramatic picturization of the great outdoors, starring Beatriz Michelena, rounds out a series of three features from the studio of this star, which have been released by Robertson-Cole.

The new picture is filled with swift, exciting action and shows Miss Michelena at her best. Its marked contrast with her other two Robertson-Cole pictures, "The Heart of Juanita" and "Just Squaw" brings out her versatility strikingly.

"The Flame of Hellgate" was directed by George E. Middleton and written by Earle Snell. It comes from Miss Michelena's own studio, which is situated at San Rafael It is a study of life as it used to be when the California mountain country was new and riding, shooting and throwing the lasso were things in which the women as well as the men were trained.

Miss Michelena plays the part of Star Dowell, the daughter of a homesteader who has taken Government land in the mountains. Her portrayal of the daughter who avenges her father after his murder by a dishonest cattle king is the best thing she has done.

Story Different from "Just Squaw."

This story is a great deal different from "Just Squaw," in which Miss Michelena takes the part of Fawn, a white girl who has been brought up to believe that she is of Indian parentage. This latter role places her in more or less of a passive part, making her beauty and womanliness the more appealing by reason of the sympathy which her situation arouses.

The popular character man, Andrew Robson, supports Miss Michelena in "Just Squaw," as well as William Pike, who is also her leading man in "The Flame of Hellgate."

In "The Heart of Juanita," Miss Michelena is a more independent and sophisticated character. She plays the part of a dance hall girl of the older California days. Over her two men fight a desperate duel.

Superb Mountain Views.

In "The Flame of Hellgate," the latest of the three pictures, she appears before some of the most beautiful mountain scenes ever put into a picture. She rides, shoots and uses the lasso like a veteran, but the part is not one which makes her masculine, for she has ample opportunity for the display of the feminine caprices and arts which characterize her personality.

She is supported in this production by William Pike, Albert Morrison, Clarence Arper, Cliff Thompson and Jeff Williams.

Prepares for Busy Summer.

Plans to materially aid producers in their coming summer drive are being formulated by the Publicity Service, of 1587 Broadway, New York City. Indications are that the release of pictures during the coming summer months will be great, and for that reason the Service has added to its staff one man for each of its publicity, advertising and art departments.

The Service also announces that several large theatres have lined up, and that its heralds will soon be used by every principal theatre in the country.

Gaumont Repudiates "Representatives."

It has been brought to the attention of the Gaumont Company that two persons, namely, Joseph Mattlingly and B. O. Mattlingly, are posing on the Pacific Coast as representatives of the Gaumont Company; in fact, it is charged they have in their possession business cards bearing the Gaumont trade mark, copy of which, we are told, they obtained in a most peculiar manner.

We desire to inform the trade that the two persons mentioned are not in the employ of the Gaumont Company, nor have they the right to pose as representatives of this company. Therefore, any persons having dealings with them should be guided accordingly.

Sampson, Modern "Strong Man."

There are four Detroit houses showing a Pathe picture 365 days a year. They are the Rialto, Family, Del-The and Palace. Manager George W. Sampson, of the Pathe office, states that this is what film folks mean when they talk "100 per cent." He also says that the Jack Dempsey serial will net more than any other chapter play he has handled.

"Springing" the Spring Straw.

Robertson-Cole Gets Shackleton's Pictures of His Antarctic Exploring Expedition

A VIVID portrayal of Sir Ernest Shackleton's famous South Pole exploring expedition, "The Bottom of the World," has been obtained by Robertson-Cole for release in the near future. Realizing the big drawing power and the unlimited exploitation and publicity angles of this production, Robertson-Cole includes the acquisition of the Shackleton drama among its big announcements.

The picture comprises a complete record of the expedition, from the time it left civilization until the arrival back at Valparaiso, after being shut off for nearly two years from the outside world.

Not only is the picture a most interesting and vivid portrayal of the Antarctic expedition, but from an educational and entertaining standpoint it would be difficult to surpass.

The film, according to the announcement from Robertson-Cole, contains everything that is desired in a successful dramatic production, with the added value of picturesque, natural scenery.

Replete with thrills, pathos and humor it tells the story of a mere handful of brave men who fought the unknown perils of the Antarctic, the southermost point of the world, to add to the knowledge of the world of science.

Has Surpassing Beauty.

For sheer beauty, the picture surpasses the majority of the best scenics ever made, and for action, thrills and true entertainment value, it is said to contain all the elements to be found in present day pictorial versions either of scenic or dramatic standard.

In his ship, the "Endurance," built especially to withstand the ice battle below the Antarctic circle, Shackleton left Buenos Ayres, October 27, 1914, just at the beginning of the world war. His first stop was to be South Georgia.

After battling the ice for weeks below the Antarctic circle the "Endurance" finally was imprisoned in the ice. Seeing that there was no opportunity to break the veritable prison bars of ice before the coming of "warm" weather, the members of the expedition prepared for the long wait for the ice to break.

To add to the discomfort of the party of explorers the sun set, not to rise again for seventy days. Throughout this time the "Endurance" remained imprisoned, with nothing but ice for hundreds of miles in either direction. It was impossible to obtain any kind of fresh food supplies, with the exception of a seal now and then, or perhaps a Penguin.

Many times during the long wait on the ice the Antarctic storms and packs of ice threatened to tear the "Endurance" to bits. But each time she upheld her name.

Throughout the long and perilous stay on the ice the dog teams were trained daily in preparation for hard work when the southermost point possible was reached with the "Endurance." And then came the greatest disaster of the journey—the ice started to break, and the "Endurance," which had been the home of the crew for such a long time, was torn to bits by the ice as it was dashed against the sides of the ship.

As the ship started to settle it was abandoned by the expedition and all available provisions were salvaged. And preparations were started for the long and perilous journey back to civilization.

The production vividly portrays in every detail this thrilling adventure.

Arline Pretty in Selznick Special.

Myron Selznick added another name to the fast growing list of Selznick celebrities when he placed Arline Pretty under contract to play the feminine lead in the special all-star production, "The Prince of Pines," now being filmed under the direction of Burton George from a story by Willard Mack.

Within twenty-four hours after the contract had been signed, Miss Pretty had assembled her wardrobe of far north clothing, and was en route to a snowbound lumber camp in northern New Hampshire, where many of the outdoor scenes of the production are being made.

Miss Pretty will have the support of Thurston Hall, Anna Lehr, William Davidson, Jack Costello, Bobby Agnew.

Metro's Third Round of Special Films Are Bunched Near the Finishing Line

THE spirit of friendly rivalry which exists among Metro's directors is again manifested in the news from the company's West Coast studios that the six productions that comprise the third round of the "fewer and better" pictures are getting under the finish wire neck-and-neck.

Of the six productions three have been completed so far as the actual camera work is concerned, and the other three are so nearly finished that they will be in the cutting roms for editing, titling and assembling within a week. The trio that are now undergoing final cutting are "Old Lady 31," starring Emma Dunn; "Shores Acres," starring Alice Lake, and "Alias Jimmy Valentine," starring Bert Lytell.

Right behind these three are "The Cheater," starring May Allison; "Dangerous to Men," with Viola Dana, and "The Hope," a Drury Lane melodrama, with an all-star cast featuring Jack Mulhall, Ruth Stonehouse, Frank Elliott and Marguerite de la Motte.

In each case the director of the production personally will supervise the cutting, titling and assembling of the respective productions.

"Old Lady 31," starring Emma Dunn, is an adaptation by June Mathis of the successful stage play by Rachel Crothers, which was produced on the stage by Lee Kugel, with Miss Dunn featured in the role of Angie, which she also interprets in the screen version.

Hodkinson Exchange Heads Report Banner Week's Business on "His Temporary Wife"

FROM all territories Hodkinson managers reported a banner week's business of contract bookings on ."His Temporary Wife," Joseph Lovering's leap year romance, starring Rubye De Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong and W. T. Carleton. An idea of the way this W. W. Hodkinson release has caught on may be gleaned from the immediate booking engagements given it by such prominent picture showmen as Tom Moore for a week's run at his Strand Theatre, Washington, D. C., and W. C. Dineen, general manager of all Harry Moir houses in Chicago, for a week's engagement at either the Rose or the Alcazar of the Moir first run theatres to be followed within two weeks in every house of the Moir chain.

In addition to the big booking from Mr. Dineen, the Chicago Hodkinson manager, Sidney J. Goldman, obtained contracts on the production in seventeen other Chicago theatres, and many of the big houses in the territory, including the Palace, Muscatine, Ia.; the Crystal, Joliet, Ill.; the Palm, Rockford, Ill.; the Chateau, Kankakee, Ill.; the Lincoln Square, Decatur, Ill., and the Opera House, Dubuque, Ia.

Metropolitan Bookings.

In the New York district Marx Nathan, Hodkinson manager, has equaled the mark set by Mr. Goldman, the lists of bookings in the metropolitan zone, including the Symphony, the Adelphi, the Majestic, the 77th St. Theatre, the City Hall, Proctor & Keith's 58th St. and 23rd St. theatres, and the Sydney S. Cohen chain in New York City, the Mardi Gras, the Roebling, the New Atlantic, the Sheffield, the Cleveland, in Brooklyn.

Bert Lytell in "Right of Way" Brings Big Flood of Booking Orders to Metro

ALTHOUGH "The Right of Way," Metro's screen production of the celebrated novel of regeneration by Sir Gilbert Parker, starring Bert Lytell, has been in the market for booking only about a fortnight, the exchanges and the home offices of the Metro organization announce that they have been virtually deluged with requests for dates and with inquiries regarding options on first showings.

Has Choice of Endings.

For its first big metropolitan showing, "The Right of Way" is the current attraction at the world's largest motion picture playhouse, the Capitol Theatre, New York, for the week of February 29, the showing having been put off a week to permit of the arrangement of special effects.

As announced before the release of "The Right of Way," Metro has provided for exhibitors a choice of endings for the story; the first following, with only minor changes, the original story by Sir Gilbert Parker, and the second diverging to the extent of its becoming "happy," or, in other words, without the death of the hero, "Beauty" Steele, at the end of the picture.

The managing director of the Capitol, Edward Bowes, did not make any advance announcement to the public as to which ending he would use, but Metro believes that the Capitol screen will display the solution of the story as written in the novel by Sir Gilbert Parker.

"Cynthia-of-the-Minute" with Leah Baird Has Many Remarkable Lighting Effects

CYNTHIA-OF-THE-MINUTE," starring Leah Baird, latest feature special to be completed by Gibraltar Pictures for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, is regarded by those familiar with the work of Louis Joseph Vance as one of his most powerful stories, possessing as it does the maximum of pictorial value.

This is practically the only picture completed since the beginning of the world war wherein nearly all the important scenes are laid on board ship. Eight weeks were consumed in the filming of the drama, half of that time being utilized in and about the studio at Cliffside, N. J., and the other half in shooting marine episodes at Jacksonville, Port Sewall and Tampa, Fla.

The production is remarkable for the fact that four of the six reels are devoted to marine features of the story, all of which are supposed to transpire in one night. These scenes involve nearly every part of a big tramp steamship, from the captain's cabin to the fo'c'sle head, Miss Baird in her character of Cynthia fighting all over the ship to defeat a gang of conspirators bent on scuttling the craft for the insurance.

Katherine Porter Joins Kane Staff.

The Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation announces the addition to its publicity staff of Katherine Anne Porter, a widely known magazine and newspaper writer, who will be in charge of feature writing for the fan publications and newspapers.

Schlesinger and Miles Plan Highly Specialized Service

FILLING a long felt want in the motion picture business, the Film Service Bureau will have its inception on or about March 10 with headquarters on the sixth floor of the Leavitt Building 126-30 West Forty-sixth street, New York. Leon Schlesinger and Joseph R. Miles, who are responsible for this new departure, are pleased with the enthusiasm with which their first announcement has been met.

Under the general management of Mr. Schlesinger, the Film Service Bureau will render a service intended to alleviate the shipping and forwarding troubles of the producer, exporter and state right distributor alike. For many months the lack of proper shipping facilities and specialized packing and forwarding services has handicapped the activities of these men in no small degree.

The Film Service Bureau, specializing in packing, shipping and forwarding for export, will also take care of shipments for domestic distribution. Title work in all languages, insertion of titles, cutting and editing pictures; in fact, everything will be done to relieve a distributor of all the worrisome details of physical distribution.

SPURRED by the knowledge that Harold Lloyd is fast becoming a prime public favorite in two-reel comedies, the thirty-two branch managers of Pathe Exchange, Inc., during February wrote the biggest business yet recorded monthly on the new $100,000 subjects. Every Pathe branch surpassed the best previous figures established on the Lloyd comedies. More than a score of the most prominent first-run theatres in the United States were added to the host of houses now playing the multiple reelers.

Ruben & Finkelstein, who stand pre-eminent in the exhibition field in their territory, during the past month booked the entire Lloyd series, beginning with "Bumping into Broadway" and including "Captain Kidd's Kids," "His Royal Slyness," "From Hand to Mouth" and "Haunted Spooks," in their first-run theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. A. H. Blank, managing director of the new Des Moines Theatre, one of the finest in the entire country, also subscribed his name with the other prominent bookers of the Lloyd funmakers.

"Haunted Spooks," considered by Pathe by far the best of the entire Lloyd series, is to be released on March 21.

Pick Players for "Dangerous Paradise."

Following the announcement that "Dangerous Paradise," the Frances Marion story in which Lewis J. Selznick will present Olive Thomas, has been started in the Selznick Eastern studios, some of the players who will appear in the cast were named this week.

Among those engaged for the first shots in the picture are Dorothy Kent, Theodore Westman, Jr., Warren Cook, Charles Craig, Aleene Bergman, Katherine Johnston, Marcis Harris, Norma and Athole Shearer (the Shearer Twins), Russell Hewitt, Maury Stewart, Jr., William P. Carleton and Arthur Houseman.

Vitagraph Buys More Acres, Enlarging Hollywood Plant

THROUGH the purchase of ten acres of land adjoining its present plant at Hollywood, Cal., Vitagraph becomes the owner of one of the largest motion picture studios grounds in the country. The land acquired, part of the Skinner estate in East Hollywood, has been in the probate court for several months and the sale to Vitagraph was consummated only after dealings extending since last July. The bid made by W. S. Smith, manager of the West Coast studio, acting for Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, was accepted and with the approval of the probate judge the executors of the Skinner estate have transferred the property.

Vitagraph, through its new purchase, now has twenty acres of land laid out in a square, north and east from the intersection of Talmadge street and Prospect avenue. The original site, now in use, contains ten acres.

Mr. Smith is having the technical staff design several brick and stone buildings for the additional land. Work on these will be commenced immediately. Mr. Smith is leaving for California to personally superintend the improvement.

Many Popular Players in "Why Change Your Wife?"

ASIDE from the masterly manner in which he tells his story, two things that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation cites, stand out with notable clearness in the production of Cecil B. De Mille—sumptuousness of settings and the high acting standard of his casts. In "Why Change Your Wife?" his latest Paramount Artcraft special, the cast is of the same high plane of ability which has marked the players selected for all of Mr. De Mille's creations.

In the role of Robert Gordon, the young husband who becomes estranged from his wife, is Thomas Meighan. Gloria Swanson plays the role of Beth Gordon, the wife, who because she is not a playmate of her husband, loses him only to regain him later by adopting a mode of life her husband wanted her to live.

Another favorite who has been seen in a number of notable productions is Bebe Daniels, who plays the role of "the other woman."

Theodore Kosloff, the famous dancer, is shown as a classical dancer, and other well-known players whom Mr. De Mille selected to interpret his action are Clarence Geldart, Sylvia Ashton, Maym Kelso, Lucien Littlefield, Edna Mae Cooper and Jane Wolff.

Lascelle Makes Comedy Not Using Faces of Actors and Without the Use of Subtitles

SOMETHING entirely new in the way of comedy is being brought to the screen by Ward Lascelle, formerly connected with the directorial staff of Mary Pickford.

Lascelle, who is now director general for The Special Pictures Corporation, has just finished a feature which promises to be one of the most novel pictures ever attempted. He has made a comedy without using the faces of actors or actresses, and also without the use of subtitles.

This feature is claimed by the best authorities in Los Angeles to be one unique. In spite of the fact that neither faces or subtitles appear, direction and continuity and community are said to be perfect.

"For a long time," said Mr. Lascelle, "I have believed it possible to work out a photoplay, keeping the action complete, without the use of subtitles or players' faces, but this is the first opportunity I have ever had to undertake such an experiment. The result, I assure you, has been most gratifying, and, in my opinion, a new possibility has been opened for the screen."

Lascelle declares that "Uneasy Feet" is only one of many novel film features which will be presented through Special Pictures. Exhibitors may look for something new in the Comedyart release and also in the Art Color Scenics, in which the Handschagel color process will be used, the exclusive right for this method of coloring motion picture film having been secured by the Special Pictures Corporation.

Vitagraph's Big Newspaper Story Seen at Private View by Reporters; Picture Praised

WOULD it be ethical or professional for a newspaper to print a story of disgrace about one of its own men? Would it be a dereliction in its duty, on the other hand, if a newspaper should suppress or submerge such news?

These questions came to the surface recently and have caused a wide discussion among newspaper workers as the result of private showings of Vitagraph's feature, "Deadline at Eleven," in which Corinne Griffith is starred. A number of newspaper men were invited to one of the first screenings

The picture is based upon a story of newspaper life, and much of its action is set in the office of a great New York daily. Miss Griffith plays the role of a wealthy yong society woman who enters the field of journalism under the impulse to earn her living and do something worth while.

The dramatic events that ensue lead to a love affair between her and one of the star reporters. The story then proceeds toward a situation in which the newspaper is confronted by the necessity of either printing the report of an arrest and murder charge about one of its own men or of deliberately suppressing and suffering to be scooped.

The manner in which the characters meet this situation provides one of the big punches of the picture. The newspaper critics expressed the unanimous opinion that the story had presented a logical solution of the problem.

Pathe to Distribute "The Little Cafe," with Max Linder, and "Lifting Shadows"

PATHE'S promise of big things in the way of features for this spring has been partly fulfilled with the addition to the schedule of two exceptional productoins, one of which will bring back to the American screen the famous French comedian, Max Linder, in the first big feature he has ever made. Pathe has taken over the distribution of "The Little Cafe," a five-reel comedy starring Linder, and will release it on April 25.

Pathe also will issue Leonce Perret's "Lifting Shadows," in which Emmy Wehlen is starred. This production has been set for release on April 4, following Blanche Sweet in "The Deadlier Sex."

"The Little Cafe" is an adaptation of the successful stage play of the same name produced by Klaw and Erlanger. Wanda Lyon, lately of the Winter Garden of New York, portrays the part played on the stage by Hazel Dawn.

Emmy Wehlen was signed by Mr. Perret for the leading role because of her particular adaptness for the role of Vania Ostrowski. Miss Wehlen for years has been one of the prime favorites of the screen and stage. Among her most successful screen works may be numbered "Miss Robinson Crusoe," "Nobody," "The Outsider," "The Shell Game," "House of Gold" and "His Bonded Wife."

Mr. Perret has surrounded Miss Wehlen with a support including Wyndham Standing, Stuart Holmes. Julia Swayne Gordon and F. French.

Winchell Smith Joins Metro Authors; "New Henrietta" To Be His First Film

WINCHELL SMITH, playwright and stage producer, is now a member of the Metro scenario forces in Hollywod, Cal. He will serve not only as a writer of original stories, but will assist in the picturization of several of his own plays.

Acquisition by Metro of the services of Winchell Smith follows closely the announcement that Bayard Veiller, another dramatist with an international reputation, had signed a contract to write four original sories a year for Metro, the first to be a vehicle for Bert Lytell.

Supervision of a screen adaptation of "The New Henrietta," the revised version of Bronson Howard's celebrated stage play of high finance and Wall Street gambling, on which Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes collaborated, will be Mr. Smith's first effort for Metro.

The Screen Fascinates Him.

The playwright declares motion pictures always have held a peculiar fascination for him, that he believes their prospects were never better, and that they offer a splendid field for the dramatist.

J. W. Binder Denies Use of Money to Kill Censorship Legislation in Ohio

DENIAL of charges that the motion picture industry is using money among legislators in efforts to kill censorship legislation was made by J. W. Binder, of Hackensack, N. J., in a letter to the Massachusetts Legislative Committee on Mercantile Affairs.

The letter said:

"I am advised that at a hearing before your committee on Tuesday last, one Mrs. Maud Murray Miller alleged that I had appeared in Ohio in opposition to a motion picture censorship bill introduced by one Neff, and had made statements that I had $50,000 to spend in defeating the bill and as much more as was necessary.

"I understand that this statement was placed in the record of the hearing. I therefore take this occasion to deny emphatically and categorically that I ever made any such statement or that I had any money whatever to spend in defeating the legislation in question.

"I was in Ohio representing the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures, an organization composed of men and women of the highest standing, to whom the makers of motion pictures voluntarily submitted their pictures for criticism and review before sending them out. This body was naturally and rightly opposed to the pernicious belief that any form of expression can in the United States be submitted to pre-publicity censorship through legalized channels.

"In justice to myself I demand that this communication be spread upon the records of your committee and that I be so advised. I am not now nor have I been for two years connected in any way with the motion picture industry."

Metro's Alice Lake Feature Breaks Records Down South

DESCRIBING the business done during a week's showing of the Screen Classics, Inc., production, "Should A Woman Tell?" featuring Alice Lake, as "one of the best since we have been operating this theatre," Daniel Michalove, manager of the Strand Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., has written to Charles E. Kessnich of Metro's Atlanta exchange, heartily indorsing the picture and recommending it to othee exhibitors as one which will yield box office returns to "compare favorably with any picture released so far this year."

The Strand Theatre is one of the chain of theatres owned and operated by Southern Enterprises, Inc., with a capital of $5,000,000. The Strand is one of the leading motion picture houses in Atlanta, with a fixed policy of following the record of all productions it books, with the aim of obtaining only the best possible quality of screen productions for its patrons.

"Mystery of the Yellow Room" Cleans up in Los Angeles

T. L. TALLY has scored an impressive success with "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard Production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, during a week's showing at his Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles. The showing gives Realart Pictures a record of having played in substantially all of the big Los Angeles first-run houses, including Grauman's Theatre, Miller's New Theatre, the California and Sillcotte's Cinema.

This showing follows rapidly after the establishment of a new Broadway record made when the Rialto Theatre in New York City booked Mary Miles Minter in "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," making it a straight seven of Realart's first seven productions to have Broadway runs.

The following telegram was received by John S. Woody, general manager of Realart, "The Fear Market," from the play by Yellow Room' packed Tally's Broadway all day today and tonight. In my opinion, it is a most excellent box-office attraction and one of the most absorbing and baffling mystery pictures ever made. Am highly pleased with Realart product and will use as frequently as opportunity offers."

Fox South American Manager Sees Rich Market for Films

J. P. RYAN, South American district manager of the William Fox interests, has arrived in New York after an absence of three years, surcharged with information on the motion picture market there and the comparative standing of various stars. He was stationed at Buenos Aires, the acknowledged picture center of the continent, and therefore was in a position to make an exhaustive study of conditions. In addition to gathering data in his headquarters city he made extensive excursions to other parts of the continent.

"The motion picture made in the United States," Mr. Ryan asserted, "is by far the largest factor tending towards a better understanding between our country and the South American republics. This better understanding will manifest itself most noticeably in larger trade relations. The exaggerated idea entertained by a great proportion of Spanish-speaking Americans about the North American and his way of living and trading, is so thoroughly upset by what they see on the screen that a gradual change in attitude in inevitable.

"One sees foreign pictures only in the cheaper show houses. In the recognized theatres American productions hold their own, and more."

Mr. Ryan is emphatic in his statement that the South American market is a rich one for the motion pitcure producer. He cites his own success in spreading Fox pictures as an example of what can be done. The volume of business that Fox Film Corporation does in Latin America has increased at a phenomenal rate during the last few years.

Pearl White, he said, is the most popular star.

O'Brien to Make Pictures on Coast.

Myron Selznick, head of production of Selznick Enterprises, announced this week that Eugene O'Brien left for California February 28, where he will appear in a production which is scheduled to begin shortly after he arrives there. The reason for Mr. O'Brien's journey to the West Coast Selznick studios, according to Mr. Selznick, is because the Eastern studios at Fort Lee and in the Bronx are so crowded that no more productions can be taken care of there at the present time.

Raid Takes a Flier on the Stage.

Wallace Reid is back on the stage again. The excursion of the Paramount Artcraft star into the "legitimate," however, will not be for long, as he has signed only for a limited engagement and is not to leave Los Angeles.

It was Frank Egan, of the Litte Theatre, Los Angeles, who offered Wallace the juvenile lead in Harry Corson Clarke's production of the English comedy satire, "The Rotters."

Two New Picture Corporations Will Produce in San Francisco.

THE D. & G. Film Company has been organized at Oakland, a suburb of San Francisco, and a tentative site for a studio has been selected. R. C. Durant, president of the Chevrolet Motor Company, is a member of the new concern, and Charles Grapewin is another. It is planned to produce a series of comedies in which Charles Grapewin, the Orpheum star, and Anna Chance will be featured.

The California Projector and Film Corporation has been incorporated at Oakland, Cal., with a capital stock of $50,000 by William H. F. Ziedrich and John J. Dashiell, of Oakland; Henry G. Laffman, of Berkeley, and Samuel J. Jones and Owen Roberts, of San Francisco. The company proposes to establish a studio for the production of films in the Greater San Francisco, which includes the east-bay suburbs.

Strief Finds Original Motion Picture Fans of Cincinnati

THAT first motion picture shown in the old Dime Museum, on Vine street, 25 years ago, created a sensation, but not nearly as much of a sensation as it would have done had we believed it genuine. Folks in those days thought it a fake. We couldn't believe the actors on the sheet were projected there. We thought they were real live humans shadowed in some way."

Attorney J. A. Mingus, with offices in the Wiggins Block, was commenting on his experience when he saw the first motion picture play ever flashed on a Cincinnati screen. It was in 1894 at the Keck Dime Museum. Mr. Mingus wrote to Manager Fred Strief of the Paramount-Artcraft's local offices in response to Strief's efforts to find the "original motion pictre fans" of Cincinnati. The first photoplay was "Miss Jerry," a crude affair, presented in October, 1894.

Mr. Mingus and several other "original film fans" will be guests of Strief soon at a party in the private theatre of the Famous Players-Lasky when a reproduction of "Miss Jerry," will be shown.

Several others who saw "Miss Jerry," have written to Mr. Strief. Mrs. Frank Bennett, Williamson, W. Va., with her son, will attend the performance.

Jack Jordan, 807 Scott street, Covington, Ky., is another "original." For 18 to 20 years, he says, he has not missed going to a picture show more than two nights in any week.

Mary MacLaren in "Roads to Divorce."

A picture which should have a strong appeal to all married couples, or young people who expect to embark on the uncertain sea of matrimony, and which should therefore prove to be a big box-office attraction for exhibitors, is the Universal production, "The Road to Divorce," where Mary MacLaren plays the stellar role, and which is announced for release on April 5.

Aside from its gripping story, its photographic effects and the splendid work of the star and her supporting company, the photoplay contains a lesson by which every young man and woman may profit.

Stanley Company to Buy Entire Block for Theatre Building in Trenton, N. J.

PLANS are maturing for the construction of another $1,000,000 motion picture theatre in Trenton, N. J. The Stanley Company of America, with home offices in Philadelphia, have been negotiating for the purchase of an entire city block enclosed by North Broad, East Hanover, Warren and North Warren streets. The company is said to be planning the erection of a large picture theatre, an apartment house building and a group of stores. The real estate alone will cost upward of $950,000, it has been estimated.

The new Strand Theatre, of which T. O. and R. A. Fleischbein are the proprietors, was opened in Cloquet, Minn., on February 19 with Mary Pickford in "Daddy Longlegs." It is in the east end of the town and cost $45,000. The Fleischbeins operated the Diamond Theatre in Cloquet prior to the big fire of October 12, 1918.

The Saxe Brothers, well known throughout the Middle West as owners and operators of hotels, theatres, restaurants and taxi-cab lines, are negotiating in Waukesha, Wis., for the purchase of property upon which to erect a hotel and theatre building. Thomas Hughes, who represented Saxe Brothers, said that the concern is also negotiating for the purchase of theatres at Janesville, Fond du Lac and other Wisconsin towns.

It is reported that a syndicate of Chicago moving picture interests are planning a large picture theatre for Milwaukee, to be located on Wisconsin street. The statement was made by Carlton Rieger, manager for Milwaukee, at the opening of the Iris Theatre, North avenue and Fourteenth street, recently. He said that the new theatre, for which no site has been yet secured, would cost about $250,000. The Iris is the first of a chain of houses which will be taken over by the syndicate within a year. It is also proposed to build a theatre at Twelfth and State streets.

It is now an assured fact that the Lyceum Theatre, of Duluth, will be made over into a first class picture theatre by the Clinton Investment Company, in conjunction with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The work probably will be started about March 1. The theatre lease held by the Lyceum Amusement Company does not expire until September 1. More than $200,000 will be spent in improvements, not including a pipe organ costing $50,000.

Buxbaum to Head Paramount Convention Representatives

H. H. BUXBAUM, manager of the New York exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will lead the Paramount Artcraft representatives at the convention of New York State Exhibitors to be held at Utica on March 8 and 9. Other Famous Players-Lasky representatives who will attend the meeting will be Manager Allan S. Moritz, of the Buffalo exchange; Joseph Seidelman, manager of the newly organized Albany exchange, and Henry Randall and W. A. Roosevelt, of the New York City exchange.

A booth will be maintained by the Paramount Artcraft interests at the convention. Decorations of posters, accessory displays and exhibitors' aids will be lavishly exhibited, while copies of press books, trade organs and publicity material issued by the organization will be available to exhibitors.

One of the convention features will be a showing of Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount Artcraft production, "Why Change Your Wife," with Thomas Meighan, Gloria Swanson and Bebe Daniels. The picture is said to be a worthy successor to DeMille's last release, "Male and Female," by those who have seen it. It takes up the opposite point of view of the marriage question to the one expressed in the earlier DeMille picture, "Don't Change Your Husband," although it is in no sense a sequel to that production.

Realart Lists Alice Brady's "Sinners" for Early Release

SINNERS," starring Alice Brady, Realart, is announced as completed and on the schedule for release after it has finished its preliminary box office tests.

The picture is an adaptation of Owen Davis's stage drama of modern life, in which Miss Brady starred for more than a year in New York City and for a longer period in the larger cities of the country. It was produced on the stage by William A. Brady and has been one of the big dramatic hits of recent years. The success of the drama created a demand for its novelization and this work was done by D. Torbett.

The play was adapted to the screen by Eve Unsell and the production was made under the direction of Kenneth Webb. Many of the scenes were photographed on Nantucket Island, off the coast of Massachusetts, according to the demands of the original play.

Miss Brady's leading man is James L. Crane. Frank Losee has the role of William Morgan. William P. Carlton also has an important part.

Others in the cast include Nora Reed, Robert Schable, Crauford Kent, Lorraine Frost, Augusta Anderson and Agnes Everett.

Predict "Virgin of Stamboul" Will Go Big the Country Over

THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL," a big Universal special, has at last been completed. Tod Browning, who directed the feature, brought the picture along with him when he arrived at the New York Universal offices from the coast a few days ago.

A private showing was immediately arranged at which Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane and the other leading lights of the Universal organization were present.

"The Virgin of Stamboul," said Carl Laemmle, "has even surpassed our expectations. Tod Browning has produced a truly wonderful picture. Priscilla Dean will take the country by storm when this photodrama is released. I am really proud to stamp this production with the Universal-Jewel trademark."

American Works Overtime on New Prints.

The laboratory of the American Film Company is working overtime on new prints for the Russell-Minter-Fisher series, according to Sam Silverberg, superintendent of the plant.

"We are just getting eight new prints off to the New York exchange to take care of recent bookings and meet the present needs," he said. "There seems to be a steady demand for 'Wives and Other Wives,' 'Where the West Begins,' 'The Mantle of Charity,' 'The Eyes of Julia Deep,' 'When a Man Rides Alone' and 'Money Isn't Everything.' We got out about 100 prints in the first place, but there has been no let-up on these features. These comedy-dramas must have been very successful."

Republic to Distribute Allgood Serial, "The Whirlwind," Featuring Hutchison

THE Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Briton N. Busch is president and Lewis J. Sleznick is advisory director, has enlarged its activities to include the distribution of serial subjects. The announcement states that contracts have been signed between Republic, represented by Mr. Selznick and Mr. Busch, and Allgood Pictures Corporation, represented by Charles Alperstein and Joseph A. Golden, whereby Republic will handle the distribution of "The Whirlwind," a fifteen-episode feature serial in which Charles Hutchinson has the "daredevil" star part.

According to present plans, "The Whirlwind" will be released in the early part of April. George Ames, who lately became a member of the Republic sales organization, specializing in short subjects, will be in active charge of sales for this serial.

In describing this "continued" feature which marks the entry of Republic into this branch of motion pictures, stress is laid upon the fact that the officials responsible for the selection of "The Whirlwind" took into consideration that Republic will have to build up a serial reputation beginnig with this initial release. Not having established itself among exhibitors as producers or distributors of serials, it behooved Republic to exercise a keen sense of discrimination in selecting as its initial release a subject that has every earmark of popularity.

In an announcement to exhibitors, Republic said: "We have, by reason of our success in handling short subjects such as the Chief William J. Flynn series, Prizma natural color pictures and Kinograms, and because exhibitors are seeking good serials now more than ever before, been encouraged to take on the distribution of a serial and are negotiating for two more at the present time. Our first, 'The Whirlwind,' is in fifteen episodes, each one of which contains two or more thrills calculated to lift the audience out of its collective seat. The director, Joseph Golden, it will be remembered, has lately to his credit 'The Great Gamble,' which was one of the biggest money-getting serials of the year."

Neilan's "The River's End" Is Breaking Records Everywhere

MARSHALL NEILAN'S initial independent production, "The River's End," is sweeping the country with big success. At the Strand Theatre, New York, the film proved the greatest attraction in the history of that institution, which fact was extensively advertised in the daily papers. All box-office records were smashed on the first day and on the second day the records of the first were shattered. The film on closing in New York was immediately transferred to Brooklyn Strand for a week's run.

At John H. Kunsky's Adams Theatre, Detroit, the picture broke all records, and the latter part of the week exceeded the business of the first half.

The picture opened at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, last Sunday and created a sensation the first day when it broke all records. At the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, the production also broke all records.

Manager Cassard Is Honored by Admirers on West Coast

S. S. CASSARD, sales manager of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., has recently been made an honorary member of the Moving Picture and Projecting Machine Operators Union, Local 169, I. A. T. S. E., and presented with a gold card case. As Mr. Cassard was also made an honorary member of the San Francisco local a short time ago, he must be very popular with the unions on the West Coast.

Mr. Cassard, who left New York during the early part of January and has been traveling through the West for his firm, will return home in about ten days. He reports a very successful trip, and those who have known "Dick" Cassard during the nine years he has been connected with the film industry will not be surprised at these honors that have come to him, for he has an unusual faculty for making friends and keeping them.

Six Big Columbus Theatres Show Paramount-Artcrafts

COLUMBUS, OHIO, has been celebrating an "impromptu Paramount Artcraft week," starting February 29. Every one of the six leading theatres had complete Paramount Artcraft programs, not to mention the suburban theatres.

At the Grand, "On With the Dance," the George Fitzmaurice super-special, opened a two weeks' engagement with a lavish prologue and big advertising. At the Colonial, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, Thomas H. Ince stars, appeared in "What's Your Husband Doing?" At the Southern, was Marguerite Clark in "Luck In Pawn"; at the Hippodrome, "Hawthorne of the U. S. A." with Wallace Reid; at the Pastime, Marion Davies in the "Cinema Murder"; at the Majestic, Billie Burke in "Wanted—A Husband."

The week previous, the downtown houses had "The Thirteenth Commandment," "The Miracle Man," "Counterfeit" and "Why Smith Left Home," in addition to Paramount Mack Sennett comedies.

Colonel J. E. Brady of Metro Addresses Columbia Students

COLONEL J. E. BRADY, scenario editor of Metro, gave an interesting lecture at Columbia University, New York City, on Friday evening, February 27. The large audience was composed of the members of the Cinema Composers Club and of the students of Mrs. F. T. Patterson's photoplay classes at the university.

Colonel Brady gave a vivid description of the writing as well as the production of the modern photoplay. He emphasized the fact that the main requisite for successful motion picture writing is an innate creative instinct, and that photoplay writing differs from no other business or profession in its demands for painstaking work, even from the most talented authors To illustrate his point, Col. Brady recited the action of a story recently submitted to him, wherein the author through sheer carelessness had failed to realize the possibilities of his theme.

Col. Brady concluded with a note of hopefulness, assuring the audience that in spite of the prevailing demand for adaptations of published stories and plays, there was still a market for good original scripts.

Go to Charleston for Scenes.

Dorothy Gish and the members of her company are at Charleston, S. C., securing scenes for Miss Gish's next Paramount-Artcraft production. Among the players with Miss Gish are Ralph Graves, Marie Burke, George Siegemann and George Fawcett. Mrs. Mary Gish, mother of the Gish girls, also is with the party. They will return to New York about March 10.

Big Extension of Foreign Territory Is Announced by Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that plans have been completed whereby Pathe Exchange takes over from Pathe Cinema, the great French concern, all the territory situated east of Suez and extending as far as the Atlantic Ocean.

The new arrangement is bound to prove beneficial to both companies, inasmuch as it gives Pathe Exchange all facilities to co-operate directly with its foreign agencies and an opportunity to devote all its attention to the European market, which is now ready for intensive development. The French company will, however, continue to exploit its European productions through its former concessionaires in said territory.

While the details of the plan were being worked out, the contract with Max Glucksmann for the exploitation of the Pathe products in Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay, expired, and a new agreement was entered into, extending the franchise under which the Glucksmann firm has handled Pathe pictures in its territory for almost two decades. Mr. Glucksmann was also granted the concession for Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

Pathe Exchange is following the policy of Pathe Cinema in its new territory by giving to its foreign agents an opportunity to purchase their respective branches with a long-term franchise for the Pathe product. Alex Hague, who has been in charge of the Bombay branch of the Pathe motion picture interests for several years, has just gone back to India, after having made arrangements for the purchase of his branch, in conjunction with a contract under which he secures the Pathe product for India, Burma and Ceylon for a long period.

Arthur E. Rousseau, export manager of Pathe, says: "There is no country on the globe where we are not represented. Whenever we do business, the name of Pathe stands for integrity and quality, but it was gratifying to me to learn that the excellent reputation which we enjoy in this country extends all over the world. Our export business has entered into a new era of prosperity and never in the past has the outlook been so optimistic."

"Dangerous Days" Heralded as Barker's Best Production

GOLDWYN executives saw Mary Roberts Rinehart's first picture for Eminent Authors, "Dangerous Days," at a private showing in the New York exchange this week and pronounced it the master production of Director Reginald Barker. Its great success is evident in the fact that Mrs. Rinehart is also highly pleased with it. The film ranges in seven reels from domestic trouble and the tragedy of young lovers to ball room scenes of novel splendor and lurid scenes of riot, fire, dynamite and industrial destruction.

"Dangerous Days" is the Goldwyn release for the week of March 14. It combines the qualities of screen presentation notable in Barker's work with the unusual popularity of Mrs. Rinehart's story telling gift, which made "Dangerous Days" as a novel the best seller in forty-nine test cities in America during the past year. The novel was also published serially in "Pictorial Review."

Lawson Butt plays Clayton Spencer; Frank Leigh is Rudolph Klein; Rowland Lee is Graham Spencer; Stanton Heck is Herman Klein; and H. Milton Ross is Dunbar. Mary Roberts Rinehart has provided unusual acting opportunities for her woman characters, interpreted by Barbara Castleton, Ann Forest, Florence Deshon, Pauline Stark and Clarissa Selwynne.

Irene Rich Signs Contract to Appear in Goldwyn Pictures

IRENE RICH, who has played opposite Will Rogers in several of the Goldwyn star's pictures, has just signed a contract which will keep her in Goldwyn productions for a period of years. Miss Rich is now playing the lead opposite Mr. Rogers in "Jes' Call Me Jim," which is being filmed under the direction of Clarence G. Badger at the Culver City studios.

Miss Rich has achieved popularity in the comparatively short time since her picture debut, which took place in 1917. She came directly to the screen from private life, without stage experience, and at once proved her ability to play appealing, heart-interest roles with sympathy and understanding. Her work with Will Rogers has been especially successful, for her natural inclination is toward the type of role required by his pictures, and her interpretations are excellent.

Sidney Olcott Starts Work on Hughes' "Scratch My Back"

PRODUCTION of Rupert Hughes' Goldwyn Eminent Authors picture, "Scratch My Back," has begun under the direction of Sidney Olcott with a scenario prepared by Rupert Hughes and E. T. Lowe, Jr. In the all star cast the four principal players are T. Roy Barnes as Val Romney; Helene Chadwick as Madeline Secor; Lloyd Whitlock as Rodman Loton and Cesare Gravina as Jahoda—a professional artist in decay, with the blood of eleven races, the vices of all, and the virtues of none.

Rupert Hughes is said to have written this comedy directly for the screen and has secured a number of novel and amusing effects that will make it one of the most interesting productions on the Goldwyn list. The story ranges from London and Paris to New York, and from a convent to a dancing school, the opera stage, tenement house and yacht.

Instead of the conventional triangle situation Rupert Hughes has developed a surprising plot that is full of comic possibilities.

Pathe's "Blood Barrier" Is Picture for Real Americans

WHILE not to be released as a propaganda picture, J. Stuart Blackton's next production, "The Blood Barrier," is a picture of America for Americans. It will be released by Pathe on April 11, and already indications are that it will be a worthy successor to "My Husband's Other Wife" and "Respectable by Proxy," which are now enjoying unusual popularity. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are again featured in "The Blood Barrier," and from Pathe reports they give able presentations of their difficult roles.

When Commodore Blackton and the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, author of "The Blood Barrier," discussed the story, the producer told the author that he felt there was abroad in the United States an insidious movement fostered by foreign influences, and that he wished to produce a story that would combat by its own lesson such influences. Out of that conference grew "The Blood Barrier," and while a thrilling play of mystery resulted from the pen of Dr. Brady and Stanley Olmsted, there is a very definite demand that "America be for Americans."

Wants Them to Say "I Went to the New Theatre" Instead of "I Went to a Picture Show"

C. A. LICK, owner of the New Theatre, Fort Smith, Arkansas, is an admirer of the service given by the Statler Hotels. Taking the idea of the Statler Service Code, he issued one in pamphlet form on the New Theatre, putting out over 10,000 copies.

On the title page is the motto, "Life is Service. The one who progresses is the one who gives his fellow-beings a little more—a little better SERVICE."

The talks used to the employes of the Statler system are given to the employes of the New Theatre, with the idea of making little services count so that the patron, on going away from the theatre, instead of saying listlessly, "I went to a picture show," says, "I went to the New Theatre." Such publicity is priceless.

Since Mr. Lick is a printer as well as a picture showman, his pamphlet is attractive and well made up. Exhibitors who have the "superior" theatre to back up such copy as Mr. Lick gives out would do well to consider his idea.

New Style Detective Play Pleases Broadway Audiences

LEROY SCOTT'S "Partners of the Night" was shown at the Strand Theatre last week as the first Eminent Authors' production made in the East and presented to a New York audience. "Partners of the Night" was selected for this distinction because it is a story of New York life; a police drama presented from an unusual angle under the direction of the author and director, Paul Scardon.

Emmett Corrigan's performance as Bradley, chief of detectives, is effective. Mr. Corrigan won his reputation on the legitimate stage and has played many of the great police characters in American drama. The leading woman character of Mary Regan, played by Pinna Nesbit, created a good impression. Others in the cast are William B. Davidson, William Ingersoll, Mario Majeroni, Vincent Coleman and Frank Kingdon.

Heyes to Continue in Serials.

Herbert Heyes, whose playing opposite Ruth Roland in the Pathe serial "The Adventures of Ruth" has attracted the attention of motion picture audiences, has decided to keep up his work in serial films and will appear in the leading role in "Broadway Bab," which is to be Ruth Roland's next episode feature for Pathe.

See Big Interest in "Edgar" Comedies; Working on Third

WITH the first of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" Comedies completed and ready for distribution to exhibitors under the title of "Edgar and Teacher's Pet," and the second two-reel episode undergoing final revision before it is sent to the exchanges, Director E. Mason Hopper, at the Culver City studios, has started shooting the third of the series, which is tentatively called "Little Brother Charlie." The second release carries the name of "Edgar's Hamlet."

"Edgar and Teacher's Pet," which has been shown to many exhibitors at the Goldwyn exchanges, has been hailed as marking a new development in two-reel photoplays. Reports received at the home office assure a great demand for the series that will be carried through twelve episodes dealing with the adventures of Edgar and his young friends.

A unique feature of the stories as written by Mr. Tarkington, and one that has been commented on by many who have seen the initial release, is the success achieved in indicating the thought and emotions of boyhood. Each episode presents a distinct story, but beyond that there is a true reflection of the spirit of childhood.

Civil War Veterans Honor Barrymore.

Mr. Silliman, in presenting the resolution, said: "We will always hold you in remembrance for the noble manner you portrayed the soldiers' duty you were called upon to perform at the time our country and Old Glory were in danger, but was saved by the boys in blue, and such Copperheads as portrayed by you."

Long Runs for Russell Feature.

"The Valley of Tomorrow" bookings are making a record, even for a "Flying A" Western starring William Russell.

The Victory Theatre of Providence, R. I., has booked the picture for a week; Blue Mouse of St. Paul, a week; Alcazar of Chicago, a week; Rialto of Chattanooga, a week; Garrick of Salt Lake City, a week; Astor of Minneapolis, a week; Jewell of San Antonio, a week; White Star and Pastime of Detroit, a week; Lubin Theatre of Cincinnati, a week; Jensen & Von Herberg have lined up this special for extended runs in their chain of theatres in Portland, Tacoma and Butte.

"Slam-Bang Jim" Soon Ready.

"Slam-Bang Jim," another American Special, adapted from "Snap Judgment," is now in the titling stage. The art work introduces some animated titles, which are indicative of the tenor of the drama—a thrilling comedy starting in the conservative East in polite society, and rushing westward to the snappiest, peppiest, fastest sort of adventures. In "Slam-Bang Jim" William Russell has every opportunity in the world to display his athletic prowess.

Tourneur Engages Charles Rosher.

Charles Rosher, who has been doing the camera work for Mary Pickford for some time past, has been engaged by Maurice Tourneur and is now photographing Mr. Tourneur's forthcoming production, "The Pavilion on the Links."

"The Honey Bee" Wins Crowd at Chicago Trade Showing

I NEVER saw a crowd of exhibitors enjoy a picture more than they did that afternoon," said Charles Filkins, manager of the Chicago branch of the American Film Company, referring to his first trade showing of "The Honey Bee."

"When Albert Ray, with his head all tied up, and George Hernandez put over that side show in the box at the prize fight, the exhibitors just sat back and howled. The story was just right for Madame Sylva, and the supporting cast is very strong. They were unanimous in their verdict that it is a wonderfully good picture and bound to go big. Ralph Crocker, of the Star Theatre in Elgin, said it is the best picture that the American has ever put on the screen."

Among the exhibitors were "Jake" Cooper, of the Twentieth Century; John Freundt, of the Claremont; Leslie Sparr, of the Vilage Theatre of Wilmette, and Louis Brekes, of the Lincoln. There will be another trade showing at the Pantheon soon.

"The Honey-Bee" on the Billboards.

"The Honey-Bee" posters are ready for the bilboards and should lay a foundation in public interest which will make the way of the exhibitors easy, announces the American Film Company. Each poster tells a story in a way to attract the attention of even the pre-occupied passer-by. Madame Marguerita Sylva, the celebrated opera singer, is pictured in each case in some dramatic pose in the one-sheet, three-sheet and six-sheet. Another three-sheet shows a few members of the strong supporting cast, namely Nigel Barrie and Albert Ray.

The posters also claim attention through the name of Samuel Merwin, author of "The Honey Bee," which, in the year of its publication, was one of the most popular novels, one of the seven best sellers of the year.

Sylvia Breamer on Way East.

Sylvia Breamer, who will star in Mayflower productions under Sydney A. Franklin, with whom she has a two-year contract, will arrive in Los Angeles from New York the latter part of this week to play the leading role in Robert W. Chambers "Athalie," which will be Franklin's first production under his new Mayflower contract.

Miss Breamer expects to be on the coast six weeks, but announces that she will return to New York between each production. "Athalie" will be Franklin's first screen offering since he directed Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum" and "Heart o' the Hills."

Buffalo Theatre Managers Adopt Near East Orphan.

THE Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association has adopted a Near East Relief orphan, according to an announcement made by Ira M. Mosher, president of the association. The employes of the Palace Theatre contributed almost $200 to the fund. Local theatres co-operated in the drive by showing slides and running trailers and allowing booths in some of the lobbies.

Although the Buffalo despatches do not so state, the Managers' protege will no doubt be trained up into a picture showman, owning a string of theatres and all the franchises in sight.

Anyhow, Buffalo exhibitors are to be complimented on this act of theirs which goes to prove once more that picture showmen are interested in big, humane things.

High Praise for Pathe News.

Following a series of exclusive pictures of national and international events, culminating with a most remarkable "beat" on the recent killing of six persons in a riot before the Lexington, Ky., court house, the Pathe News has received sterling praise from the foremost exhibitors of the United States. Among those who have paid tribute to the Pathe News are S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis; J. J. Parker, of the Majestic, Jensen and Von Herberg's big Portland house; Theodore L. Hayes, general manager of the Finkelstein and Ruben circuit; Sid Grauman, of Los Angeles; Harry Koplar, of the Consolidated Theatres, St. Louis; Harry Watts, manager of the Strand, Omaha; George Clark, manager of the Empress, Des Moines, and Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand, New York.

Bookings on "Blue Pearl" Pass "12:10" for Republic

THE bookers' reports from the various Republic exchanges disclosed the fact that for the first time the bookings of "The Blue Pearl' 'have passed those of "12:10," which has heretofore been the leading Republic release. The new record of "The Blue Pearl," it is said, was especially gratifying to the Republic officials.
